

COMMENTARIES
ON THE LAWS
OF ENGLAND

BOOK I OF THE RIGHTS OF PERSONS

WILLIAM BLACKSTONE

WITH A GENERAL EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION BY WILFRID PREST WITH AN INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND TEXTUAL APPARATUS BY DAVID LEMMINGS

OXFORD

THE OXFORD EDITION OF BLACKSTONE

General Editor
WILFRID PREST

COMMENTARIES ON
THE LAWS OF ENGLAND

The Oxford Edition of Blackstone

General Editor

Wilfrid Prest

Editorial Board

SIR JOHN BAKER, PAUL BRAND, JOSHUA GETZLER, JOHN LANGBEIN, AND STEVEN SHEPPARD

BOOK I: OF THE RIGHTS OF PERSONS

Volume Editor: David Lemmings

BOOK II: OF THE RIGHTS OF THINGS

Volume Editor: Simon Stern

BOOK III: OF PRIVATE WRONGS

Volume Editor: Thomas P. Gallanis

BOOK IV: OF PUBLIC WRONGS

Volume Editor: Ruth Paley

COMMENTARIES ON
THE LAWS OF ENGLAND

BOOK I: OF THE RIGHTS OF PERSONS

WILLIAM BLACKSTONE

WITH AN INTRODUCTION, NOTES, AND TEXTUAL APPARATUS BY DAVID LEMMINGS

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Great Clarendon Street, Oxford, OX2 6DP, United Kingdom

Oxford University Press is a department of the University of Oxford.
It furthers the University's objective of excellence in research, scholarship, and education by publishing worldwide. Oxford is a registered trade mark of Oxford University Press in the UK and in certain other countries

© D. Lemmings (Editor's Introduction, Notes, and Textual Apparatus) 2016
© W. Prest (General Editor's Introduction and Editorial Conventions and Practices) 2016

The moral rights of the author have been asserted

First Edition published in 2016

Impression: 1

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted, in any form or by any means, without the prior permission in writing of Oxford University Press, or as expressly permitted by law, by licence or under terms agreed with the appropriate reprographics rights organization. Enquiries concerning reproduction outside the scope of the above should be sent to the Rights Department, Oxford University Press, at the address above

You must not circulate this work in any other form and you must impose this same condition on any acquirer

Crown copyright material is reproduced under Class Licence Number C01P0000148 with the permission of OPSI and the Queen's Printer for Scotland

Published in the United States of America by Oxford University Press
198 Madison Avenue, New York, NY 10016, United States of America

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data
Data available

Library of Congress Control Number: 2015947706

ISBN 978-0-19876897-5 (hardback)
ISBN 978-0-19960099-1 (paperback)
ISBN 978-0-19960103-5 (hardback set)
ISBN 978-0-19960098-4 (paperback set)

Printed and bound by CPI Group (UK) Ltd, Croydon, CR0 4YY

Links to third party websites are provided by Oxford in good faith and for information only. Oxford disclaims any responsibility for the materials contained in any third party website referenced in this work

Contents

General Editor's Introduction	vii
Acknowledgements	xvi
Editor's Introduction to Book I	xvii
Editorial Conventions and Practices	xliii
Abbreviations	xlvi

Preface	3
Introduction	7
1: On the Study of the Law	9
2: Of the Nature of Laws in General	33
3: Of the Laws of England	48
4: Of the Countries Subject to the Laws of England	68

BOOK I: OF THE RIGHTS OF PERSONS

Chapter 1: Of the Absolute Rights of Individuals	83
Chapter 2: Of the Parliament	98
Chapter 3: Of the King, and his Title	124
Chapter 4: Of the King's Royal Family	142
Chapter 5: Of the Councils Belonging to the King	147
Chapter 6: Of the King's Duties	151
Chapter 7: Of the King's Prerogative	154
Chapter 8: Of the King's Revenue	181
Chapter 9: Of Subordinate Magistrates	217
Chapter 10: Of the People, whether Aliens, Denizens, or Natives	235
Chapter 11: Of the Clergy	242
Chapter 12: Of the Civil State	255
Chapter 13: Of the Military and Maritime States	262
Chapter 14: Of Master and Servant	272
Chapter 15: Of Husband and Wife	279
Chapter 16: Of Parent and Child	288
Chapter 17: Of Guardian and Ward	298
Chapter 18: Of Corporations	303
Varia	317
Table of Cases	381
Table of Statutes	387
Index of Persons and Places	401

General Editor's Introduction

Why do we need a new edition of Blackstone's Commentaries, two and a half centuries after it first appeared? The Commentaries on the Laws of England has remained continuously in print from the 1760s to the present day. There are now nearly 200 recorded English, Irish, and American editions, to say nothing of abridgments, extracts, translations, and other works founded on the Commentaries.<sup>1</sup>

Yet Blackstone's original text—whether in the form of an eighteenth-century rare book, a nineteenth- or twentieth-century reprint heavily embellished with notes and citations to later cases and statutes, the more recent University of Chicago Press facsimile of the first (1765–9) edition, or some electronic version of the above—presents inevitable difficulties to the modern reader. The meticulously drafted sentences and paragraphs, with their occasional allusion, barb, or jest, are no real barrier in themselves; indeed, the power and elegance of its prose is one main reason for the Commentaries' remarkable longevity. (As Harper Lee's character Calpurnia puts it, 'Mr Blackstone wrote fine English.'<sup>2</sup>) But each of the four volumes also includes many words, phrases, and quotations in Latin and Law French, plus some occasional classical Greek and Anglo-Saxon. There are also numerous references to events, institutions, and personages in antiquity and British history of all eras (including the author's own), besides archaic, obsolete, or highly technical words and phrases. Careful reading, a good dictionary, and the internet can all help to some extent. Yet the translation of passages from languages other than English and brief explanatory notes or glosses on more or less obscure names and terms are no less essential steps towards making Blackstone accessible in the twenty-first century than modernization of the original hand-press typography. All this makes it easier to appreciate that Blackstone's Commentaries are something more than a dry legal text, of interest only to antiquarian-minded lawyers and legal historians. For their author was actually compiling a general account of the major economic, political, and social institutions of his time and place, as well as an introduction to its laws and legal structures.

No previous edition of the Commentaries has attempted to identify and incorporate the numerous changes Blackstone himself made to the successive re-issues of his original text, up to and including the ninth (and first posthumous) edition of 1783. While most differences from one impression to the next involve no more than minor variations in the spelling, order, or choice of words, there were also significant shifts of emphasis and meaning, reflecting changes in the law (whether by parliamentary legislation or decisions of the courts), the author's further thoughts, or some combination of the two. Finally, most readers may have little desire or need to immerse themselves in the large mass of scholarship that continues to accumulate around the Commentaries. But the substantial editorial introductions, which place each of Books I–IV within its historical and intellectual context, will aid understanding of what was distinctive about Blackstone's approach to his subject, in terms of the goals he set himself, the manner in which he sought to achieve those ends, and the extent to which he succeeded.

<sup>1</sup> See A. J. Laeuchli, A Bibliographical Catalog of William Blackstone (Buffalo NY, 2015). Books cited were published in London unless otherwise noted.

<sup>2</sup> H. Lee, To Kill a Mocking Bird (New York, 1960; 2002), 142.

The introductions to each of the following volumes have been written by scholars with particular expertise in the subject matter of the book they have edited; this brief general introduction is concerned with the Commentaries as a whole. It outlines why and how Blackstone came to write his masterwork, sketching its immediate reception, further dissemination, and longer-term influence. An account of the conventions and practices adopted in preparing the present edition follows the volume editor's introduction.

Origins

Blackstone's Commentaries are sometimes represented as the handiwork of a failed barrister turned Oxford don, who took to expounding the law in immediate reaction to his lack of success at the bar.<sup>3</sup> But the story is both less straightforward and more interesting than that.

The author of the Commentaries was the third surviving son of a London silk merchant. His father died several months before William's birth on 10 July 1723, leaving an indebted luxury goods business to be run by his mother. She too died when her youngest son was just eleven years old and an academically outstanding scholarship student at London's prestigious Charterhouse School. With the support of a maternal uncle, William went on to win another scholarship to Oxford University's Pembroke College, at the then not unusually tender age of fifteen. A prized competitive fellowship at the much wealthier All Souls College followed, before he had turned twenty-one. While still a voracious reader and book collector, who had already written a treatise on architecture and would soon publish a verse essay in comparative theology, William had by then abandoned his original Arts course, transferring to the Faculty of Law and graduating with a BCL in 1744.

That degree was, of course, in civil or Roman law, since common law, the law of the land, had as yet no place on the curriculum of either English university. So when Blackstone decided to become a barrister, he turned for his professional qualification to one of London's four inns of court. He had already joined the Middle Temple in 1741, thereby beginning to acquire the requisite 'standing', or seniority, for call to the bar and admission to practice. But mere membership of an inn of court had long since ceased to entail any educational or residential obligations. It was not until January 1746 that William moved back to London, commencing his common law studies with a course of private reading: no formal tuition whatever was provided by his inn. Yet his call to the bar came less than a year later, in November 1746. The grossly inadequate state of English legal education, for the deficiencies of which the Commentaries sought to supply a remedy, was something Blackstone had experienced at first hand.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. my own superficial characterization in Albion Ascendant (Oxford, 1998), 199; for a more considered and extensive account, see my William Blackstone: Law and Letters in the Eighteenth Century (Oxford, 2008; 2012).

Little evidence survives of his first attempt to establish himself at the London bar. However, two facts stand out. First, as his brother-in-law and biographer James Clitherow observed, he 'made his Way very slowly', acquiring 'little Notice and little Practice'.<sup>4</sup> Second, All Souls College remained his principal residence—as an orphan, he had no other home. Indeed, by 1750, when he acquired, through mere lapse of time and cash payment, the higher degree of doctor of laws, he was spending around eight months of each year in Oxford, where he had major commitments both as a college administrator and in broader university politics. The second largely explains the first: because he found more interesting things to do in Oxford, Blackstone evidently spent too little time at the law courts or waiting in chambers for clients. Having previously expressed some distaste for 'wrangling courts', it is scarcely surprising that, by 1753, he found his 'Constitution, Inclinations, and a Thing called Principle' incompatible with 'the active Life of Westminster Hall'.<sup>5</sup> There were also intriguing prospects of academic promotion, whether to existing Oxford chairs in history and civil law, or to a new professorship in the common law endowed by the wealthy and ageing alumnus Charles Viner.

Lectures

In June 1753, just short of his thirtieth birthday, Dr Blackstone circulated around the university a printed prospectus advertising a new fee-paying course of 'Lectures on the Laws of England', intended not just for would-be lawyers, but 'such others also, as are desirous to be in some Degree acquainted with the Constitution and Polity of their own Country'.<sup>6</sup> Whatever his shortcomings as counsel at the bar (he was certainly more comfortable on paper than speaking viva voce) and despite a former pupil's later sneer at his 'formal, precise, and affected' delivery, Blackstone's radical project attracted 'a very crowded Class of young Men of the first families, Characters and Hopes'.<sup>7</sup> Next year's prospectus, after mentioning 'the favourable Reception' given to his 'first and imperfect Draught', went on to specify the lecturer's aims:

to lay down a general and comprehensive Plan of the Laws of England; to deduce their History and Antiquities; to select and illustrate their Leading Rules and fundamental Principles; to explain their Reason and Utility; and to compare them frequently, with the Laws of Nature and of other Nations; without dwelling too minutely on the Niceties of Practice, or the more refined Distinctions of particular Cases.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>4</sup> 'Preface, Containing Memoirs of his Life', in [W. Blackstone], Reports of Cases Determined in the Several Courts of Westminster-Hall, from 1746 to 1779, ed. J. Clitherow (1781), i. p. vii.

<sup>5</sup> Prest, Blackstone, 58; Blackstone to Sir Roger Newdigate, 3 July 1753, in The Letters of Sir William Blackstone 1744–1780, ed. W. Prest (2006), 29.

<sup>6</sup> W. S. Holdsworth, A History of English Law (1938), xii. 745.

<sup>7</sup> Clitherow, p. x.

<sup>8</sup> Prest, Blackstone, 115.

In short, Blackstone undertook to show that the common law was not a dark impenetrable jumble of antiquated forms and obscure procedures intelligible only to practitioners, but a rational body of knowledge, whose underlying principles and structures reflected both the nation's history and universal norms. This ambitious agenda was addressed in a sequence of seventy lectures extending over the full academic year. As explained in an accompanying 'Syllabus',<sup>9</sup> these were to be 'divided into four distinct Parts' foreshadowing the four books of the Commentaries: 'Of the Rights of Persons' (public and constitutional law); 'Of the Rights of Property' (land and other property law); 'Of Private Wrongs' (civil remedies, courts, and procedure, including equity); and 'Of Public Wrongs' (criminal law). Indeed, the Commentaries as we have them today are essentially a published version of this lecture course and its sequels, as they were delivered, polished, and revised over the following decade.

In an extended note-form outline of the entire lecture course series, first published in 1756 as An Analysis of the Laws of England, Blackstone recounted his 'Endeavour, to mark out a Plan of the Laws of ENGLAND, so comprehensive, as that every Title might be reduced under some or other of its general Heads, which the Student might afterwards pursue to any Degree of Minuteness; and at the same time so contracted, that the Gentleman might with tolerable Application contemplate and understand the Whole.' That task had required him 'to adopt a Method in many respects totally new', even though he was by no means the first to attempt to 'reduc[e] our Laws to a System'. He thereby acknowledged an intellectual debt to earlier works by the common lawyer Sir Henry Finch and the civilian Thomas Wood, 'for their happy Progress in reducing the Elements of Law from their former Chaos to a regular methodical Science', and above all to Chief Justice Sir Matthew Hale's Analysis of the Law, published posthumously in 1713. Blackstone nevertheless maintained that 'compounding their several Schemes, to extract a new Method of his own' clearly distinguished his approach from the mere imitation of any predecessor.<sup>10</sup> This may be strictly correct. At the same time, in organizing his material Blackstone was also influenced by the basic structure of Justinian's Institutes, the elementary Roman law primer dating from the sixth century AD. That influence was channelled not only via his own reading of Roman law and through the medium of Hale's Analysis, but also possibly in the form of a scheme resembling the structure of the Commentaries devised by Dionysius Gothofredus (1549–1622), a Dutch civil lawyer and editor of Justinian.<sup>11</sup>

Twelve surviving sets of student notes taken at Blackstone's Oxford lectures between 1753–4 and 1766–7 have now been identified, although most do not provide complete coverage of a full academic year, while the earlier note-takers seem to have been more conscientious than those who had the advantage of the Analysis.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Bodl. MS G. A. Oxon. b. 111 (55b).

<sup>10</sup> Analysis, pp. v–viii. For Blackstone's distinctive preoccupation with method, structure and 'juridical logic', see J. M. Finnis, 'Blackstone's Theoretical Intentions', Natural Law Forum, 12 (1967), 163–83.

<sup>11</sup> J. W. Cairns, 'Blackstone, an English Institutor: Legal Literature and the Rise of the Nation State', Oxford Journal of Legal Studies, 4 (1984), 318–60; A. Watson, 'The Structure of Blackstone's Commentaries', Yale Law Journal, 97 (1988), 795–821.

<sup>12</sup> Law Society, London, BLA/V61A (Thomas Bever, 1753–4); British Library, Add. MS 38838 (Thomas Bever, Parts 3–4, 1754); Somerset County Archive and Record Service, DD/WY 183 (Alexander Popham, Parts 1 & 3–4,

These widely scattered texts have yet to be analysed as a group, in comparison both with each other and the printed Commentaries. But it is clear that the basic four-part structure of the lecture course was translated into the four books of the Commentaries, notwithstanding minor changes in arrangement and coverage of the printed chapters when compared to the corresponding lectures. As Oxford lecturer, Blackstone also showed himself considerably more opinionated and outspoken than as author of the Commentaries, for reasons which may have no less to do with changing times and passing years than any sense that what could be said to a small undergraduate audience might be neither proper nor prudent to publish more widely.<sup>13</sup>

Like the lectures, the Analysis—which Blackstone described as ‘exhibit[ing] the Order, and principal Divisions, of his Course... a larger Syllabus, interspersed with a few Definitions and general Rules, to assist the Recollection’—proved highly successful, not least in commercial terms. After its first appearance in 1756, three more editions of 1,000 copies each appeared over the next three years, with another in 1762, a pirated Dublin edition in 1766, and the last in 1771. Besides its buoyant sales, the Analysis anticipated the Commentaries in another way, by including an appendix of sample legal documents to illustrate general points made in the lectures. From its 1758 third edition (the first to bear the author's name on the title page), the Analysis also incorporated Blackstone's first public lecture as Oxford's inaugural Vinerian Professor of the Laws of England. This ‘Discourse on the Study of the Law’, a powerful justification of English common law as an academic subject, worthy of study by would-be lawyers and laymen alike, reappears to introduce the first book of the Commentaries.

The success of the Analysis possibly tempted Blackstone to try his hand at a more specialized pedagogical publication. This brief pamphlet, a Treatise on the Law of Descents in Fee Simple (1759), was avowedly intended to help his Oxford pupils understand the rules governing the transfer of landed property. Of particular interest in the present context is its reprinting, seven years later, as chapters 14 and 15 of Book II of the Commentaries. Paid the dubious compliment of an unauthorized Dublin edition in 1760, and out of print two years after that, the Treatise further demonstrated the existence of a large market for law books from Dr Blackstone's pen. Meanwhile Lord Bute as royal tutor had invited him to present his lectures before the then Prince of Wales, later King George III (who received written copies when Blackstone declined to desert his Oxford classes). Far away on the other side of the Atlantic, word was spreading ‘of a Professor at Oxford’, said to have brought the law's ‘mysterious business to some system’; his ‘Inaugural Oration’ and ‘Analysis’ were 1753–4); University College London, Add. MS 120 (John Wilkinson, 1757–8); Oxfordshire Record Office, JXXVI/a/1 (anonymous, Parts 1 and 4, incomplete, 1757–8); Harvard Law School MS 4175 (anonymous, c. 1761–2); Harvard Law School MS 4196, <http://nrs.harvard.edu/urn-3:HLS.LIBR:11829405> (anonymous, pre-1766, Part 1, lectures 4–11 only); British Library, Additional MS 36093-36101 (John Edwards, 1761–2); All Souls College, Codrington Library, MS 300 (anonymous, 1761–2); Law Society, London, BLA/V61A (anonymous, 1761–2); Queen's College, Oxford, MS 401 (Jeremy Bentham, 1764–5, incomplete); Boston College Law School Library, KD 660 B47 (anonymous, 1765–6); Hampshire Record Office, 21 M57/D33 (anonymous, pre-1766, incomplete). Of the five sets identified by Holdsworth, one (then belonging to Professor Harold Temperley), cannot now be located.

<sup>13</sup> See I. Doolittle, William Blackstone: A Biography (Haslemere, 2001), 81–4.

both ‘much admired,’ according to John Adams, future president of the United States of America, then a young Boston lawyer.<sup>14</sup>

By now Blackstone had resumed legal practice in London, this time with far more success. Greater financial security enabled him to marry the sister of a former All Souls colleague in 1761 and set up house away from Oxford, returning only to deliver his lectures, carefully scheduled not to clash with sessions of the London courts. While still interested in university affairs (not least the operation of the university’s printing and publishing arm), he was increasingly absorbed by domestic life, the demands of clients, and parliamentary business, having been elected to the House of Commons through Bute’s patronage shortly after his marriage. A slump in lecture fees, perhaps due in part to the widening circulation of transcripts taken from students’ notes, with rumours that a version of these would shortly be published in Ireland (outside the reach of English copyright law), precipitated his decision to give a final lecture course in 1765–6 and meanwhile to prepare for the press the first volume of the Commentaries on the Laws of England.

Publication

A bibliophile since his student days, as a reforming ‘delegate’ (or board member) of Oxford’s university printing house, Blackstone had also acquired an extensive knowledge of the book trade.<sup>15</sup> So it is hardly surprising that, like his previous Analysis and the Treatise, the first editions of the Commentaries were self-published. Printed for Blackstone at the university’s Clarendon Press as ‘author’s books’, while he bore the risk of financing his own publications, he also kept whatever profits resulted from their sales—which in this case were enormous. As they appeared over five years from November 1765, each of the four volumes of the Commentaries proved an immediate best-seller. The initial 1,500 copies of Book I were exhausted within three months; second and third editions of Books I and II came out even before the publication of Books III and IV, in 1768 and 1769 respectively. The fourth edition of 1770 was the last in which Blackstone held a direct financial interest, since he sold his copyright in 1772 to a consortium of bookseller-publishers for the huge sum of £2,000. This brought his proceeds from the Commentaries to a then truly stupendous total of £14,488, the equivalent of at least £1.3 million in twenty-first-century money values. The Commentaries went on to earn their new owners a further £7,000 over the next fifteen years, while Blackstone continued to correct and update further editions of his book (each now issued with a print run of 3,000 copies) until his death in February 1780.<sup>16</sup>

<sup>14</sup> Letter Book of John Watts, ed. D. C. Barck (New York, 1928), 13; The Diary and Autobiography of John Adams, ed. L. H. Butterfield (Cambridge MA, 1961), iii, 285.

<sup>15</sup> M. Kilburn, ‘The Blackstone Reforms 1755–1780’, in I. Gadd (ed.), The History of Oxford University Press. i: Beginnings to 1780 (Oxford, 2013), 139–57.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. V. Feola, ‘Law’, in History of Oxford University Press, i, 467.

The ninth (and first posthumous) edition appeared three years later, under the editorship of the energetic elderly clergyman Dr Richard Burn, whose treatise on the office of justice of the peace had earlier been singled out for particular praise by Blackstone (see I. 343). Burn claimed to have 'preserve[d] the author's text intire', incorporating Blackstone's own amendments since the eighth (1778) edition 'from a corrected copy in his own handwriting' which could be 'seen at Mr Cadell's [the publisher's] office in the Strand', while confining himself to noting changes made by new statutes and 'some other few necessary observations' (see p. xxx below). Unfortunately, there is now no sure way to distinguish Burn's contributions from those of Blackstone, except where textual changes in the 1783 edition clearly refer to events which occurred only after Blackstone's lifetime.

Despite soaring sales and the plaudits of reviewers, all four books of the Commentaries provoked some immediate negative responses. Among the critics were Protestant Dissenters, Roman Catholics, Irish patriots, the young Edward Gibbon (although he also found much to praise), and most notably the still younger Jeremy Bentham, whose anonymously published Fragment on Government (1776) depicted his former Oxford lecturer as a 'bigotted or corrupt defender of the works of power', a confused apologist for England's current unreformed legal and political establishment.<sup>17</sup> Although Blackstone's parliamentary identification with the opponents of John Wilkes, followed by his own subsequent elevation to the judiciary in 1770, had seen him publicly branded a court toady and ministerial tool in sections of the London press, Bentham's attack may not have made much immediate impression. Over the long term, however, the caricature of 'everything-is-as-it-should-be' Blackstone proved enormously influential, especially in conjunction with Bentham's radical critique of all existing institutions against a utilitarian criterion, as against Blackstone's pragmatic tendency to endorse most (if by no means all) of what had supposedly stood the test of time.<sup>18</sup> The legal profession, much maligned by Bentham, provided an opposite line of attack; some practising common lawyers decried Blackstone's Commentaries as excessively abstract, general, and superficial, hence misleading to students and useless to practitioners.<sup>19</sup>

Yet demand for the Commentaries was little affected by these various caveats, cavils, and complaints. While law students of various kinds doubtless constituted the major market, abridged versions were prepared for use in schools, and the education of young ladies.<sup>20</sup> When sweeping legislative change in the 1830s made much of Blackstone's original text obsolete, a radical redrafting produced H. S. Stephen's New Commentaries on the Laws of England (partly founded on Blackstone), first published under the Butterworth imprint in 1841, with twenty subsequent editions down to

<sup>17</sup> J. Bentham, A Fragment on Government (1766), ed. J. H. Burns and H. L. A. Hart (Cambridge, 1988), 9.

<sup>18</sup> Bentham, Fragment, 10, 18.

<sup>19</sup> M. Lobban, The Common Law and English Jurisprudence 1760–1850 (Oxford, 1991), 47–9.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. V. Wanostracht, The British Constitution, or an Epitome of Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England for the Use of Schools (1823); [J. Eardley-Wilmot], An Abridgement of Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, in a Series of Letters from a Father to his Daughter, chiefly intended for the Use and Advancement of Female Education (1822, 1853, 1855); S. Warren, Select Extracts from Blackstone's Commentaries, carefully adapted to the Use of Schools and Young Persons (1836, 1837, 1855, 1856).

1950. The classic status of the Commentaries was definitively signalled by the advent in 1844 of the ‘Comic Blackstones’, gentle burlesques or parodies of the original text, first published as serials in the magazine Punch.

The influence of the Commentaries was still greater outside England, above all in North America. While Blackstone had no sympathy with the rebellious colonists of the fledgling United States, his personal politics were largely irrelevant to the general acceptance of his conception of the nature of law in general and the common law in particular, or its adaptation to American conditions. As in England, the Commentaries became the standard beginner’s introduction to legal studies, and Blackstone was soon Americanized. St George Tucker’s five-volume edition, Blackstone’s Commentaries: with Notes of Reference to the Constitution and Laws of the Federal Government of the United States; and of the Commonwealth of Virginia, inaugurated this new genre in 1803. Even those who rejected Blackstone’s anti-republican emphasis on parliamentary omnipotence, like James Wilson, Supreme Court justice and founding professor of law at the College of Philadelphia, had no difficulty in accepting the validity of Blackstone’s exposition of English common law as founded on custom, divine law, and the law of nature, hence providing an entirely appropriate legal foundation for the incipient USA.<sup>21</sup>

During the course of the nineteenth century, numerous updated and Americanized editions, abridgments, and other student guides ensured the continued iconic status of the Commentaries. Although Blackstone no longer dominated legal education after the casebook method had spread from Harvard Law School in the 1870s, his work remains authoritative; indeed, in recent decades, the Commentaries has been cited in signed opinions of the US Supreme Court more often than at any time since the beginning of the nineteenth century.<sup>22</sup> Canada also saw several local editions of Blackstone ‘adapted to the present state of the law in Ontario’, while Blackstone became ‘the first point of reference for basic principles of the British constitution and the criminal laws of England’ in the mixed civil- and common-law jurisdiction of Quebec. As both legal authority and elementary law textbook, Blackstone’s influence spread with the British imperial diaspora to Asia, Africa, and the South Pacific.<sup>23</sup>

It is important to recognize that this influence was not confined to lawyers and law students. Blackstone had fully understood that the viability of his original lecture plan depended on attracting a fee-paying audience from the entire Oxford student population, not just a small minority of would-be common lawyers. So while the word ‘constitution’ appears neither on the title page nor in the general index to the Commentaries, the institutions and practices of British government are a major concern of the work as a whole, as they had been in the Oxford lectures. Given Britain’s economic prosperity and geopolitical standing, this was understandably a subject of great interest, both in Blackstone's own lifetime and much later. It attracted the attention not only of the British themselves, both at home and abroad, but also of those who sought encouragement, inspiration, or instruction from the British example. Hence the multiple translations of Blackstone, especially Book I of the Commentaries, into French, German, Italian, Polish, and Russian, the latter commissioned by the self-consciously enlightened Empress Catherine II.<sup>24</sup> During the nineteenth and early twentieth century, liberal Indian intellectuals were as familiar with the works of Blackstone as those of Locke or Hume.<sup>25</sup> In Japan, Fukuzawa Yukichi, the foremost interpreter and popularizer of Western ideas and institutions during the Meiji restoration, translated the first chapter of Book I, 'Of the Absolute Rights of Individuals', a difficult task because it involved concepts 'for which there had been no idea even remotely equivalent in the old Confucian philosophy'.<sup>26</sup> So we should not think of Blackstone's Commentaries as no more or less than a law book, or a book for lawyers only. On the contrary, it has made a significant contribution to the global dissemination of modern constitutional ideas about human rights and the state's duty to its citizens.

<sup>21</sup> See E. H. Pearson, Remaking Custom: Law and Identity in the Early American Republic (Charlottesville VA, 2011), 2–5, 39–42, 186–7.

<sup>22</sup> J. Allen, ‘Reading Blackstone in the Twenty-First Century and the Twenty-First Century through Blackstone’, in W. Prest (ed.), Re-interpreting Blackstone’s Commentaries (Oxford, 2014), 218.

<sup>23</sup> See Prest (ed.), Re-Interpreting Blackstone’s Commentaries: chapters by J. W. Cairns, M. Morin, and W. Prest, 73–124, 146–65.

More than a handful of people have worked over more than seven years to produce this new edition of an old book. Some might find such an expenditure of energy, time, and money hard to justify, at a time when 'research' is increasingly defined in terms of the acquisition of new knowledge. But the preservation, re-interpretation, and enhanced understanding of previously existing knowledge—'scholarship' as traditionally practised—is equally necessary and worthwhile. Modern readers, including those without a specialist interest in eighteenth-century history or law, can now more readily discover for themselves what Blackstone has to offer. Besides his classic exposition of the rules and structures of public and private law, there is a remarkable literary achievement, in the arrangement, ordering, and presentation of large masses of information with ease, clarity, and often considerable subtlety; for the Commentaries still 'live by their style'.<sup>27</sup> Second, a rich assortment of miscellaneous facts, opinions, and stories, from kings and queens, lords and vassals, clocks and trial by combat, the language of the law and the workings of the post office, all presented within a historical framework sensitive to elements of both change and continuity. Lastly, while some of Blackstone's attitudes and values trouble modern sensibilities, a similar sensitivity to the time and place in which the Commentaries were written will help readers better appreciate its author's modest, pragmatic, and humanistic approach to the conceptualization of society and social relations.

Wilfrid Prest

<sup>24</sup> M. Raeff, 'The Empress and the Vinerian Professor: Catherine II's Projects of Government Reforms and Blackstone's Commentaries', Oxford Slavonic Papers, n.s. 7 (1974), 18–42.

<sup>25</sup> C. A. Bayly, Recovering Liberties: Indian Thought in the Age of Liberalism and Empire (Cambridge, 2012), 184–6.

<sup>26</sup> C. Blacker, The Japanese Enlightenment (Cambridge, 1964), 104; A. Macfarlane, Yukichi Fukuzawa and the Making of the Modern World (Basingstoke, 2002), 40–1; A. M. Craig, Civilization and Enlightenment: The Early Thought of Fukuzawa Yukichi (Cambridge MA, 2009), 30–1, 68, 138.

<sup>27</sup> A. V. Dicey, 'Blackstone's Commentaries', Cambridge Law Journal, 4 (1932), 294.

Acknowledgements

A great many people have supported this project in many different ways. The original impetus to turn a vague notion into something more specific came from conversations with Ian Doolittle and John Langbein in 2007. Subsequent discussions culminated in a planning meeting, hosted appropriately enough by All Souls College, at which the basic elements of the new edition were agreed upon and an advisory committee instituted: thereafter its members have continued to provide invaluable expertise (bibliographic, legal, and linguistic), together with much appreciated moral support. Financial assistance, for which I am also exceedingly grateful, has come from the American Society for Legal History, the Australian Research Council (DP120101749), and the William Nelson Cromwell Foundation; particular thanks are due to Conrad Harper and John Gordan III for recognizing the importance of making this edition as widely available as possible. It would not have come to pass at all without the digital files generously supplied by Thompson Cengage, now Gale-Cengage Learning, and the technical wizardry of the 'Factotum' team at Monash University, particularly David Squire and Dmitri Nikulin, the latter now with Google Corporation.

Since work on this new edition has inevitably benefited from my previous research on Blackstone's life, the list of archivists, historians, librarians, and other scholars to whom thanks are due could easily extend over several pages. While hopeful that all those who have contributed in various ways will accept this token of appreciation, I must mention the staff of the Barr Smith Library and Sir John Salmond Law Library of the University of Adelaide (notably Cheryl Hoskin, Margaret Hosking, Peter Jacobs, and Margaret Priwer) and their counterparts at the library of Balliol College, Oxford, the Australian National Library, the Bodleian Library, the British Library, the Codrington Library (Gaye Morgan and Norma Aubertin-Potter), the Harvard Law School Library, the library of the Law Society, London, Somerset County Archive and Record Service, and the Lillian Goldman Law Library of Yale University (Mike Widener and the late Morris Cohen). Nor should Gillian Dooley's generous assistance with a copy of the eighth edition of the Commentaries from Flinders University's Library go unmentioned.

In a co-operative venture of this kind, much inevitably depends on one's colleagues and co-workers. The four volume editors have borne with fortitude my various requests and demands, even those which occasionally contradicted some that had come before. Perhaps it was fortunate that none of us quite realized the magnitude of the task we had set ourselves until we were too far along to turn back. Two other joint venturers, Alex Flach and Natasha Flemming of Oxford University Press, must also have wondered at several points whether and when the four volumes of this book would ever see the light; copy-editing by Malcolm Todd and proofreading by Ela Kotkowska, and the expert oversight of Caroline Hawley, were crucial in the final stages of production. That it has finally appeared is something else for which, once again, I thank Sabina, sine qua non.

Wilfrid Prest

Editor's Introduction to Book I

Aims and Claims, Organization and Achievement

In the sustained lecturing and publishing project that produced his magnum opus Blackstone had three broad aims. First, he intended to establish the political importance of studying English law for politely educated young gentlemen, including those laymen who were likely to become justices of the peace and members of parliament, as well as professional barristers and judges. Secondly, he hoped to demonstrate that English law could be explained as an intellectually respectable system rivalling Roman law, by contrast with the prevailing impression, that it was an uncouth, irrational, and merely practical assemblage of rules and remedies accumulated over the centuries.<sup>1</sup> Finally, and most importantly for this first volume, which mainly addressed what we would today call constitutional law, he wanted to demonstrate that Britain's arrangements for government represented the achievement of a unique historical process by which 'political or civil liberty is the very end and scope of the constitution' (I. 11).<sup>2</sup>

Statement of claims

The preface to Book I and the reprinted text of the inaugural lecture 'On the Study of the Law' (delivered in 1758 and subsequently published as a pamphlet) were intended to persuade the public of the importance of the Vinerian/Blackstonian project for studying English law as a 'liberal science' (I. 3). By this term Blackstone meant a form of study suitable for a free man—literally a gentleman.<sup>3</sup> For modern readers the phrase also connects with the growth of liberal philosophy around natural rights, and Book I of the Commentaries acknowledged debts to the works of John Locke, as well as the historical-sociological approach to English liberty of Montesquieu. So, besides making a claim for its intellectual importance in the tradition of natural law, there are early hints of classical republicanism: Blackstone suggests that gentlemen should participate in government because it is their public duty to administer the law; otherwise, as he explains later in Book I, the 'virtue' of the state might succumb to corruption (I. 40, 113, 215–16).<sup>4</sup> More specifically, acquisition of historical and philosophical knowledge about the laws of England was the responsibility of gentlemen, to enable them properly to discharge their obligations as JPs and MPs. He therefore signalled the potential of his complex programme for jurisprudential

<sup>1</sup> See D. Lemmings, 'Blackstone and Law Reform by Education: Preparation for the Bar and Lawyerly Culture in Eighteenth-Century England', Law and History Review, 16 (1998), 211–55; D. Lemmings, Professors of the Law: Barristers and English Legal Culture in the Eighteenth Century (Oxford, 2000), esp. ch. 4.

<sup>2</sup> After Montesquieu, De l'Esprit des Lois (1748).

<sup>3</sup> See OED under liberal: 'worthy of or suitable for a person of noble birth or superior social status'; and S. Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language (1755), under liberal: 'Becoming a gentleman'.

<sup>4</sup> Classical republicanism emphasizes the importance of active participation by independent citizens. For the adaptation of this political theory in the Anglo-American context see J. G. A. Pocock, The Machiavellian Moment: Florentine Political thought in the Atlantic Republican Tradition (Princeton NJ, 1975).

education to serve as a device for liberal and gradualist law reform, exemplified here by the judicial work of Lord Mansfield, lord chief justice of England from 1756 to 1788, but also recommended to future legislators, as well as lawyers (I. 3; also III. 177–8, IV. 285).<sup>5</sup>

According to Blackstone's inaugural lecture, patriotic Englishmen should recognize the contemporary elite's relative ignorance of common law as a serious problem, because the survival of England's constitution of freedom was by no means assured into the future. Two threats were imminent. First, there was the folly of what is today called hyperlexis, or the tendency to resort to law-making as a solution for every problem.<sup>6</sup> The second and connected danger, only hinted at in the inaugural lecture, was of creeping constitutional corruption. This was clearly identified later in Book I with the expansion of 'servile influence' created by the progress of modern state finance and standing armies: officers and contractors who were constitutionally unfree dependents of government threatened to overcome the virtue of the electorate and the parliaments they chose (I. 215–16).

As epitomized by Oxford's new Vinerian foundation, the antidote to these contemporary constitutional and political maladies was to integrate the study of common law into the normal university curriculum, thereby educating gentlemen and lawyers in the patriotic tradition of English constitutional history, ensuring that they would develop the virtuous sentiments necessary to protect its libertarian spirit. Indeed, Blackstone's appeal to his auditors and readers was consistently imbued with the language of patriotic emotion. The sons of the gentry who attended Oxford and Cambridge were reminded by the Vinerian Professor that as potential future MPs they were 'the guardians of the English constitution ... bound ... to transmit that constitution and those laws to their posterity' (I. 12–13).<sup>7</sup> Future barristers and judges were likewise encouraged to undergo a preparatory course of university education because Oxford and Cambridge would inculcate 'affectionate loyalty to the king, a zeal for liberty and the constitution, a sense of real honour, and well grounded principles of religion', all of which were qualities 'of the heart' necessary to form 'a truly valuable English lawyer' (I. 29). By providing the funds which made the Vinerian chair possible, Charles Viner had certainly fulfilled his patriotic duty, and Blackstone concluded his inaugural lecture on a note of pathos, by drawing attention to his patron's heroic self-sacrifice, as 'worn out in the duties of his calling' Viner 'consecrated' his wealth to educating young men 'in the wisdom of our civil polity' (I. 31–2).

Organization and achievement

The inaugural lecture was mainly devoted to establishing the libertarian spirit of English law as the core of the nation's constitutional history, and to proving the necessity of legal-historical education for preserving the virtue of English government. Indeed, it is arguable that, following Montesquieu, historical exegesis of the continuous thread or spirit in the development of freedom under common law was Blackstone's guiding principle for all four books of the Commentaries, and a discontinuous narrative along those lines certainly informed the substance of Book I.<sup>8</sup> Thus, after the second introductory essay discussing the natural law foundations of municipal law, the origins and principal types of civil government, and the nature of sovereignty (Introduction section 2), the remainder of the Introduction (sections 3 and 4) and Chapters 1–18 aim to provide a clear historical exposition and justification of the arrangements for government (i.e. the rules governing the relations of king, parliament, and people) which applied in England and its dependencies, demonstrating their value in constituting a liberal, balanced polity which guaranteed the freedoms of English men and women. The Commentaries' bedrock reliance on a historical analysis of law revealing the evolving liberal spirit of the polity is substantially derived from the precedent of Montesquieu's De l'Esprit des Lois, but in accordance with Blackstone's Analysis of the Laws of England (1756), these subjects are considered under the general heading 'Of the Rights of Persons.'<sup>9</sup> Of course, it should also be noted that the main body of the text was written in the 1750s as the original Oxford lecture course, and it takes a broadly Tory perspective on the 'virtue and corruption' politics of George II's reign.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Cf. P. O. Carrese, The Cloaking of Power: Montesquieu, Blackstone and the Rise of Judicial Activism (Chicago, 2003), 115, 162–6.

<sup>6</sup> B. Manning, 'Hyperlexis: Our National Disease', Northwestern Univ. Law Review, 71 (1976–7), 767–82, esp. 772–3. Manning defines 'hyperlexis' as 'America's national disease—the pathological condition caused by an overactive law-making gland' (p. 767).

<sup>7</sup> See also I. 141; IV. 285.

Blackstone's project for instructing the élite in the patriotic virtues and historical rationality of the English constitution depended on the Commentaries' readability as a coherent and easily intelligible primer suitable for the sensibilities of liberally educated English gentlemen (see I. 9–10, 15, 24–5, 83). As he pointed out in his inaugural lecture, quoting Sir John Fortescue's advice to the Lancastrian heir to the throne in the fifteenth century, his task consisted in 'tracing out the originals and as it were the elements of the law', meaning an extended explication of its historical continuity and enduring principles, as they conduced to the liberties and happiness of the English people (I. 30).<sup>11</sup> This account promised to be both 'so comprehensive, as that every Title might be reduced under some or other of its general Heads' and also 'so contracted', that it would be easily digestible for the non-specialist, as well as those who intended to practise law.<sup>12</sup> How did it turn out?

Generally, Book I is very clearly written and methodically constructed according to the 'Rights of Persons' (i.e. legal rights and duties relating to individuals and institutions) scheme prefigured in Blackstone's Analysis. Derived as it was from Roman law, via the seventeenth-century jurist Sir Matthew Hale's prototypical Analysis of the

<sup>8</sup> Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 113–14.

<sup>9</sup> See Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 89–90, 123.

<sup>10</sup> R. Willman, 'The Politics of Blackstone's Commentaries: Whig or Tory?' in G. J. Schochet (ed.), Empire and Revolutions (Washington DC, 1993), 279–302. For the 'virtue and corruption' politics of the period, by which the ideal of the virtuous landed citizen was compared with the Whig government's allegedly corrupt dependence on patronage and commercial interests, see J. G. A. Pocock, Virtue, Commerce and History (Cambridge, 1985), esp. 48, 239–41.

<sup>11</sup> See J. Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliae (1468–71, 1st printed edn, 1545–6).

<sup>12</sup> [Blackstone], Analysis, p. iv.

Common Laws of England, and reflecting the traditional association between powers under law and personal status, this scheme allowed for the separate treatment of particular species of laws associated with the rights and duties of magistrates (ranging from the king to the overseers of the poor), and those relating to 'the people' (encompassing both the native-born and resident foreigners, the clergy, the military, and the navy). The sections on 'the people' also addressed the legal regulation of crucial private social relationships, such as those of master and servant, husband and wife, parent and child, and guardian and ward. Finally, there is additionally an interesting chapter outlining the law relating to corporations, and although this appears somewhat tacked on to the end of the book, its placement under 'persons' follows Hale's Analysis.<sup>13</sup>

It is interesting to note that in the original edition Blackstone took 235 pages to discuss the rights and privileges of the king and other magistrates and only 100 pages (pp. 235–302) to discuss legal duties and powers relating to ordinary people. Did this reflect his interests, or the relative proportions of English law? I would argue that it maps the narrative essence of his project. Although organized under a relatively abstract analytical framework and informed by a complex and dialectical synthesis of natural law precepts, common law tradition, and contemporary legal positivism, Book I of the Commentaries is much more than the sum of its parts. Indeed, by explicating the historical context of the English constitution Blackstone constructed an affecting epic story about liberty under law ultimately triumphing over 'unconstitutional oppressions'. These were usually associated with the royal prerogative and the absolutist style of monarchy favoured by Roman law, but occasionally they were also identified with the threat of a 'tyrannical' parliament (I. 103, 159). Admittedly in Book I the dramatic story of English liberty is generally expressed in pointillist style, but the flashes of patriotic colouring are relatively continuous through the important chapters relating to the rights of individuals, parliament, and the king; and of course the full epic is re-told in joined-up form by the final chapter of Book IV, under the heading 'Of the Rise, Progress and gradual Improvement of the Laws of England'.<sup>14</sup> Crucially, however, Blackstone was at pains to suggest the constitution of liberty that had been so painfully constructed was not guaranteed to be a permanent fixture. As Willman has pointed out, for Blackstone 'progress' included substantial regressions, as well as advances; and the dramatic power of the narrative is materially enhanced by hints and warnings that, without prudential human intervention, the constitutional achievements of the later seventeenth century might well be reversed by corrupt use of the modern powers associated with the king in parliament.<sup>15</sup>

Certainly, as promised at the start, the text of Book I provides a clear and elegant historical account of the origins and development of the constitution, as informed by medieval common law, tested against the laws of nature, and compared with theory and practice in civil law jurisdictions (I. 30). But it is also a deft exercise in appealing to 'rational emotion', or, adapting the language of political science, 'constitutional patriotism', as a means of persuading readers to identify affectively with the abiding virtues of the common law tradition.<sup>16</sup> It is true that the constitution is glossed in neo-Newtonian terms as a balanced 'machine of government', but as is appropriate for successful pedagogy, Blackstone's style consistently appeals to the 'feelings of humanity' he identifies as the driving force of freedom (I. 104, 159).<sup>17</sup> Thus affective inflections serve to humanize his more metaphysical comments about liberty informing the consistent, if contested, development of English law.<sup>18</sup> In accordance with Blackstone's political objectives, this epic human story is consistently related to the theme of maximizing civil liberty and resisting attempts at oppression from above (i.e. from the monarch), anarchy from below (exemplified by the radicalism and parliamentary tyranny of the 1640s and 1650s), and creeping corruption from within (identified with the contemporary influence of the government in parliament and in summary judicial proceedings). Again, the principal emphasis is on the uniquely English 'spirit of liberty' which Blackstone argued had animated the constitution over the centuries since Saxon times and, following the regression into 'slavery' of the Norman conquest, ultimately secured the personal rights and liberties of Englishmen, most visibly in landmark legislative settlements such as Magna Carta and its re-issues, the Petition of Right, the 1679 Habeas Corpus Act (described as 'that second magna carta, and stable bulwark of our liberties'), the Bill of Rights, and the Act of Settlement (I. 86–7, 91–2, 93).

<sup>13</sup> [M. Hale,] The Analysis of the Law: Being a Scheme, or Abstract, of the Several Titles and Partitions of the Law of England, Digested into Method (1713), 2.

<sup>14</sup> See Johnson's definition of the epic, which 'relates some great event in the most affecting manner': K. Simonsuuri, Homer's Original Genius: Eighteenth-century Notions of the Early Greek Epic (1688–1798) (Cambridge, 1979), 27, 86. Extended and heroic warfare against an alien tribe was an essential feature: I. Watt, The Rise of the Novel: Studies in Defoe, Richardson and Fielding (1957), 242–3.

<sup>15</sup> Willman, 'Politics of Blackstone's Commentaries', 283–5; I. 97, 107, 117–18, 122–3, 159, 215–16.

Like every good epic, this story features heroes, exemplified here by the great law-maker Alfred, and the 'English Justinian' Edward I; and also identifies villains, most obviously the Normans, the pre-Reformation clergy, and the actual or would-be autocrats Henry VIII and James II (I. 10, 22, 49–51, 79–80, 99, 134, 137–8, 145, 151, 159, 161, 174, 183–4, 234, 263).<sup>19</sup> But just as there are impersonal evils, such as Norman jurisprudence generally, with its Law French (stigmatized as 'a badge ... of conquest'), and the medieval laws relating to forests and game ('nobody would now wish to see them again revived'), the abiding hero of the Commentaries is English law itself (I. 45, 120, 186). The inspiring narrative of liberty under law is closely associated with the endurance and overriding legitimacy of common law, legitimate because it was based on popular consent, as proven 'by long and immemorial usage and ... universal reception throughout the kingdom', and found by the courts to be consistent with reason and justice (I. 48, 52–3, 55). Indeed the foundational status of rules derived from common law is frequently compared with the marginal role of law-making by statute, which is presented as potentially dangerous, in so far as it sometimes <sup>16</sup> Cf. S. Stern, 'Blackstone's Legal Actors: The Passions of a Rational Jurist', in N. Johnson (ed.), Impassioned Jurisprudence: Law, Literature and Emotion, 1760–1841 (Lewisberg PA, 2015), 1–19. See also 'Symposium: Constitutional Patriotism', International Journal of Constitutional Law, 6 (2008), 67–152.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. A. V. Dicey, 'Blackstone's Commentaries', Cambridge Law Journal, 4 (1932), 296.

<sup>18</sup> e.g. I. 86 (on the spirit of liberty and the legal repugnance of slave-owning), 97 (on the rights and liberties of Englishmen).

<sup>19</sup> Edward Gibbon noticed the heroic strain of The Commentaries too (see BL, Add. MS 34,412, f. 220: Edward Gibbon's abstract of Blackstone's Commentaries, Book I).

deviated from the guiding principles of the common law tradition (I. 50–1, 69). Thus, according to Blackstone, statutory breaches in common law were invariably regretted later, when ‘the wisdom of the rule hath in the end appeared from the inconveniences that have followed the innovation.’<sup>20</sup>

As A. V. Dicey remarked, by teaching law according to a ‘historical method’, the Commentaries risked losing students ‘in the mazes of pedantic antiquarianism.’<sup>21</sup> Like other critics, moreover, Dicey recognized that a ‘worshipper of the Common Law’ who provided a patriotic history of English law as the story of liberty overcoming oppression was liable to magnify the positive features of contemporary law and the administration of justice at the expense of their flaws. Indeed, he commented that Blackstone’s general veneration for the English constitution ultimately bordered on ‘idolatry.’<sup>22</sup> This strain of criticism is normally associated with Jeremy Bentham, who had attended Blackstone’s Oxford lectures as a student. Bentham famously condemned the Commentaries and blasted their author as ‘everything-as-it-should-be Blackstone’, thereby suggesting that he was indefatigably opposed to ‘reformation’ of the ‘moral world’, despite the contemporary fashion for ‘discovery and improvement’ in the ‘natural world.’<sup>23</sup> In modern parlance, he accused Blackstone of being against enlightened reform, and serving as an apologist for the substantial defects in the law.<sup>24</sup> He also noted that a principal reason for this ‘hydrophobia of innovation’ was the author’s belief in Christian scripture as a principal source of natural law: a limitation which meant that rather than assessing law and government by the principle of utility, he followed ‘the beckoning of the priest’, thereby tending towards a conservative doctrine of resistance to unjust laws which was more appropriate to Jesuitical traditions than an age of reason and Enlightenment.<sup>25</sup>

It is true that Blackstone took a conservative approach to current law. For example, in discussing the need for judicial decisions to follow precedents and customary rules he insisted generally on ‘deference to former times’ (I. 53). Unlike Bentham, he also seemed to support a restrictive interpretation of free speech, and implicitly endorsed the deployment of prosecutions for seditious libel.<sup>26</sup> The Commentaries’ general recommendations for law reform were relatively modest: confined to ‘improving its method, retrenching its superfluities, and reconciling the little contrarieties, which the practice of many centuries will necessarily create in any human system’ (I. 27). Edward Gibbon had noticed Blackstone’s ‘pious’ approach to contemporary law in his analysis of Book I, and the author himself later admitted that he

<sup>20</sup> I. 52–3. For a more general discussion of contemporary attitudes towards statutes see D. Lieberman, The Province of Legislation Determined: Legal Theory in Eighteenth-century Britain (Cambridge, 1989).

<sup>21</sup> Dicey, ‘Blackstone’s Commentaries’, 294, 296.

<sup>22</sup> Dicey, ‘Blackstone’s Commentaries’, 289, 292–3.

<sup>23</sup> See The Works of Jeremy Bentham, ed. J. Bowring (Edinburgh, 1838–43), ii. 443 (The Book of Fallacies); also J. Bentham, A Fragment on Government (1776), in J. H. Burns and H. L. A. Hart (eds.), A Comment on the Commentaries and A Fragment on Government, (Oxford, 1977), 393, 400, 407; and A Comment on the Commentaries, in Burns and Hart (eds.), A Comment on the Commentaries and A Fragment on Government, 13. Cf. IV. 32.

<sup>24</sup> See J. H. Burns, ‘Bentham and Blackstone: A Lifetime’s Dialectic’, in Schochet (ed.), Empire and Revolutions, 261–78.

<sup>25</sup> Comment, 346. See also Fragment, 482–3.

<sup>26</sup> See I. 154–5, 160; cf. Fragment, 485.

generally avoided pointing out modern 'deviations and corruptions, as length of time and a loose state of national morals have too great a tendency to produce'.<sup>27</sup> Indeed, he has been accused of deliberately perpetuating 'myths' about the clarity and stability of substantive law, and his account was generally formalist, rather than realistic, in the sense that his text represented the formal relations and structures of the common law courts and political institutions, rather than the ways they operated in practice.<sup>28</sup> In his criticisms of the Commentaries Bentham was selective and more than a little unfair, however; and it is clear that Blackstone was not opposed to careful law reform.<sup>29</sup> Rather, he was against the proliferation of legislation by MPs ignorant of common law who had lost sight of its precious freight of liberty, and he was clearly nervous about the growth in the power of government that had occurred under Walpole and the Pelhams (I. 107, 215–16).<sup>30</sup> Yet he favoured incremental liberal reform as an appropriate function of those learned in the law; noted that the common law was a compound of several nations' customs, 'thereby in all probability improving the texture and wisdom of the whole'; and cited Bacon's proposals for reform approvingly (I. 27, 48–9).<sup>31</sup>

Book I of the Commentaries also manifests progressive attitudes towards public policy that infer the desirability of reform in particular areas of government. For example, Blackstone admitted that the arrangements for the representation of the people in parliament were hardly 'perfect', and he complained particularly about the lax implementation of laws against electoral bribery; he also hinted that he favoured extension of the franchise (I. 113). He roundly condemned the post-1660 laws of settlement as 'inadequate to the purposes they are designed for', attributed their failure to deviation from the principles of local government that informed the common law from the time of Alfred, and blasted the 'miserable shifts and lame expedients' that contemporary statutes had introduced to deal with the unemployed poor (I. 234). Additionally, critical comments on penal transportation and the need for 'proportion' in punishment together anticipate his remarkably wholesale criticisms in Book IV about 'the multitude of sanguinary laws' in eighteenth-century England as 'a kind of quackery in government' (I. 93, 204; IV. 17). If Bentham had paid more attention to these and other critical passages, his characterization of Blackstone as an unreflecting apologist for the established order in constitutional and jurisprudential affairs would have been unsustainable. Indeed, the Commentaries included 'touches of Augustan satire' subtly designed to signal imperfections in the practice of government.<sup>32</sup>

Despite his overall critical stance, even Bentham admitted that the Commentaries improved on previous legal primers because it taught jurisprudence 'to speak the

<sup>27</sup> BL, Add. MS. 34,412, ff. 216–17; W. Holdsworth, A History of English Law (1922–72), xii. 728, 753; I. 338 (55) (8th edn, 1778).

<sup>28</sup> See J. H. Langbein, 'Blackstone on Judging', in W. Prest (ed.), Blackstone and his Commentaries: Biography, Law, History (Oxford, 2009), 65–77.

<sup>29</sup> Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 114.

<sup>30</sup> D. Lemmings, Law and Government in England during the Long Eighteenth Century: From Consent to Command (Basingstoke, 2011), ch. 5.

<sup>31</sup> Cf. Carrese, Cloaking of Power, esp. 140, 151.

<sup>32</sup> Willman, 'Politics of Blackstone's Commentaries', 279. See also I. 338 (55) (8th edn, 1778).

language of the Scholar and the Gentleman'. But for him Blackstone's mastery of literary style explained why such an unsatisfactory account of law and government had become so popular, despite its obvious flaws: it had simply been dressed up 'to advantage, from the toilette of classic erudition'.<sup>33</sup> This is an excessively superficial explanation for the Commentaries' success. As I have suggested, Blackstone cultivated the self-image of his readers as educated and virtuous citizens capable of discerning the relatively obscure but abiding merits of English legal history in its struggle for civil liberty. Certainly, by combining a veneer of the Enlightenment appetite for rationality and order with a more substantial emotional underlay of the English 'passion for justice', the Commentaries effectively educated its readers into an affective appreciation of common law which combined aesthetics and utility.<sup>34</sup> In this rhetorical achievement it was conspicuously a novelty, given the previously negative view of English legal literature as too severely practical and crabbed for polite readers. By contrast with Bentham's blunt reformist juggernaut, however, Blackstone's work should be regarded as a more subtle but deliberate political intervention which attempted to shape and ultimately improve the practice of government in eighteenth-century England.

Subject Matter: Themes and Perspectives

Key themes

Above all, Book I of the Commentaries is an explicitly patriotic history of civil liberty or rights under government. Thus the Introduction refers repeatedly to the struggles of 'our ancestors' under the yoke of the Normans to maintain the laws of Alfred and Edward the Confessor, and celebrates their ultimate endurance, despite 'the repeated attacks of the civil law'. These were struggles which had contributed substantially to the development of 'the free constitution of England', identified as a country where uniquely '[t]he idea and practice of ... political or civil liberty flourish in their highest vigour' (I. 50, 86). In its appeal to patriotism the Commentaries was an affective performance about English liberties overcoming 'unconstitutional oppressions', as much as an exercise in reason. By identifying the positive merits of English law with the triumphs of English liberty, Blackstone was seeking to constitute an ideal of civilized Englishness while projecting his own love of this virtuous narrative history onto his readers. They were also enjoined to subscribe to an aesthetic appreciation of the common law's origins and historical development which appealed subtly to the essential symmetry and coherence espoused in contemporary valuations of classical culture among the landed élite.<sup>35</sup>

If the ideally constructed reader of the Commentaries was a constitutional patriot, how was this appeal related to contemporary currents of political patriotism? Patriotism was the essence of the opposition to Walpole and the Pelhams in the 1730s and 1740s. The ideology which informed it, clearly articulated by the Tory Lord Bolingbroke in his contributions to The Craftsman and his Letter on the Spirit of Patriotism (1736), rested on a distinction between honest and independent Englishmen who worked for the public good and self-interested politicians who were prepared to corrupt the institutions of government by exploiting the 'influence' (i.e. patronage) of the crown in parliament and elections. These ideas about virtue and corruption gave a central role to gentlemen of independent means who would act as the watchdogs of the constitution and thereby preserve the nation's liberties through their disinterested service in parliament and their control of the local institutions of government.<sup>36</sup> Indeed such elements of eighteenth-century classical republicanism can be traced in Book I of the Commentaries. Blackstone's definition of municipal law constructed men as citizens with a duty to 'contribute ... to the subsistence and peace of the society', and as we have seen, gentlemen had a particular obligation to participate in government and protect the constitution so as to preserve civil liberties (I. 37).<sup>37</sup> Blackstone's ideas about constitutional patriotism may also owe some debt to Bolingbroke's Idea of a Patriot King (1749). Like Bolingbroke, he looked to the king as a moderating influence on the power of modern government, and he praised George III in particular as a monarch who demonstrably respected 'the free constitution of Britain'.<sup>38</sup>

<sup>33</sup> Bentham, Fragment on Government, 413.

<sup>34</sup> See Stern, 'Blackstone's Legal Actors', 6.

<sup>35</sup> Stern, 'Blackstone's Legal Actors', 7–8.

Bolingbroke was the principal ideologue of the country Tories, and Book I of the Commentaries espouses several policy positions characteristic of the mid-eighteenth-century Tory opposition. For example, Blackstone referred critically to England's 'ruinous' entanglements in medieval Europe caused by the defence of royal possessions there, and used this historical lesson to advocate a typically Tory foreign policy that prioritized the nation's 'maritime interests'. At the same time he pointedly marginalized Hanover and the king's other properties in Germany as 'entirely unconnected with the laws of England', implying that they deserved no attention from government (I. 76). Such a 'blue water' foreign policy was also recommended as patriotic and constitutional because it depended on the strength of the royal navy, 'the floating bulwark of the island' and a defence force from which, unlike a standing army, 'no danger can ever be apprehended to liberty' (I. 268). The maintenance of a professional army by successive Whig governments was represented in the Commentaries as a modern innovation which threatened the constitution directly and was characteristic of absolute monarchies governing by fear, rather than 'a land of liberty'.<sup>39</sup> Like his fellow Tories, Blackstone much preferred a citizen militia, as first established under King Alfred, and he cited Montesquieu approvingly for his insistence

<sup>36</sup> H. T. Dickinson, Bolingbroke (1970), ch. 13. See also I. Kramnick, Bolingbroke and his Circle (Cambridge MA, 1968).

<sup>37</sup> See also I. 12–13, 68–9, 113, 141.

<sup>38</sup> I. 216 (and editorial note). See also Willman, 'Politics of Blackstone's Commentaries', 302; D. Armitage, 'A Patriot for Whom? The Afterlives of Bolingbroke's Patriot King', Journal of British Studies, 36 (1997), 397–418.

<sup>39</sup> I. 216, 262. See also [W. Blackstone] to Sir Roger Newdigate, 27 Feb. 1758 in Letters, ed. Prest, 54.

that 'armies... should consist of the people, and have the same spirit with the people' (I. 263, 266).<sup>40</sup>

Another characteristically 'country Tory' theme of Book I is its negative assessment of modern methods of state finance. Blackstone singled out the laws relating to the administration of the excise duties as 'hardly compatible with the temper of a free nation' because they gave powers of search and entry to the revenue officers. He also condemned summary trial proceedings (i.e. before Justices of the Peace, or commissioners of excise) for prosecution, a method which made no provision for juries (I. 205). In describing the creeping progression of the excise since its first introduction during the Civil War he again deployed the affective power of his constitutional patriotism, observing caustically that 'from its first original to the present time, its very name has been odious to the people of England' (I. 206). The Commentaries also criticized the system of state finance organized around public borrowing as a drag on 'the land, the trade, and the personal industry of individuals.' While Blackstone admitted that some measure of public debt financing was advantageous because it increased the availability of capital for investment, he stigmatized 'the indolent and idle creditor' who lived off investments in the funds, and complained about the inflated size of the national debt (I. 210–11). These views about parasitic moneyed men chimed perfectly with the virtue and corruption paradigm which constituted the political essence of the Commentaries; and Blackstone devoted several pages of Book I to a dire warning about the insidious 'influence' associated with the Whiggish financial and administrative revolution achieved since 1689. He concluded that, by the 1760s, after decades of this creeping corruption, the only bulwark standing against the 'corrupt and servile influence' associated with modern government was the patriotism of George III (I. 215–16).

A final Tory theme played upon in Book I of the Commentaries is the consistently High Church and anti-Catholic perspective on the history of Christianity and the clergy and the constitutional place of the Church of England. This prejudice is hardly surprising. Blackstone had been educated in the tradition of patriotic allegiance to the Church, had read deeply in Anglican controversial theology as an undergraduate at Oxford, and had close familial connections among the established clergy. His first published work was a poem which manifested a commitment to High Church opinions, and, like many of his Oxford contemporaries, for most of his life he was also intolerant of protestant dissent.<sup>41</sup> The Commentaries' historical account of the royal revenue dwelled on the 'papal usurpations over the clergy of this kingdom' and related how the pre-Reformation clergy were complicit in the 'criminal bigotry' by which the Pope claimed the first-fruits and tenths from the profits of ecclesiastical livings (I. 183–4). Moreover, on the very first page of his chapter on the laws and constitutions of the clergy Blackstone justified the reduction of clerical powers and privileges achieved by the protestant Reformation because of the 'ill use' to which the Catholic clergy had put them; and he seems to have regarded the surviving jurisdiction of the church courts as an offensive remnant of the Norman Yoke (I. 242, 309; also III. ch. 5). On the other hand he noted that by the Bill of Rights and the Act of Union the king was bound to swear solemnly that he would maintain the established church, and he interpreted this oath as an essential restatement of the original contract of government between monarch and people (I. 70, 152–3). Indeed his insistence that the Church of England's legal establishment, including the penal laws prohibiting any dissent, formed a fundamental and unalterable part of the constitution ultimately proved offensive to the leaders of the English protestant dissenters (I. 70–1).<sup>42</sup>

<sup>40</sup> See also S. Skinner, 'Blackstone's Support for the Militia', American Journal of Legal History, 44 (2000), 1–18.

<sup>41</sup> Prest, Blackstone, 25, 37–9, 57.

In addition to these particular themes, the subject matter and viewpoints of Book I of the Commentaries were clearly influenced generally by near-contemporaneous events, especially the constitutional crises and civil wars of the seventeenth century, which continued to resonate with contemporaries. Blackstone's historical account of English law referred frequently to the travails of the Stuart constitution and treated them in a superficially even-handed way, which acknowledged the dangers of monarchical tyranny, as well as the descent into parliamentary anarchy. Thus he wrote approvingly of the abolition of the court of Star Chamber by the Long Parliament as a welcome step towards the independence of the judiciary, and referred critically to the levying of ship money and tonnage and poundage under Charles I. But while unconstitutional acts of government were identified as 'causes of those unhappy discontents, justifiable at first in too many instances', Blackstone went on to complain that they 'degenerated at last into causeless rebellion and murder' (I. 144, 173–4, 203). Indeed, while the Commentaries acknowledged obliquely the threat of tyranny in Charles I's tendency to govern without parliament, the text was much more explicit and its author's language became more affective when he turned to the abolition of monarchy in 1649 (I. 98, 103). Blackstone feared anarchy, which he saw as a consequence of constitutional breakdown, more than royal misgovernment; and this view derived partly from an impeccably Tory source, Clarendon's History of the Rebellion (I. 24, 41).<sup>43</sup> For Blackstone, then, seventeenth-century English history taught clear constitutional lessons; and correctly interpreting the settlement of the constitution under the later Stuarts was crucial to the Commentaries' didactic purpose.

Positive morals and injunctions

The most important moral to be derived from Blackstone's treatment of the history of English law in Book I of the Commentaries is that England was uniquely fortunate in its system of government because it promoted liberty under what today would be called the rule of law. This is apparent from his unexpected emphasis on the legislative achievements of Charles II—not a monarch normally celebrated for achieving the 'perfection of our public law' (IV. 283). One of the legislative reforms Blackstone consistently singled out for finally restoring the balance between liberty and the prerogative was the 1679 Habeas Corpus Act (I. 87, 92, 93). As previously mentioned, in Book I he described this statute as ‘that second magna carta’, and later explained that while the Great Charter had declared that no man should be imprisoned unless according to law, the act of Charles II established the legal process which mandated an appearance in court (IV. 283). So here was the key to freedom under the constitution: just as the abolition of feudal tenures (in 1660) secured the right to property, so the Habeas Corpus Act protected rights to life and liberty of person, by interposing the law between the subject and the arbitrary pleasure of the crown (I. 90–1).<sup>44</sup>

<sup>42</sup> J. Priestley, Remarks on Some Passages in the Fourth Volume of Dr. Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England, Relating to the Dissenters (1769), 4–5; Prest, Blackstone, 247–50.

<sup>43</sup> R. Willman, 'Blackstone and the "Theoretical Perfection" of English Law in the Reign of Charles II', Historical Journal, 26 (1983), 49, and 'Politics of Blackstone's Commentaries', 294; Prest, Blackstone, 170. See also I. 103, 136, 264.

For Blackstone, therefore, these provisions restored the original contract, because they fulfilled the promise, anciently embodied in the coronation oath, whereby the subject submitted to government in return for protection, on condition that the king’s power was limited by law (I. 151–3). As demonstrated throughout the Commentaries more generally, the ‘perfection’ of government was constitutional government by consent, according to common law tradition, explicitly distinguished from ‘the principle of despotic power’ enshrined in Roman law (I. 38–9, 95, 151–5; II. 32–3; IV. 5). Emphatically, under the English constitution, the king was not the ‘original’ of justice, but merely its instrument or ‘distributor’, since its origins were derived from the social compact (I. 171–2). Here again, the Commentaries aimed to encourage, and actively to shape, a distinctive love of law as a characteristic feature of English patriotism.<sup>45</sup>

In Blackstone’s quasi-republican formulation the rule of law was government by consent because animated by active popular participation. Although the language of the Commentaries frequently seems to ascribe agency to ‘the law’, this is simply a convenient figure of speech, for its author was passionate about popular legalism.<sup>46</sup> Indeed, while he described laws as commands ‘prescribed by the supreme power in a state’, it is important to emphasize his positive valuation of ‘the feelings of humanity’ which—as his narrative history showed—had continuously informed ‘the vigour of our free constitution’ (I. 36–7, 86, 159). He recognized that affective participation also operated beneficially at the more quotidian level of the administration of justice, especially among the propertied jurymen, participants in a unique legal institution lauded elsewhere in the Commentaries as ‘the glory of English law’. Trial by jury is singled out as ‘the most transcendent privilege which any subject can enjoy’ (III. 249–50). Again, however, Blackstone’s positive rendering of popular participation in the constitution was consciously idealistic; he acknowledged with regret that jurors were likely to be heavily influenced by judges, and he knew very well there was plenty of room for judicial discretion in interpreting the law (I. 12).<sup>47</sup> In the aggregate, as embodied by the English flesh and blood which formed it, Blackstone’s rule of law was ‘tender’ as well as commanding (I. 97, 161, 168, 284). But in individual cases the

<sup>44</sup> Willman, ‘Theoretical Perfection’, esp. 39–41.

<sup>45</sup> Cf. Stern, ‘Blackstone’s Legal Actors’.

<sup>46</sup> Cf. P. Halliday, ‘Blackstone’s King’, in W. Prest (ed.), Re-Interpreting Blackstone’s Commentaries: A Seminal Text in National and International Contexts (Oxford, 2014), 12–13.

<sup>47</sup> Langbein, ‘Blackstone on Judging’, 66–7, 69–71.

administration of justice was a complex business of human relations, and as his introductory lecture insisted, outcomes depended on educating jurors so that they knew what they were doing (I. 12).

Classical republicanism taught that participation in government should be limited to men of independent means, however, and although Blackstone cautiously recommended extension of the parliamentary franchise, the Commentaries was generally pessimistic about decision-making by 'the multitude' (I. 113; III. 250). Book I supported the exclusion from the parliamentary franchise of such people 'as can have no will of their own' (because of their poverty, which was supposed to render them vulnerable to corruption) and complained wearily about the persistent influence of bribery and corruption in elections (I. 113, 117–18, 218). Moreover, since under these circumstances human nature did not guarantee rational outcomes, hereditary succession to the crown was essential if the repeated descents into 'bloodshed and misery' typical of elective monarchies were to be avoided. Indeed, Blackstone fulminated against the radical assertion, made at the 'infamous and unparalleled' trial of Charles I, that the English crown had ever been elective (I. 124–6). This issue was so important that he spent more than two-thirds of his substantial chapter on the king and his title in 'a short historical view' of the succession from early Saxon times until the accession of the Hanoverians, thereby proving that the crown was hereditary, although the line of succession might be altered, with full constitutional propriety, by act of parliament (I. 128–41).

Finally, and in accordance with this extended diatribe about the dangers of allowing 'the democratical part of our constitution' to overbalance the other parts, Blackstone's interpretation of what had happened in 1688–9 was calculated to obviate the radical threat posed by the constitutional implications of Lockean contract theory (I. 112). The reader was prepared for this conservative pragmatism in the Introduction to Book I, where Blackstone warned that 'Mr. Locke ... perhaps carries his theory too far' by proposing that, in the event of a constitutional crisis, sovereignty reverted to the people; for this would amount to a 'state of anarchy' with unknown outcomes (I. 42). He had already written scathingly about the Lockean notion of the original contract as a conscious accord between people in the state of nature to establish a system of government (I. 38). In fact, there was no historical state of nature. Rather, men had always lived in societies, and the original social contract was simply the tacit fundamental agreement that underwrote every state: individual people expected protection from the community, and in return submitted to its laws (I. 38–9).<sup>48</sup> Thus, when it came to his historical exegesis of English monarchy and the dilemma of what to do in 1688, 'the principles of Mr. Locke' were quite consistently rejected as inappropriate, since they tended towards an interpretation that allowed for 'a total dissolution of the government' (I. 138). On the contrary, given the real danger in 1688–9 that the accumulated benefits of the rule of law might be lost, the grandees of the Convention Parliament had acted sensibly and avoided a lapse of government by re-establishing the ancient constitution with a restatement of the original contract in the form of the

<sup>48</sup> Willman, 'Theoretical Perfection', 55–6.

Declaration of Rights (I. 151–3).<sup>49</sup> Thus in the Commentaries resistance to the sovereign was justified by the threat of popular anarchy, not by perceptions of misgovernment. For Blackstone the implications of this crisis were clear. The subject had no right under the constitution to determine the limits of obedience: indeed, the subject's right of resistance was a 'latent' right, by definition extra-legal, and it was best to avoid speculation as to the circumstances when it might be exercised (I. 138, 159, 163).<sup>50</sup>

Problems?

There are some apparently unresolved tensions in the Commentaries' substantive treatment of the constitution, especially in regard to its reconciliation of political theory with historical practice. For example, while frequently critical of legislation as incoherent and potentially oppressive, Blackstone nevertheless insisted on an absolutist doctrine of sovereignty, identifying parliament as the supreme lawmaker in the land. Indeed, it was in parliament that he located that 'supreme, irresistible, absolute, uncontrolled authority', which he believed essential for every state: he characterized legislation unequivocally as an 'absolute despotic power' (I. 39, 107).<sup>51</sup> Moreover, anticipating Burke, Blackstone recognized the independence of MPs from their constituents. They were not mere deputies, since their ultimate duty was to advance the public interest, rather than to represent their local constituencies; so they were not obliged to consult with, much less be directed by, their electors (I. 106).<sup>52</sup> Given his doubts about the practical application of legislation and the competence of legislators, why did he set their power so high?

In taking such a strong line on the power of parliament, Blackstone's understanding of recent history seems to have made him a realist: he understood that by the mid-eighteenth century, the king-in-parliament Leviathan was effectively absolute.<sup>53</sup> But it was fundamental to Blackstone's didactic purpose that readers of the Commentaries account of England's travails in the seventeenth century and the subsequent rise of parliament's legislative supremacy should understand that parliamentary power was potentially subversive of liberty. Indeed, as suggested above, the Vinerian/Blackstonian project for accessible legal education was designed to promote legal literacy among the class of Englishmen who supplied MPs and peers; for if this was achieved, future legislation would surely conform to the common law tradition of incremental improvement.<sup>54</sup> Thus the Commentaries and the lectures that preceded them may be regarded as a practical exercise in classical republicanism, by which free-born Englishmen were encouraged to participate in government according to law.

<sup>49</sup> For the ancient constitution see J. G. A. Pocock, The Ancient Constitution and the Feudal Law (rev. edn, Cambridge, 1987).

<sup>50</sup> Willman, 'Theoretical Perfection', 57–9.

<sup>51</sup> See also I. 66–7, 134.

<sup>52</sup> See Edmund Burke, 'Speech to the Electors of Bristol' (3 November 1774), in The Writings and Speeches of Edmund Burke, ed. P. L. Langford (Oxford, 1981–2000), iii. 68–70.

<sup>53</sup> See Lemmings, Law and Government, 128. Also e.g. I. 132, 136–7.

<sup>54</sup> Lieberman, Province of Legislation, ch. 2; Lemmings, 'Blackstone and Law Reform by Education'.

So was Blackstone merely a historical pragmatist who justified the eighteenth-century constitution by its provenance? Such criticism threatens to render the political theory of Book I no more than intellectual embellishment designed to make the Commentaries palatable to readers with a taste for enlightened philosophy. Certainly many scholars have identified contradictions between Blackstone's treatment of individual rights under natural law and his historical account of English common law.<sup>55</sup> The Commentaries were intellectually ambitious in seeking to follow an institutional framework by relating the substance of English law to the law of nature; but the ultimate price of this classical model was the difficult task of deriving common law rules from natural jurisprudence.<sup>56</sup> The result, as Lieberman has shown, was an ingenious, if only partly satisfactory, dialectical compromise, which radically limited the scope and practical application of natural jurisprudence. In Blackstone's formulation of legal evolution, rather than natural law being a positive source of rules, it serves as a mere judicial check; customs were accepted as common law only if they were found by the courts to conform to natural 'reason' and justice; and the imperative of natural law is interpreted broadly as the pursuit of happiness (I. 34–5, 52–3). Accordingly, the province of law wholly determined by natural law precepts dealing with natural rights and duties was effectively minimal, as compared with the positive duties and 'things indifferent' which informed the bulk of municipal law (I. 43, 44–5, 87–95).<sup>57</sup> Thus, while it provided a veneer of intellectual respectability, 'Blackstone's natural law ... soared high above the detail of law at ground level, without explaining.'<sup>58</sup> So it could be said that Blackstone's attempted harmonization of natural law with English law was an aesthetic and affective—or even poetic—project, rather than a genuine attempt at deductive reasoning.<sup>59</sup>

It is arguable, however, that for Blackstone natural law operated as a guiding principle that informed incremental reform of common law.<sup>60</sup> Certainly, as a Christian, Blackstone took natural law as fundamental: he fully understood that by no means all English law could be reconciled with natural precepts, and he was not at all diffident about drawing attention to the areas where it was glaringly repugnant to natural law. So laws imposing the death penalty for mere property offences were morally illegitimate and fundamentally 'unlawful' in this respect because they took life 'for slight offences, or such as are merely positive', which were not transgressions against natural law.<sup>61</sup> The 'sanguinary' nature of England's criminal code was therefore evidence of the law's natural injustice, as well as exemplifying the practical weaknesses in crude parliamentary law-making that the Vinerian/Blackstonian lecturing and publishing project was designed to inhibit. The moral consequences were clear: in a

<sup>55</sup> See J. Finnis, Natural Law and Natural Rights (Oxford, 2nd edn, 2011), 50, 364–5; Finnis, 'Blackstone's Theoretical Intentions', Natural Law Forum, 12 (1967), 179–82.

<sup>56</sup> M. Lobban, The Common Law and English Jurisprudence 1760–1850 (Oxford, 1991), 19–26. See also J. W. Cairns, 'Blackstone', 318–60.

<sup>57</sup> Lieberman, Province of Legislation, 44–6.

<sup>58</sup> Lobban, Common Law, 43.

<sup>59</sup> Cf. Halliday, 'Blackstone's King'.

<sup>60</sup> Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 174–5.

<sup>61</sup> IV. 5–7, 11; also Willman, 'Politics of Blackstone's Commentaries', 298–9.

chilling warning, Blackstone declared that legislators who exceeded their authority from God by imposing capital sentences for minor offences risked incurring '[t]he guilt of blood' (IV. 7).<sup>62</sup>

Perhaps more difficult to understand, at least for modern critics, were Blackstone's complex and somewhat unsatisfying discussions about the separation of powers.<sup>63</sup> Some ambiguity should be expected in this case because, like Montesquieu, he referred to the 'powers' of government in two quite different ways, as institutions or elements, and as functions.<sup>64</sup> Thus he distinguished concretely the three orders of king, lords, and commons, representing different social 'interests', and associated them with three different species of government (I. 40–1). But he also referred to the primary distinction between the legislative and executive functions of government, meaning the powers of making and enforcing laws (I. 98). And ultimately he identified a third, 'distinct and separate' judicial power (I. 173).<sup>65</sup> It is important to understand that while in England the elements of government were beneficially intermixed, for Blackstone they blended in a way that nevertheless promoted the Montesquieuan ideal of separating its functions.

Certainly, it was vital that the legislature should maintain equilibrium between the three orders of society: king, peers, and commoners. As we have seen, the Commentaries explicitly maintained a high doctrine of sovereignty in quasi-Hobbesian terms, but Blackstone argued that by investing the supreme power in the 'mixed' legislature of king in parliament, the constitution represented the virtues and balanced the social interests of monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy (I. 40–1).<sup>66</sup> Indeed, he insisted that to avoid tyranny by crown or parliament, the executive must be a 'branch' of the legislature (I. 103). Thus in the English context liberty was preserved because neither crown nor parliament could make law and administer it too: parliament needed royal concurrence to legislate, and only the king and his ministers could apply acts of parliament, law which had previously been passed by the lords and commons. Indeed, the interpenetration of king and parliament had to be partial, for just as complete separation would result in destructive antagonism, so fully combining the powers of legislation and administration would overcome the parliament's jealousy about entrusting too much power to the executive, tending to acts subversive of freedom and justice, as had occurred after 1649 (I. 98, 103–4).<sup>67</sup>

Paradoxically, therefore, according to the Commentaries, the constitution's blending of institutions representing the orders of society promoted the separation of its powers and promoted liberty. As Blackstone hinted at the start of his discussion about parliament, this unexpected outcome is best explained by considering the 'judicial' power (I. 98). Later in Book I, when reviewing the king's prerogative, he insisted that it would be an 'absurdity' for the king to act as a judge in criminal

<sup>62</sup> For blood guilt, see P. Crawford, 'Charles Stuart, that Man of Blood', Journal of British Studies, 16 (1997), esp. 42–4.

<sup>63</sup> For Bentham's criticism see Fragment on Government, 464.

<sup>64</sup> Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 57.

<sup>65</sup> Cf. Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 25.

<sup>66</sup> Willman, 'Theoretical Perfection', 44, 48.

<sup>67</sup> Cf. Halliday, 'Blackstone's King', 179–81.

proceedings, since prosecutions were carried on in his name; and he emphatically applauded the growth of the English judiciary's formal independence from the crown, in terms of their security of tenure (I. 172–3). Referring to the oppressive decisions of the court of Star Chamber, Blackstone maintained 'nothing ... is more to be avoided, in a free constitution, than uniting the provinces of a judge and a minister of state' (I. 173). Taken in the context of contemporary judicial politics, this might be read as a Tory warning against the extensive use of legal patronage by the Whig governments to manage parliament and the judiciary.<sup>68</sup> Alternatively, however, the gradual emergence of the judges in Book I of the Commentaries as a 'grand depository of the fundamental laws of the kingdom' may be interpreted as an appreciation of the judiciary as a separate equitable power in the constitution: a moderating influence on the executive and legislature which arguably prefigured the development of judicial review in the United States constitution (I. 52, 172; note that 'depository' is rendered plural by the eighth edition).<sup>69</sup>

Blackstone only travelled a limited distance towards the modern constitutional theory of the separation of powers, however.<sup>70</sup> The Commentaries did not formally articulate a doctrine of judicial review, and a further explanation for the book's theoretical under-development in this area lies in an appreciation of the author's somewhat parochial pragmatism. For although overtly derived from Montesquieu, Blackstone's prescription for avoiding constitutional breakdown via checks and balances was also grounded in his conservative appreciation of recent British history, wherein he identified the causes of civil war in uncertainty about the distribution of powers between the king and parliament, legal doubts which also involved disputes about the constitutional accountability of the judiciary and the army (I. 103–4, 173–4, 215–16, 264, 265–6). His version of the post-1688 balanced constitution was a pragmatic solution to these particular domestic problems, whereby the judges were insulated from royal interference and parliament voted an annual militia bill to fund the army. But he was not seeking openly to judicialize politics and law-making.<sup>71</sup> Rather, the Commentaries' stress on maintaining the constitutional balance between king and parliament ultimately rendered the judiciary an instrument of the legislature: they were 'lions under the mace, rather than under the throne'.<sup>72</sup> Indeed, despite his early remarks, following a discussion about the interpretation of statutes, that equitable judgment is applied to 'assist, to moderate, and to explain' the law, Blackstone later stated explicitly that any overt review by the law of legislative or executive power would ultimately destroy the idea of sovereignty (I. 66–7, 158–9).

<sup>68</sup> D. Lemmings, 'The Independence of the Judiciary in Eighteenth-Century England', in P. Birks (ed.), The Life of the Law (1993), 125–49.

<sup>69</sup> Cf. Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 126, 138–48, 140, 159.

<sup>70</sup> Cf. Willman, 'Theoretical Perfection', 44.

<sup>71</sup> Cf. Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 3.

<sup>72</sup> S. N. Katz, 'Introduction' to W. Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (Chicago, 1979), i. p. ix; C. Hill, Intellectual Origins of the English Revolution Revisited (Oxford, 1997), 235.

This was a view that was ridiculed by Bentham, who gave several examples of European governments that did not conform to such a concept of supreme power.<sup>73</sup> Moreover the future showed that supreme authority could itself cause instability. Certainly, Blackstone proved unable to appreciate that from the perspective of the American colonies, although legislature and executive were supposedly checked and balanced at home, the absolute power of the composite king-in-parliament might appear oppressive to dominions substantially unrepresented in it. It is only with the benefit of hindsight that Blackstone may be criticized for not anticipating the problems in constitutional relations with the Americans, however, for the first edition of the Commentaries Book I was published in 1765, before the crisis in Anglo-American relations erupted. Indeed, Book I of the Commentaries furnished arguments for and against the American rebellion, as shown by various references to the work in parliamentary debates over the repeal of the Stamp Act.<sup>74</sup>

Varia: Authorial Changes between the Second and the Ninth Editions (1766–83)

The overwhelming majority of changes Blackstone made to the text of Book I were relatively insignificant, in so far as they amount to correcting errors of printing and orthography. He also fixed substantive mistakes and added or replaced words to clarify his original meaning. For example, in his comparative discussion of divine law and natural law, the second edition (1766) expanded the original reference to ‘the natural law’ to read ‘that moral system, which is framed by ethical writers, and denominated the natural law’.<sup>75</sup> Certainly, like any other conscientious author, Blackstone sought to improve comprehension of his text, in this case by reinforcing his point about the superior authenticity of revealed law over human reason. In the Age of Enlightenment such an insistent emphasis on the prescriptive authority of scripture over philosophy was hardly insignificant. Equally telling of Blackstone’s position on a different contemporary issue was a fourth-edition (1770) amendment to his discussion of equity, which confirmed the discretionary power of common law judges to interpret acts of parliament according to ‘liberality of sentiment’.<sup>76</sup> Like this affirmation of the judges’ role as ‘living oracles’, many amendments to the text simply reinforced the Commentaries’ favourite themes.<sup>77</sup>

Given their coincidence with the American crisis, it was perhaps inevitable that the second and subsequent editions of Book I devoted much additional space to further elaboration of the Commentaries’ passages that related to Britain’s legal relationship

<sup>73</sup> Fragment, 489.

<sup>74</sup> Prest, Blackstone, 225–6.

<sup>75</sup> I. 35, 319 (4) (1st edn, 1765; 2nd edn, 1766).

<sup>76</sup> I. 67, 322 (42) (1st edn, 1765; 4th edn, 1770). See also Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 147.

<sup>77</sup> e.g. I. 354 (27), 2nd edn, 1766: on mitigation by juries; I. 362 (15), 2nd edn, 1766: on corruption of sheriffs; I. 374 (16), (17), 4th edn, 1770: against standing armies; I. 359 (95), 5th edn, 1773: deleterious consequences of national debt.

with its colonies. Blackstone was an MP until he became a judge in 1770, and from the time that the second edition was published, both as politician and author, he came down firmly against the colonists' resistance to imperial power.<sup>78</sup> Just as in the House of Commons he stubbornly opposed the repeal of the Stamp Act, so in the second edition of the Commentaries he insisted that 'subordinate dominions' in general were bound by 'the sovereign legislative power,' if explicitly included by legislative provisions; declared that 'the whole of their constitution... [is]... liable to be new-modelled and reformed, by the general super-intending power of the legislature in the mother country'; and pointedly referred to the freshly minted Declaratory Act of 1766 as a response to the American colonists' insubordination. Additionally, the second edition included a new passage stipulating that the king in council had original jurisdiction in adjudicating disputes relating to colonial charters in America and other British colonies, 'upon the principles of feodal sovereignty'.<sup>79</sup> Subsequent editions duly highlighted successive retributive imperial acts, suspending the government of New York and the port of Boston, revoking the charter of Massachusetts, and providing for stationing troops in America.<sup>80</sup> Blackstone's hard line on the constitutional position of dominions like America could not have been conveyed more clearly. It even endured after his death in 1780: for following the repeal of the Irish Dependency Act, in 1782, this landmark setback for British imperial power was only noticed by a footnote in the ninth edition, prepared by Richard Burn.<sup>81</sup>

During his decade as a sitting MP, Blackstone was no doubt concerned that the Commentaries might be quoted against him in debate, and his vulnerability to this kind of criticism may account for serial amendments to the text that seem to represent a careful navigation of domestic politics. Its treatment of the radical John Wilkes is exemplary of such trimming. In May 1769 Blackstone's speech in favour of excluding Wilkes from taking his seat in the House of Commons was confuted by George Grenville, who drew the House's attention to what appeared to be a contrary opinion in the Commentaries.<sup>82</sup> Blackstone had already made extensive additions to an earlier passage in the text discussing the privileges of parliament, whereby he insisted that MPs accused of publishing seditious libels (as Wilkes was in 1763) were not entitled to privilege, and several subsequent amendments appear to track the ongoing controversy over Wilkes and radical interpretations of English liberties.<sup>83</sup> Certainly the fourth edition (1770) amended the original text further so that it conformed to his 1769 speech supporting the ultimate power of parliament to disqualify Wilkes from sitting as an MP.<sup>84</sup> The fifth and ninth editions (1773, 1783) added yet more text qualifying MPs' privileges from arrest in legal proceedings, a question which had been aired in the original clash between Wilkes and the government in 1763.<sup>85</sup> Given these

<sup>78</sup> See L. Namier and J. Brooke, The House of Commons 1754–1790 (1985), ii. 97.

<sup>79</sup> I. 75–6 (1st edn, 1765); I. 324 (20), 326–8 (31), (33), 346 (9) (my emphasis) (2nd edn, 1766).

<sup>80</sup> I. 327–8 (33) (4th edn, 1770; 7th edn, 1775).

<sup>81</sup> I. 326 (28) (9th edn, 1783).

<sup>82</sup> Namier and Brooke, House of Commons, ii. 97. See I. 115–16 (1st edn, 1765).

<sup>83</sup> I. 336–7 (43), (45) (2nd edn, 1766). See P. D. G. Thomas, John Wilkes: A Friend to Liberty (Oxford, 1996), 47–54.

<sup>84</sup> I. 335 (32), (35), 338 (60), 339 (78) (4th edn, 1770).

<sup>85</sup> I. 335–6 (39), (41), (42), (44) (5th edn, 1773; 9th edn, 1783); Thomas, John Wilkes, 43–4; 'Wilkes, John', ODNB.

amendments, it is not surprising that the opposition clearly preferred the first edition of the Commentaries, because none of the later ones could possibly be cited in favour of Wilkes.<sup>86</sup>

Finally, there is evidence in later editions of Book I that Blackstone was responding to published criticisms of his work, although amendments of this kind seem to have been exceptional, and were never explicitly acknowledged. The fifth edition (1773) watered down the statement in the original text that changing the liturgy of the Church of England or Church of Scotland would endanger the Union of the two kingdoms, in so far as it admitted the possibility of consensual changes; this may have been a response to Joseph Priestley's pamphlet published in 1769.<sup>87</sup> Although not insignificant, the amendment to Book I was insubstantial, however (Priestley's criticisms were mainly provoked by Book IV), and the text of the passage on the Act of Union and the two established churches had already been substantially extended in the second edition (1766), perhaps indicating the author's own awareness that representing the ecclesiastical establishments as virtually perpetual would be provocative to dissenters.<sup>88</sup>

A more direct response to published criticism was included in the eighth edition (1778), where Blackstone added a postscript to his original preface. Here he complained that, despite his earlier request for the reader's indulgence, the Commentaries had been 'vehemently attacked'; he admitted listening to some objections and revising his text accordingly, while ignoring those he believed to be erroneous. In this first edition to be published after Bentham's Fragment on Government (1776) an ironic passage enjoins 'the candid and intelligent reader' to interpret his encomiums on the constitution with some subtlety: surely an oblique but critical response to the Fragment. The new preface's reference to being attacked by 'zealots of all (even opposite) denominations, religious as well as civil; by some with a greater, by others with a less, degree of acrimony' was most likely directed at branding Bentham's comments as fundamentally prejudiced, while also acknowledging the less 'uncandid' criticisms of Priestley.<sup>89</sup>

Reception

Although Jeremy Bentham's criticisms forced Blackstone to become somewhat defensive after 1776, the early reception of Commentaries Book I was generally very favourable. The Critical Review printed a twenty-six-page review over two issues in December 1765 and January 1766, within two months of Book I's first publication.<sup>90</sup> The anonymous reviewer clearly understood, and indeed reinforced, Blackstone's

<sup>86</sup> St. James's Chronicle, 11–13 May 1769; Prest, Blackstone, 246.

<sup>87</sup> I. 323 (6), (7), (8) (5th edn, 1773); Priestley, Remarks.

<sup>88</sup> I. 323 (6), (7) (2nd edn, 1766).

<sup>89</sup> I. 317 (2), 338 (55) (8th edn, 1778); see also Balliol College Library, 1550.i.21, I. ii–[iii] (7th edn, 1775): Blackstone's holograph addition to the preface, acknowledging Priestley's 'genteel apology' for the intemperance of his 1769 Remarks. Prest, Blackstone, plate 16.

<sup>90</sup> Book I was published on 18 November 1765 (Gazetteer and New Daily Advertiser, 18 & 20 November 1765), although entered in the Stationer's Register on 16 November: A. J. Laeuchli, A Bibliographical Catalog of William Blackstone (New Haven CT, 2015), 2.

patriotic message. He recommended study of the laws of England because 'the result of it will convince an Englishman of the peculiar excellence of the government under which he lives, and of the laws which frame it'.<sup>91</sup> Accordingly, at the outset he strongly endorsed the Commentaries: 'It is here they will learn to venerate the incomparable worth of their forefathers'.<sup>92</sup> And after paraphrasing Blackstone's stirring declamation on the vigorous assertion and reassertion of Englishmen's rights and liberties from Magna Carta to the Act of Settlement, he forcefully echoed Blackstone's warnings about the dangers of corruption: 'Such is the basis on which the fabric of our excellent government is reared, and the pillars with which it is fortified; a fabric which nothing can shake, but the total degeneracy of its inhabitants'.<sup>93</sup> Admittedly, the Critical Review was not wholly complimentary, since the reviewer insisted, contrary to Blackstone, that the people retained a residual power to overrule the king in parliament, in case of abuse. The author also offered some pedantic quibbles about style, but he ultimately characterized the book as 'learned, elaborate, spirited, and judicious' and virtually apologized for his cavilling by concluding with the comment 'Gold cannot be too much refined'.<sup>94</sup> The Monthly Review was a little more critical, but only in so far as its reviewer thought Blackstone was overly optimistic about the future prospects for constitutional government, and did not sufficiently condemn the tendency to corruption exemplified by Walpolian methods of parliamentary management. Indeed, the author concluded with an unqualified eulogy.<sup>95</sup>

Certainly, Book I of the Commentaries was successful in its broad appeal to 'citizens' as well as lawyers; and on first appearance it proved very relevant to contemporary British politics. In January 1766 the London Magazine quoted extensively from 'the learned Mr. Blackstone's commentaries' on the controversy as to whether the British parliament had the right to impose taxes on its American colonies, that 'being a question now much agitated both in writing and conversation'.<sup>96</sup> But although it provided immediate and welcome ammunition for making the government's case in the emerging American crisis, subsequent events showed the Commentaries' authority might cut several ways, as Blackstone found to his own discomfort during the Wilkes controversy of 1769–70.<sup>97</sup> Its practical utility as a text for understanding the obscurities of English law was less controversial and more enduring, however. Even Sir William Meredith MP, who as a Rockingham Whig was one of Blackstone's political opponents in the Wilkes affair, admitted (in 1770) that 'your Commentaries... have introduced to our Acquaintance, a System that was most important for every Man to

<sup>91</sup> Critical Review, 20 (December 1765), 424.

<sup>92</sup> Critical Review, 20 (December 1765), 425.

<sup>93</sup> Critical Review, 20 (December 1765), 432.

<sup>94</sup> Critical Review, 20 (December 1765), 433–4; Critical Review, 21 (January 1766), 12–13.

<sup>95</sup> [Owen Ruffhead] Monthly Review, 35 (May 1766), 392. See also Monthly Review, 34 (February 1766), 108: 'Our masterly Commentator ... unites the qualities of the historian and politician, with those of the lawyer'; and [Edmund Burke] Annual Register 1767 (1768), 286–307, reviewing the second edition of Books I and II, which substantially plagiarizes Ruffhead.

<sup>96</sup> London Magazine, 35 (January 1766), 3, quoting I. 75–6.

<sup>97</sup> Prest, Blackstone, 239–46.

know; yet, 'till you brought it from Darkness into Light, had been as carefully secreted from Common Understandings, as the Mysteries of Religion ever were.'<sup>98</sup> A thorough reading and digestion of all four volumes of the Commentaries subsequently became de rigeur for anyone contemplating legal practice.<sup>99</sup> Years later Lord Chancellor Thurlow declared that thereby 'the student [will] lay for himself such a foundation of legal and constitutional knowledge, as will enable him to follow his profession with ease.'<sup>100</sup> And even Joseph Priestley, who was famously offended by Blackstone's references to protestant dissent in Book IV, said (in 1769): 'your commentaries on the laws of England will probably last as long as the laws themselves.'<sup>101</sup>

In 1776, however, Bentham's anonymously published Fragment on Government launched a ferocious attack on the Commentaries, and while its detailed analysis concentrated on only a few pages of the second section ('On the Nature of the Laws in General') in the Introduction to Book I, overall its criticisms proved influential (I. 38–42). The Fragment's rather superficial disparagement of Blackstone as an apologist for the status quo has been discussed previously. More worthy of serious consideration—although often merely tendentious and sarcastic—was its treatment of Blackstone's attempt at political philosophy, whereby in these pages he had analysed the origins and principal forms of government and justified the arrangements for sovereignty in contemporary Britain. For Bentham (who dismissed these sections as 'a riddle' and 'a digression stuffed into the belly of a definition'), and for the school of analytical jurists which developed around his work, the philosophical grounding that Blackstone sketched here was hopelessly confused, and he was condemned from this perspective as a 'lax thinker'.<sup>102</sup> Indeed, although the Fragment received mixed reviews at the time of its publication, its overall hostility to Blackstone's philosophical approach struck a chord with educated opinion. As one of its admirers wrote presciently in 1776: 'I will venture to foretell, that the Fragment will live at least as long as the Commentaries'.<sup>103</sup> Certainly, although the reputation of the Commentaries recovered with the resurgence of historical jurisprudence in the later nineteenth century, the works of Blackstone and Bentham were henceforward locked into an ongoing critical dialectic.<sup>104</sup>

There was criticism of Blackstone's magnum opus in America too, but it did not seem to inhibit sales overmuch.<sup>105</sup> We may surmise that Book I was of particular interest to Americans animated by the emerging constitutional crisis with Britain. Indeed, Edmund Burke famously observed, 'I hear that they have sold nearly as many of Blackstone's Commentaries in America as in England'; he counted exceptionally

<sup>98</sup> [Sir William Meredith,] Letter to Dr. Blackstone, by the Author of the Question Stated (1770), 2.

<sup>99</sup> Lemmings, Professors, 139.

<sup>100</sup> A Treatise on the Study of the Law (1797), 69.

<sup>101</sup> London Chronicle, 10–12 October 1769.

<sup>102</sup> Fragment on Government, 439, 473, 500; Holdsworth, History of English Law, xii. 733–4; Dicey, 'Blackstone's Commentaries', 290.

<sup>103</sup> Morning Chronicle, 29 August 1776; see also Morning Chronicle, 10 July, 2 September, 12 November 1776.

<sup>104</sup> Holdsworth, History of English Law, xii. 727, 736.

<sup>105</sup> A. W. Aschuler, 'Rediscovering Blackstone', University of Pennsylvania Law Review, 145 (1996), 5–14; J. S. Waterman, 'Thomas Jefferson and Blackstone's Commentaries', Illinois Law Review, 27 (1932–3), 630–2.

widespread legal knowledge among the population as a cause of the Americans' 'fierce spirit of liberty' which drove them to resist what they saw as British oppression.<sup>106</sup> Much later Thomas Jefferson was critical of the 'honied Mansfieldism' that he claimed to find in the Commentaries; by which he seems to have meant the allowance of judicial activism. As a democrat he was also instinctively alienated by what he identified as its baneful tendency to encourage Toryism in political philosophy.<sup>107</sup> But he may have purchased a set before 1776; and at least sixteen subscribers to the first American edition of the Commentaries (published in 1772) later signed the Declaration of Independence. One modern American scholar has remarked '[a]ll of our formative documents—the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, the Federalist Papers, and the seminal decisions of the Supreme Court under John Marshall—were drafted by attorneys steeped in Sir William Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England ... [and] the Commentaries rank second only to the Bible as a literary and intellectual influence on the history of American institutions'.<sup>108</sup>

This apparent paradox—whereby the ideological origins of American independence from Britain were substantially informed by a work of English constitutional patriotism written by a Tory lawyer—may be partly explained by the fact that contemporary American criticism of the Commentaries' treatment of constitutional law took a quite different track from the Benthamite approach. Like Jefferson, the future Supreme Court justice James Wilson was offended by what he regarded as Blackstone's Tory philosophy, which he deduced from the Commentaries' insistence that there must be a supreme power in every state—an idea that he associated with divine right and derogation of the social contract. Eighteenth-century American lawyers like Wilson, St. George Tucker, and Jefferson believed Blackstone's position on natural rights was inadequate, in so far as he defined them too narrowly as against the extensive application of municipal law. From this neo-Cokean and fundamentalist perspective, the Commentaries' endorsement of parliamentary supremacy only legitimized the legislative oppression of the American colonies.<sup>109</sup>

The influence of Blackstone on American thinking about the constitution was enduring, if complex. It is appropriate, indeed, to refer to a distinctively 'American version of Blackstone's jurisprudence and constitutionalism' inspired by federalists who were more receptive to Blackstone than Jefferson was, because they sought to restrict democracy by the application of common law; an aim achieved by founding a supreme constitutional court. Ultimately, it has been argued, in America the 'subtle judicialization of politics' advanced by neo-Blackstonian jurists helped to herald the triumph of judicial activism as exemplified by Oliver Wendell Holmes.<sup>110</sup>

<sup>106</sup> Writings and Speeches of Edmund Burke, ed. Langford, iii. 123–4, 125 (speech on 22 March 1775).

<sup>107</sup> Waterman, 'Jefferson and Blackstone's Commentaries', esp. 634–46.

<sup>108</sup> R. A. Ferguson, Law and Letters in American Culture (Cambridge MA, 1984), 11. See also Waterman, 'Jefferson and Blackstone's Commentaries'.

<sup>109</sup> Waterman, 'Jefferson and Blackstone's Commentaries', 648–51; Aschuler, 'Rediscovering Blackstone', 9–14, 16, 24–36. Arguably, American lawyers were more liberally educated than their English counterparts; and patriot lawyers like John Adams and Thomas Jefferson were inspired by a historicized reading of Sir Edward Coke's works (see Lemmings, Professors, 241–2, 245).

<sup>110</sup> See Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 231–2, 241; Waterman, 'Jefferson and Blackstone's Commentaries', 657–9.

The constitutional and political legacies of the Commentaries Book I in the English-speaking world consisted partly in the institutionalization of judicial politics by review of legislation, even tending towards an imperial jurisprudence. But more broadly, they represented the enduring affective power of stories identifying the rule of law with the pursuit of individual happiness and liberty. Book I was fundamentally a political project; and it built upon its author's understanding of the 'sensible' apprehension of reason, therefore requiring poetics as well as logic.<sup>111</sup> While Bentham warned readers of the Commentaries 'what may tickle the ear, or dazzle the imagination, will not always inform the judgement', Blackstone recognized that human beings were swayed by passion rather than abstract reason (which since the Fall, was 'corrupt, and ... full of ignorance and error'). Emphatically, they were not 'true to first principles, uninfluenced by passion or prejudice, unassailed by corruption, and unawed by violence'.<sup>112</sup> In so far as the Commentaries established the knowledge of English law as living history as well as legal education, Book I was an exercise in the politics of emotional persuasion, as much as a 'scientific' treatment of constitutional law.

David Lemmings

<sup>111</sup> Again, this appears to represent Montesquieu's influence (see Carrese, Cloaking of Power, 94–5, 110–11).

<sup>112</sup> Bentham, Fragment on Government, 500–1; I. 35, 125.

Acknowledgements

My thanks to William Woods for his unremitting dedication to the editing task, and also to Carly Osborn and Adam Osborn for their able research and technical assistance. I would also like to thank the General Editor and Sabina Flanagan for their enduring support and expert advice. I am particularly grateful to them, and also to Sir John Baker and Paul Brand, for their learned comments on the text, which have saved me from many errors. Of course I am also deeply grateful for the forbearance and support of my partner Claire Walker and my children Tom and Charlotte over several years' work on this project. They will be very relieved it is done!

David Lemmings

Editorial Conventions and Practices

In 1890 William G. Hammond, the scholarly dean of the St Louis Law School, published a remarkable new version of the Commentaries. Whereas previous editors had sought to annotate and update Blackstone's text in an effort to keep pace with ongoing changes in the law, Hammond was primarily concerned to present that text as an expression of the evolution of Blackstone's legal thought.<sup>1</sup> Using an ingenious system of superscript numerals and footnotes, Hammond sought to list all authorial changes made between the first (1765–9) and the eighth (1778) edition of the Commentaries, the last to appear before the author's death in 1780. The ninth (1783) edition was rejected as copy text because Hammond doubted the claims of its editor Richard Burn that all his interventions, other than references to recently enacted statutes, were derived from the author's own manuscript. Hammond maintained that '[a]nyone familiar with Blackstone's style and that of his annotator may be pardoned for sometimes doubting the self-restraint of the latter and for excluding these changes.'<sup>2</sup>

Little information about his own working methods was provided. But it seems possible that at least part of the massive task of collating some two thousand pages from each of the successive nine editions of the Commentaries may have fallen to his 'young gentlemen' students, whom Hammond credits with the almost equally challenging role of identifying citations to the Commentaries in 2,500 volumes of US Federal and state law reports. So an element of caution about the reliability of Hammond's collations is justified, notwithstanding his praise of the zeal with which his assistants went about their work, subject to 'such checks and supervision as he could give'. Copies of his edition are rare (the publisher's surviving stock and printing plates were destroyed in the San Francisco fire of 1906), although facsimile scans of indifferent quality from the original compact and finely printed duodecimo have recently become available in print-on-demand format. Nor is it more helpful to readers lacking a classical education and Blackstone's own wide range of historical and literary reference than any previous or subsequent version of the Commentaries.

Modernizing typography, translating maxims, quotations, tags, and individual words in languages other than English, unpacking Blackstone's cryptic footnote citations to cases and treatises, and annotating esoteric proper nouns and allusions are relatively manageable and straightforward editorial operations. The task of identifying all authorial changes to the first nine editions of the Commentaries poses different challenges. Over a century after Hammond's pioneering collation venture, digital technology offers a means, promising in principle both greater accuracy and efficiency, to undertake that same operation. Yet to prepare digital files of all nine editions and then run them through a file comparison program which can recognize and mark every textual difference between successive editions has proved more easily said than done.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. K. M. Parker, 'Historicising Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England', in A. Fernandez and M. K. Dubber (eds.), Law Books in Action: Essays on the Anglo-American Legal Treatise (Oxford, 2012), 33–5.

<sup>2</sup> Commentaries on the Laws of England ... From the Author's Eighth Edition, 1778. Edited for American Lawyers by William G. Hammond (San Francisco, 1890), i. p. xvi. Hammond did footnote changes in the ninth edition, '[w]herever they added anything of value, or seemed to be in Blackstone's manner'.

In the first place, even sophisticated optical character recognition software cannot readily handle the vagaries of eighteenth-century typography and typesetting, while keyboard operators working from on-screen images of the original texts also struggle with elegant but now unfamiliar font characters, particularly the long letter 's', easily misread as 'f'. Hence an accurate digital facsimile of the first edition proved surprisingly difficult to achieve, despite two successive keyboarding runs and multiple proof-reading in Chennai, Oxford, and Adelaide. This problem eventually resolved itself as having more to do with the need to correct single-letter literals (e.g. 'left' for 'lest', 'fame' for 'same', 'ease' for 'case', and 'nibil' for 'nihil') in the final text which is the basis of this edition, than the identification of authorial changes between that first (1765–9) and later editions.

We were fortunate in being able to entrust the latter process to the textual comparison program 'Factotum', recently developed at Monash University by Dimitri Nikulin and David Squire, which proved entirely capable of achieving what was required, even if much of its initial output consisted of false positives generated by errors in the text files it was processing. Factotum produced reports showing textual differences from one edition to the next, down to the level of a single character. Comparison of these results with sample chapters from Hammond's edition was reassuring, in that Factotum consistently recognized changes not registered by Hammond.<sup>3</sup> But it also became apparent that in some cases Factotum was registering changes ('varia') in a later edition than that in which they had actually first occurred. In so far as this problem seemed attributable to deficiencies in the text files, it should have been overcome by repeated revision of those files. But in the hope of eliminating any residual inaccuracies of this nature, a final check of all reported varia against both the original editions in which they are registered as having first occurred and the previous edition has also been undertaken. Of course none of these procedures can be guaranteed to eliminate all possibility of error, whether human, mechanical, or some combination of the two.<sup>4</sup> The relative ease with which type could be changed at any point during a print run in the hand-press era may also caution us against placing overmuch reliance on the very concept of those individual editions as constituting discrete and uniform entities.

Varia have been marked in each chapter and in the four introductory sections of Book I by a preceding numeral enclosed in angled brackets: e.g. <n>. These are keyed to sequential lists, similarly numbered and grouped by chapter at the end of each volume. Here every item is preceded by the number of the edition in which the authorial change first occurred, enclosed in square brackets: e.g. [ed. 5]. The listing commences with the relevant word, clause, sentence, or longer passage from the first edition, followed by a vertical divider | separating the original from the altered text. Where the new passage includes footnotes, the content of these notes is explicitly indicated as such. Omitted text or footnotes may be so annotated, or shown by simple omission from the text on the right-hand side of the divider. Where textual changes to the same sentence or paragraph occur over more than one edition, these are indicated either by inserting the relevant information (i.e. the edition in which a subsequent change first occurred and the changed words themselves), enclosed in square brackets to denote an editorial intervention, or listed in a separate paragraph following the first numbered entry.

<sup>3</sup> For example, at I. 13 the change between first and second editions, from 'It is really amazing' to 'It is perfectly amazing'; similarly at I. 46, the omission of 'vacant' in the phrase 'to vacant benefices'.

<sup>4</sup> At the same time, it is reassuring to know that the holograph changes Blackstone inserted in a copy of the seventh edition now in the Balliol College Library seem to have been faithfully incorporated in the two copies of the eighth edition which have been consulted for this purpose, one in the Goldsmith-Kress collection digitized by Cengage Thompson, the other in a copy now held at Flinders University.

A modern scholar has characterized Hammond's collection of Blackstone's authorial amendments as 'obsessive'. Hammond himself was well aware that such a 'careful and minute examination of the text' might be hard to justify, especially where Blackstone's changes 'may seem too trifling to be noted, as when he replaces "a" with "an" or "antiquarians" with "antiquaries"'. Since Factotum reported these and many other differences of equal or even greater seeming insignificance, some working rules of thumb were necessary to keep the lists of changes within manageable bounds. Hence the following are generally not included: (i) changes in punctuation and/or spelling (e.g. enquire/inquire, seised/seized); (ii) unambiguous typographical errors, including misspellings, omissions, and erroneous repetition of single words corrected in subsequent editions; (iii) incorporation of footnotes in text, or vice-versa; (iv) changes in cross-references due to different pagination in later editions; (v) alterations made in one edition reversed in the next or following editions; (vi) changes of form which do not change meaning, as where adjacent words are transposed, or paragraphs recast. However, the temptation to exclude all changes which appear to be merely of style rather than substance has been resisted, both because it is not always easy to make such a distinction, and also because Blackstone's concern with style ('literary form and finish' as well as 'accuracy of expression', to quote Hammond again) is so central to his achievement and the overall impact of the Commentaries. Besides enabling us to follow closely Blackstone's own preoccupation with the choice of words and their placement in sentences, the varia make it possible to trace in some detail his changing positions on particular issues, perhaps most notably the legal status of slaves and Protestant Dissenters, as well as his concern to keep abreast of ongoing changes in the law.

At an early stage in planning this edition, it was decided not to attempt to modernize Blackstone's language. While his spelling of common words often does not accord with current usage, variants such as 'antient', 'embassador', 'misdemesnor', 'larciny', 'nulance', 'skeleton', and 'vasals' are perfectly comprehensible phonetic equivalents of the modern form. There are also occasional inconsistencies (such as the same word spelled both 'recompense' and 'recompence' in the same sentence), apparent neologisms and real ones.<sup>5</sup> But it seemed a pity to deprive readers of the chance to experience the etymological richness of Blackstone's prose, especially since his meaning is rarely concealed by his choice or coinage of words. A similar policy has been applied with regard to punctuation and the use of capital letters and italics, except for removing the apostrophe from the possessive 'it's', and silently correcting evident misspellings and other typographical lapses.

<sup>5</sup> I. 304. Apparent neologisms, but all found in the OED: 'ebriety' (IV. 17); 'promulging' (III. 211); 'specificall' (III. 104, 179); 'substruction' (I. 268). Real neologisms include 'purgatition' (III. 293) and 'proveditor' (in an English rather than Italian context) (I. 185).

Blackstone's footnotes present difficulties of a different kind. Rather than numerals, letters of the alphabet serve both as in-text cues and foot-of-page markers; following contemporary Latinate convention, the letter 'j' is usually omitted, but the substitution of 'w' for 'v' is more idiosyncratic, while on occasion the full English alphabet is used, although not always in the expected order. Further, the notes themselves often consist of cryptic and far from consistent bibliographical citations, to which no key or gloss is provided.<sup>6</sup> This seems an odd omission, given his previously demonstrated concern to smooth the way for students, even if it reflects a realistic expectation that the majority of readers would not wish or need to follow up most footnote references. For those who may now wish to do so and others interested in the wide spectrum of Blackstone's references, to non-legal as well as legal sources, a table of abbreviations follows this section. While most of his references have been identified, a few uncertainties and blanks still remain. It should also be noted that Blackstone's quotations are often more in the nature of a paraphrase than a verbatim rendition of the passage cited.

Editorial annotations to Blackstone's footnotes appear in square brackets; where footnotes refer to published reports of identifiable law cases, the case name precedes the citation. A table of cases appended to each volume provides dates and, where possible, a reference to the English Reports (although Blackstone sometimes cites differently paginated early editions of nominate reporters reproduced in that standard series)<sup>7</sup> or other source; his citations cannot always be matched to a particular case. He also used the Julian calendar, in which each new year began on 25 March rather than 1 January, for events and parliamentary statutes before 1752, when Britain adopted the Gregorian calendar; hence the Bill of Rights, presented to William and Mary in February 1689 according to our modern 'new style' calendar, is dated by Blackstone to the previous year. Tables of statutes at the end of each volume provide a chronological listing of charters and parliamentary legislation mentioned in the text and footnotes. In the text, original pagination is indicated by numbers placed in the margins, next to the line on which the page began in the first edition. In the footnotes, Blackstone's own cross-references are retained, but supplemented by editorial cross-cross references keyed to the pagination of this edition.

Wilfrid Prest

<sup>6</sup> Thus in the first chapter of Book III the initial footnote letter sequence runs j, i, ... v, u, w, whereas neither j or v occur in the footnotes for the next two and most successive chapters. Similar anomalies occur in all four Books.

<sup>7</sup> For example, Blackstone cites the first edition of Reports of Cases Argued and Determined in the High Court of Chancery ... Collected by William Peere Williams, 2 vols. (1740), whereas English Reports uses the sixth edition, which is differently paginated; so his reference at III. 289, note o, to the 1734 case of Cowper v Cowper (2 P. Wms. 685, 686), does not work with the English Reports version.

Abbreviations

Books listed were published in London, unless otherwise noted; the date given is that of first publication, together with the date of any later edition which appears to have been owned or used by Blackstone; for relevant book lists see Prest, Blackstone, 36–9. Books of the Bible (King James version) are not separately listed.

General Abbreviations

Abr.	Abridgment
A.R.	anno regni [regnal year]
ap.	apud [at, in the work of] append.	appendix
b.	book
B.R.	Bancum Regis [King's Bench, court of] c., ch., cap.	chapter
can.	canon
C.B.	Commune Bancum [Common Pleas, court of] circ.	circa [about]
d.	penny; discourse; died
H., Hil.	Hilary (term)
in loc.	in the same place
L., l., l. , lib.	book; pound sterling
L., LL	leges [laws]
M., Mich.	Michaelmas (term)
OT	Old Testament
Pas.	Easter (term)
pl.	plea(s)
pref., proem.	preface
s.	shilling
stat.	statute
t., tit.	title
tr.	tract; translated
Trin.	Trinity (term)
YB	yearbook

Bibliographical Abbreviations

abridgment of the statutes	Abbreviamentum Statutorum (c. 1482)
Act. Concl. apud Baron.	Acta Concilii apud Caesar Baronius, Annales Ecclesiastici a Christo Nato ad annum 1198 , 12 vols (Rome, 1588–1607)
Aeschin. contr. Ctesiph.	Aeschines, Oratio contra Ctesiphontem (Milan, 1498)
Analysis of the laws of England	W. Blackstone, An Analysis of the Laws of England (Oxford, 1756)
And.	Les Reports du Treserudite Edmund Anderson , 2 vols (1664–5)
Aretin.	L. Bruno Aretino, Historiarum Florentini Populi Libri XII
Aristotle, Ethic. ad Nicomach.	Aristotle, Ethicorum ad Nicomachum
Ass.	Liber Assisarum et Placitorum Coronae (c. 1514; 1580; 1679)
Aulus Gellius	Aulus Gellius, Noctes Atticae
Bacon, Henry VII	F. Bacon, History of the Reign of King Henry VII (1622)
Bacon, of uses, on uses	F. Bacon, The Learned Reading ... Upon the Statute of Uses (1642)
Lord Bacon's proposals	F. Bacon, A Proposal for a New Digest of the Laws of England (1733)
Barbeyrac's commentary (Barbeyrac's Puff.)	J. Barbeyrac, Le Droit de la Nature et des Gens (Amsterdam, 1706)

- Barr.
 Bede, eccl. hist.
 Bernardinus de Busti
 bishop of Chester's case
- Boyer's annals of queen Anne (Boyer)
- Bracton
 Brad.
 Britton, Britt.
 Bro. Abr., Bro.
 Bulstr.
 Burn's eccl. law., Burn. eccl. law., Burn.,
     Dr Burn's ecclesiastical law
 Burn. tit. justices
 Burr., B. R.
- Burr. Sett.
- C., Cod.
 Caesar, de bello Gal., Caes. de b. G., de bello Gal., de bell. Gall.
 Camden. Britan., Britannia, Brit. Edit. 1594
- Camden. Eliz., Camd. Ann.
- Can. 1603
 Capitolinus
Capitular. Hludov(ic). Pii.
 Cart., Carte, Hist. Eng.
 Carthew
- Chamberlayne's present state of England
- Cic. ad Attic.*
 Cicero, Brut.
 Cicero, de Legg., de leg., de LL.
 Cicero, de rep.
 Cicero, Philipp.
 Cicero, pro domo.
 Cic. pro Muren.
 Cicero, to Herennius Clarendon, dialogue of education
- Co. Copyh., Co. Cop.
 Co. Litt., 1 Inst.
- Cod.*, Cod.
 Com. Journ.
 Comb.
- Coutumes de la mer*
 Cowel. Institut.
 Cowel's interpr., Cowel.
 Crag.
- Cro. Car.
 Cro. Eliz.
 Cro. Jac.
- D. Barrington, Observations on the... Statutes (1766)
 Bede, Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum
 B. de Busti, Mariale (Milan, 1492)
 F. Gastrell, The Bishop of Chester's Case, with Relation to the Wardenship of Manchester (Oxford, 1721)
 A. Boyer, The History of the Reign of Queen Anne Digested into Annals, 11 vols (1703–13)
 H. de Bracton [attrib.], De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliæ (1569)
 R. Brady, A Continuation of the Complete History of England (1700)
Summa de Legibus Angliæ que vocatur Bretone (c. 1530; 1640)
 R. Brooke, La Graunde Abridgement (1573)
Reports of Edward Bulstrode (1657–9)
 R. Burn, Ecclesiastical Law, 2 vols (1763)
- R. Burn, The Justice of the Peace and Parish Officer, 2 vols (1755)
 J. Burrow, Reports of Cases ... in the Court of King's Bench ... Part the Fourth, 5 vols (1766–80)
 J. Burrow, A Series of the Decisions of the Court of King's Bench upon Settlement-cases (1768)
Codex Justinianus
 Caesar, Commentarii de Bello Gallico
- W. Camden, Britannia, sive Florentissimorum regnorum Angliæ, Scotiæ, Hiberniæ (1586; 1594)
 W. Camden, Annales rerum Anglicarum et Hibernicarum, regnante Elizabetha (1615)
The Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical of 1603 (1604).
 Julius Capitolinus [attrib.], Historia Augusta
 Capitularies of Louis the Pious
 T. Carte, A General History of England, 4 vols (1747–55)
 T. Carthew, Reports of Cases Adjudged ... in the Court of King's Bench (1728)
 E. Chamberlayne, Angliæ Notitia, or the Present State of England (1669–1707)
 Cicero, Epistulæ ad Atticum
 Cicero, Brutus
 Cicero, De legibus
 Cicero, De re publica
 Cicero, Philippicæ
 Cicero, Pro domo sua, ad pontifices
 Cicero, Pro Murena
 Cicero [attrib.] Rhetorica ad Herennium
 'A Dialogue Concerning Education' in E. Hyde, earl of Clarendon, A Collection of Several Tracts (1727) see also Lord Clar.
 E. Coke, The Compleat Copy-holder (1630)
 E. Coke, The First Part of the Institutes of the Laws of England; or A Commentary upon Littleton (1628)
Codex Justinianus
Journals of the House of Commons (1742–)
 R. Comberbach, Reports of Several Cases ... in the Court of King's Bench (1724)
 E. Cleirac, Us et Coustumes de la Mer (Rouen, 1671)
 J. Cowell, Institutiones iuris Anglicani (Oxford, 1676)
 J. Cowell, Νομοθέτης, The Interpreter (Cambridge, 1607)
 [T. Craig], Jus Feudale Tribus Libris Comprehensum ... Authore ... Thoma Cragio (Edinburgh, 1655; Leipzig, 1716)
The Reports of Sir George Croke Knight (1657)
The First Part ... of the Reports of Sir George Croke Kt (1661)
The Second Part of the Reports of Sir George Croke Knight (1659)

- Crompt. A. Fitzherbert and R. Crompton, L'Office et Auctorité de Justices de Peace (1583)
- Dalt., Dalton of sheriffs, of sheriffs, Dalt. M. Dalton, Officium Vicecomitum, or, The Office and Authoritie of Sheriffs (1623)
- Dalt. just., Mr Dalton just. M. Dalton, The Countrey Iustice (1618)
- Dav. [J. Davies], Le Primer Report des Cases & Matters en Ley ... en les Courts del Roy en Ireland (Dublin, 1615)
- Decretal.* Decretals, collected (various editions)
- Dewes, d'Ewes journ. S. D'Ewes, The Journals of all the Parliaments during the reign of Queen Elizabeth (1682)
- dialogue of the exchequer diversity of courts see Madox
- Domat's treatise of laws, Domat. A. Fitzherbert [attrib.], Diversite de Courtes et leur Jurisdictions (1523) tr. as The Diversity of Courts (1646)
- Dr and St., Dr & Stud. J. Domat, Les Loix Civiles dans leur Ordre Naturel (Paris, 1689), tr. as The Civil Law in its Natural Order, 2 vols (1720)
- Dr Taylor's ... Elem. of civil law C. St German, Doctor and Student: Or, Dialogues between a Doctor of Divinity and a Student in the Laws of England (1528–31; 1687)
- Dufresne J. Taylor, Elements of the Civil Law (Cambridge, 1755)
- Dugdale of the troubles C. Dufresne du Cange, Glossarium ad Scriptores Mediae et Infimae Latinitatis, 6 vols (Paris, 1678; 1733–6)
- Dugdale Orig. jurid. W. Dugdale, A Short View of the late troubles in England (Oxford, 1681)
- Dyer W. Dugdale, Origines Juridiciales, or, Historical Memorials of the English Laws (1666)
- Edm. Spenser's state of Ireland. edit. Hughes [J. Dyer], Cy Ensuoent Ascuns Nouel Cases (1585)
- Epistol. Innocent. IV. in M. Paris* The Works of Mr. Edmund Spenser, ed. J. Hughes, 6 vols (1715), vi. 51–214
- ER see M. Paris, Chronica Majora
- F. N. B. English Reports
- Feud.* A. Fitzherbert, La Novelle Natura Brevium (1534)
- Ff.* Libri Feudorum
- Finch. L. Justinian's Digest
- Fitzg. H. Finch, Law, or A Discourse Thereof (1627; 1678)
- Fitzh. Abr. J. Fitz-Gibbons, The Reports of Several Cases Argued and Adjudged in the Court of King's Bench at Westminster (1732)
- Fleetwood, chronicon pretiosum A. Fitzherbert, La Graunde Abridgement, 3 vols (1514–17)
- Fleta, Flet. W. Fleetwood, Chronicon Preciosum: or An Account of English Money (1707)
- Foley Fleta, seu Commentarius Iuris Anglicani, ed. J. Selden (1647)
- Folkes on English coins R. Foley, Laws relating to the Poor, from the forty-third of Queen Elizabeth to the third of King George II (1739)
- Fortesc., Fortesc. de laud. LL., Fortesc. M. Folkes, Tables of English Silver and Gold Coins (1763)
- de L. L., Fort. de LL* J. Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliae (1543?)
- Fortesc. Al. J. Fortescue Aland, Reports of Select Cases in all the Courts of Westminster Hall (1748)
- Foster, Foster of homicide, Foster Rep., M. Foster, A Report of Some Proceedings ... for the Trial of the Rebels in the Year 1746 (Oxford, 1762)
- Foster's reports Gervase of Canterbury, 'Acta Pontificum Cantuariensis Ecclesie', in Historiae Anglicanae Decem Scriptores, ed. R. Twysden (1652)
- Gervas. Dorobern. Act. Pontif. Cantuar. E. Gibson, Codex Juris Ecclesiastici Anglicani, 2 vols (1713; Oxford, 1761)
- Gibs. cod., bishop Gibson's codex Camden's Britannia, Newly Translated into English: with Large Additions and Improvements, ed. E. Gibson (1695)
- Gibson's Britan. G.(or J.) Gilbert, The History and Practice of the Court of Common Pleas (1737)
- Gilb. Hist. C.P. G.(or J.) Gilbert, A Treatise of the Court of Exchequer (1758)
- Gilb. Hist. Exch., Gilb hist. exch. G.(or J.) Gilbert, Reports of Cases in Equity (1734)
- Gilb. Rep. Ranulf de Glanvill [attrib.], Tractatus de Legibus et Consuetudinibus Regni Angliae (c. 1554)
- Glanv., Glanvil

- Goldast. constit. imper.
Gr. Coustum., Grand Coustumier
- Gravin. Orig.
 Grotius, de aequitate
- Grot., Grotius, de jur. b. & p.
 Hale, Hist. C. L., Hale Hist.
 Hale, Hist. P. C., H. P. C., Hal. P.C.
- Hale of parl.
- Hawk. P. C., Haw. P. C.
 Hearne ad Guil. Neubr. Hearne, Cart.
ad Guil. Neubr.
 Hob.
 Hoved., R. Hoved.
- Hume
- Hutt.
 Inst.
 Joan. Sarisburiens. Polycrat.
 Jones, I Jones
 2 Jones, T. Jones
- Justinian, Inst.
 Keb.
- Keilw.
- Kennet. par. antiq.
 Kennet's life of Somner
- King James's works
- Lambard. Archeion, Lamb. Archeion
- Lambard, of constables
- Lambard, laws of Henry I Latch, Latch. Rep.
 Law-tracts, 4to. Oxon. 1771
- Ld Raym.
- Leon.
Leon. Constit.
 Lev. life of ... North
- Lindenbrog. Cod. LL. antiq.
 Litt.
 Livy
LL. Canut; Edw., Edw. Confess.,
Ethelr. A.D. 1008., Henrici Primi
LL. Wisigoth.
 Locke, Education
 Locke, Hum. Und.
- M. Goldast, Constitutiones Imperiales, 4 vols (Frankfurt, 1607–13)
Le Grand Coutumier ... de Normandie (Rouen, 1483); also ed.
 G. Le Rouillé (Rouen, 1539)
 G. Gravina, Originum Iuris Civilis, 3 vols (Naples, 1713)
 H. Grotius, Libellus Singularis de Aequitate, Indulgentia et Facilitate (Goes, Zeeland, 1656)
 H. Grotius, De Jure Belli ac Pacis (Paris, 1625; Amsterdam, 1720)
 M. Hale, The History of the Common Law of England (1713)
 M. Hale, Historia Placitorum Coronae. The History of the Pleas of the Crown, ed. S. Emlyn, 2 vols (1736)
 M. Hale [attrib.], The Original Institution, Power and Jurisdiction of Parliaments (1707)
 W. Hawkins, A Treatise of the Pleas of the Crown, 2 vols (1716–21)
 [William of Newburgh], Historia sive Chronica Rerum Anglicarum, ed. T. Hearne, 3 vols (Oxford, 1719)
The Reports of that Learned Sir Henry Hobart (1641)
 Roger de Hoveden (Howden) in Rerum Anglicarum Scriptores post Bedam praecipui, ed. H. Savile (1596)
 D. Hume, The History of England, from the Invasion of Julius Caesar to the Revolution in 1688, 2 vols (1762)
The Reports of ... Sir Richard Hutton (1656)
 E. Coke, Institutes of the Lawes of England, 4 vols (1628–44)
 John of Salisbury, Policraticus (Leyden, 1639)
 W. Jones, Les Reports de Sir William Jones (1675)
 T. Jones, Les Reports de Divers Special Cases (1695) tr. as Reports of Several Special Cases (1729)
Imperator Iustiniani Libri IV (Antwerp, 1675)
 [J. Keble], Reports in the Court of Kings Bench at Westminster, 3 vols (1685)
Relationes quorundam Casuum Selectorum ex Libris Roberti Keilwey (1602)
 W. Kennett, Parochial Antiquities (Oxford, 1695)
 W. Kennet, 'The life of Mr. Somner', in W. Somner, A Treatise of the Roman Ports and Forts in Kent (Oxford, 1693)
The Workes of the Most High and Mighty Prince, James, ed. J. Montagu (1616)
 W. Lambarde, Archeion, or A Discourse upon the High Courts of Justice in England (1635)
 W. Lambarde, The Duties of Constables, Borsholders, Tythingmen (1583)
 W. Lambarde, Archaionomia (1568)
 J. Latch, Plusieurs tres-bons Cases (1662)
 W. Blackstone, Tracts, chiefly relating to the Antiquities and Laws of England, 2 vols (Oxford, 1771)
 Robert, Lord Raymond, Reports of Cases ... in the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, 2 vols (1743)
 W. Leonard, Reports and Cases of Law, 4 vols (1658–75)
Leonis Novellae Constitutiones
Les Reports de Sr. Creswell Levinz, 3 vols (1702)
 R. North, The Life of the Rt. Hon. Francis North, Baron of Guildford (1742)
 F. Lindenbrog, Codex Legum Antiquarum (Frankfurt, 1613)
 T. Littleton, Tenures (c. 1481) Livy, Ab urbe condita libri
 see Wilkins
Leges Wisigothorum see Lindenbrog
 J. Locke, Some Thoughts Concerning Education (1695)
 J. Locke, An Essay Concerning Human Understanding (1690)

- Locke, on Gov., on government
 Lord Clar. Hist., lord Clarendon's history, Hist. Rebell.
 Lord Clar. continuation
- lord Lyttelton's life of Henry II.
- Lords Journ.
 Lowth's Oratio Crewiana
 Lutw.
 M. Paris, Matth. Paris
 M. Paris, life of John II
- Madox Disceptat. epistolar. Madox.
 hist. exch.
 [Magna Carta] edit. Oxon. 1759
- Mar.
Memorand. Scacch', Scacch., Memorand'
Scacc' 20 Edw. I., Mem. Scacch. 20 Edw. I.
- Milles's catalogue of honour
 Mirr., Horn's Mirror, the mirror, Mirror
- Mod.
 Mod. Un. Hist.
- Molloy de jur. maritim., Molloy
de jure maritimo.
- Montesq. Esp. L., Montesq.
Sp. L., Sp. L., Sp. of L.
- Moor.
 Nov.
 Noy Noy's max., Noy's Max.
- ODNB
- Ovid. Fast.
 P. W., P. Will., P. W<sup>ms</sup>
- Palm.
 Peregrin. de jure. fisc.
 Pers.
 Petavius's chronological history Petit. Leg. Att.
 Plowd.
 Polydor. Vergil. Hist.
 Potter. Antiqu., Potter's Antiq., Pott. Antiqu., Pott. Antiq.
 Pryn. Append. to Aur. Reg.
 Pryn. Aur. Reg., Aur. Reg.
 Pryn. Brev. Parl.
 Pryn. on 4 Inst., Pryn. 4 Inst.
- Prynne parl. writs.
- Prynne, Signal Loyalty
- J. Locke, Two Treatises of Government (1689)
 E. Hyde, earl of Clarendon, The History of the Rebellion and Civil Wars in England, 3 vols (Oxford, 1702–4)
The Life of Edward Earl of Clarendon ... A Continuation (Oxford, 1759)
 G. Lyttelton, Baron Lyttelton, The History of the Life of King Henry the Second, 4 vols (1767–71)
Journals of the House of Lords (1767–)
 R. Lowth, De Sacra Poesi Hebraeorum (Oxford, 1753)
 E. Lutwyche, Un Livre des Entries, 2 vols (1704)
 M. Paris, Chronica Majora, ed. M. Parker (1571)
Gesta Abbatum Monasterii Sancti Albani, in Matthae Paris monachi Albanensis Angli, Historia Major, ed. W. Wats (1640)
- T. Madox, The History and Antiquities of the Exchequer (1711)
 W. Blackstone, The Great Charter and Charter of the Forest (Oxford, 1759)
 J. March, Reports: or, New Cases (1648)
 'Memoranda in Scaccario de tempore Regis Edvardi Primi', in J. Maynard, Les Reports des Cases argue & adjudge in le temps del' Roy Edward le Second (1678)
 T. Milles, The Catalogue of Honor (1610)
 A. Horne [attrib.], The Booke Called, The Mirrour of Justices (1646)
Modern Reports, or Select Cases, 12 vols (1682–1741)
The Modern part of an Universal history, from the Earliest Account of Time, 44 vols (1759–66)
 C. Molloy, De Jure Maritimo et Navali: Or, a Treatise of Affairs Maritime, and of Commerce (1676; 1744)
 C.–L. de Secondat, Baron de Montesquieu, L'Esprit des Loix (Paris, 1748); tr. as The Spirit of Laws, 2 vols (1750)
Cases Collect and Report per Sir Fra[ncis] Moore (1663) Justinian's Novellae Constitutiones
 W. Noy, Reports and Cases (1656)
 W. Noy, A Treatise of the Principall Grounds and Maximes of the Lawes (1641)
Oxford Dictionary of National Biography, ed. C. Matthew and B. Harrison, 60 vols (Oxford, 2004) and at oxforddnb.com Ovid, Fasti
 P. Williams, Reports of Cases ... in the High Court of Chancery, 3 vols (1741–6)
Les Reports de Sir Gefrey Palmer (1678)
 M. Pellegrini, De Privilegiis et Juribus Fiscis, 8 vols (Venice, 1604) Persius, Satirarum Liber
 D. Petavius, The History of the World; or, an Account of Time (1659)
 S. Petit, Leges Atticae (Paris, 1635)
Les Comentaries, ou les Reports de Edmund Plowden, 2 vols (1571–8)
 P. Vergil, Anglica Historia (Basle, 1533)
 J. Potter, Archaeologiae Graecae: or, The Antiquities of Greece (1697)
 W. Prynne, An Additional Appendix to Aurum Reginae (1668)
 W. Prynne, Aurum Reginae (1668)
 W. Prynne, Brevia Parliamentaria (1662)
 W. Prynne, Brief Animadversions on ... the Fourth Part of the Institutes of the Lawes of England ... compiled by ... Sir Edward Cooke (1669)
 W. Prynne, Brief Register, Kalendar, and Survey of Parliamentary Writs, 4 vols (1659–64)
 W. Prynne, The Signal Loyalty and Devotion of Gods True Saints and pious Christians towards their Kings (1660)

- Pryn. Plea for lords.
Prynne's demurrer
- Pryn. Rec.
- Puff., Puffendorf., Puff. L. of N. and N., Puff. L. of N., Law of N. and N., L. of N.
Ranulph Cestrensis Raym.
regiam majestatem
Rep.
Ric. de Hagustald
- Riley's Plac. Parl., Ril. plac. parl.
Robertson. Cha. V., Hist. Cha. V.
- Roger of Hoveden
Roll. Abr.
- Roll. Rep.
Rot. Parl.
- Rushworth. part 3
Rym. Foed., Rym.
- Salk.
- Sanderson de conscient. obligat. prael.
- Sandford's geneal. hist., Sandford's gen. hist.
- Sav.
Scobell., Scobell's collection
Seld. ad Eadmer.
- Selden, Baronage, Seld. baronage Selden in Fletam., Mr Selden, in Flet.
Seld. in Hengham magna.
- Seld. Jan. Angl., Selden. Jan. Anglor.
Seld. review of Tith., Seld. of tith.
Seld. tit. of hon., Selden. tit. hon.
Sherlock of options
- Show.
Shower., Show. Parl. C.
Sid.
- Skinn.
Smith's commonw., Commonw. of Eng.
Spelm. Apology.
- Spelman. Concil.
- Spelm. Gloss., Glossar., Gl.
Spelm. Hist. R. Joh. apud Wilkins.
Spelman of parliaments
- Spelman of tythes
- W. Prynne, A Plea for the Lords (1658)
W. Prynne, A Short Demurrer to the Jewes Long discontinued Remitter into England (1656)
W. Prynne, An Exact Chronological Vindication and Historical Demonstration, 3 vols (1665–8) [Prynne's Records]
S. von Pufendorf, De Jure Naturae et Gentium (Lund, 1672), tr. as Of the Law of Nature and Nations (1729)
Ranulph Higden, Polychronicon (1482)
T. Raymond, The Reports of Divers Special Cases (1696)
Regiam Majestatem, tr. J. Skene (Edinburgh, 1609)
Les Reports de Edward Coke, 13 vols (1600–59)
Richard of Hexham, 'De Gestis Regis Stephani', in R. Twysden, Historiae Anglicanae Scriptores Decem (1652)
W. Ryley, Placita Parlamentaria (1661)
W. Robertson, The History of the Reign of the Emperor Charles V, 3 vols (1769)
see Hoved., R. Hoved.
H. Rolle, Un Abridgment des Plusieurs Cases et Resolutions del Common Ley, 2 vols (1668)
Les Reports de Henry Rolle, 2 vols (1675–6)
Rotuli Parliamentorum; Ut Et Petitiones Et Placita in Parlamento Tempore Edwardi R. I., 7 vols (1767–77)
J. Rushworth, Historical Collections: The Third Part, 2 vols (1691)
T. Rymer and R. Sanderson, eds., Foedera, Conventiones, Literae 20 vols (1704–32)
W. Salkeld, Reports of Cases adjudg'd in the Court of King's Bench, 3 vols (1717–24)
R. Sanderson, De Obligatione Conscientiae: Praelectiones Decem Oxonii in Schola Theologica (1682)
F. Sandford, A Genealogical History of the Kings of England and Monarchs of Great Britain (1677)
Les Reports de Sir John Savile (1675)
A Collection of Acts and Ordinances, ed. H. Scobell, 2 vols (1657–8)
Eadmeri monachi Cantuariensis Historia Nouorum, ed. J. Selden (1623)
J. Selden, The Priviledges of the Baronage of England (1642)
Fleta, seu, Commentarius Juris Anglicani, ed. J. Selden (1647)
J. Selden, 'Hengham magna', in De Laudibus Legum Angliae written by Sir Iohn Fortescve (1616)
J. Selden, Jani Anglorum Facies Altera (1610)
J. Selden, The Historie of Tithes (1618)
J. Selden, Titles of Honor (1614)
T. Sherlock, The Option: or, an Enquiry into the Grounds of the Claim made by the Archbishop (1756)
The Reports of Sir Bartholomew Shower, 2 vols (1708–20)
B. Shower, Cases in Parliament, Resolved and Adjudged (1698)
T. Siderfin, Les Reports des Divers Special Cases ... en le Court del Bank le Roy, 2 vols (1683–4)
R. Skinner, Reports of Cases ... in the Court of King's Bench (1728)
T. Smith, De Republica Anglorum (1583)
H. Spelman, An Apology for the Treatise De non Temerandis Ecclesiis (1646)
H. Spelman, Concilia, Decreta, Leges, Constitutiones, in re Ecclesiarum Orbis Britannici (1664)
H. Spelman, Glossarium Archaeologicum (1664; 1687)
see Wilkins
H. Spelman, 'Of Parliaments' in Reliquiae Spelmannianae, ed. E. Gibson (Oxford, 1698)
H. Spelman, The Larger Treatise Concerning Tithes (1647)

- Spelm. W. I.
State trials, St. Tr.
- Statutes of the Realm*
Staunford. P. C., Staunf. P. C., Staundf. P. C.
Stiernhook de jure Sueonum, Stiernh. de jure Goth.
Stra.
Style
Tacitus, Ann., Hist.
Tacitus, de morib. German., Tac. de. M.G.
Tacitus, vit. Agricolae
Taylor's elements of civil law Temple's Mem. part 3
- Tremain. P. C.
treasure françois
- Van Bynkershoek de foro legator., Van Bynkersh.
Van Leeuwen, Dedicatio corporis juris civilis., Van Leeuwen in Ff., dedication Vaugh.
Ventr.
Viner, abridgment
- Vinnius in Inst.*
- Walsingh., Walsingham Hist.
Warburton's alliance, Warburt. alliance
West. Symbol.
Whitelocke of parl., Whitelocke on Parl., Whitelocke Wilk. Wilkins,
- William of Malmsb. de gest. reg.,
William of Malmsb., Will. Malmsb.
William of Newbury
- see Wilkins*
A Complete Collection of State-Trials, and Proceedings, ed. S. Emlyn, 8 vols (2nd edn, 1730–5)
The Statutes of the Realm, ed. J. Raithby et al. (9 vols., 1810–25)
W. Staunford, Les Plees del Coron (1557)
J. Stiernhöök, De Jure Sueonum et Gothorum Vetusto (Stockholm, 1672)
J. Strange, Reports of Adjudged Cases, 2 vols (1755)
W. Style, Narrationes Modernae, or Modern Reports (1658) Tacitus, Annales; Historiae
Tacitus, Germania
Tacitus, De Vita et Moribus Iulii Agricolae
J. Taylor, Elements of the Civil Law (Cambridge, 1755)
W. Temple, Memoirs. Part III. From the Peace concluded 1679 (1709)
J. Tremaine, Placita Coronae: or Pleas of the Crown (1723)
A. de Ranconnet and Jean Nicot, Thresor de la Langue Françoise, tant Ancienne que Moderne (Paris, 1606)
C. van Bijnkershoek, De Foro Legatorum (Leiden, 1721)
- Corporis Iuris Civilis*, S. van Leeuwen et al. (eds.) (Amsterdam, 1663)
The Reports and Arguments of ... Sir John Vaughan (1677)
The Reports of Sir Peyton Ventris, 2 vols (1696)
C. Viner, General Abridgment of Law and Equity, 23 vols (Aldershot, 1742–53)
A. Vinnius, Institutionum Imperialium Commentarius Academicus et Forensis, 4 vols (Amsterdam, 1642)
Thomas of Walsingham, Historia Brevis, ed. M. Parker (1574)
W. Warburton, The Alliance between Church and State (1736)
W. West, Symbolaeographia (1590)
B. Whitelock, Notes upon the King's Writt for Choosing Members of Parlement, ed. C. Morton, 2 vols (1766)
D. Wilkins, Leges Anglo-Saxonicae Ecclesiasticae et Civiles ... subjungitur Henr. Spelmanni Codex Legum Veterum Statutorum Regni Angliae (1721)
William of Malmesbury, De Gestis Regum Anglorum in Rerum Anglicarum Scriptores post Bedam Praecipui, ed. H. Savile (1596)
William of Newburgh, Guilelmi Newbrigensis Historia Rerum Anglicarum sive Chronicon (Oxford, 1719)

COMMENTARIES
ON THE LAWS OF ENGLAND.

BOOK THE FIRST.

BY WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, Esq.
VINERIAN PROFESSOR OF LAW, AND SOLICITOR GENERAL TO HER MAJESTY.

OXFORD,
PRINTED AT THE CLARENDON PRESS.
M. DCC. LXV.

TO
THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY, THE FOLLOWING VIEW OF THE LAWS AND CONSTITUTION
OF ENGLAND,
THE IMPROVEMENT AND PROTECTION OF WHICH HAVE DISTINGUISHED THE REIGN OF HER MAJESTY'S ROYAL CONSORT, IS,
WITH ALL GRATITUDE AND HUMILITY,
MOST RESPECTFULLY INSCRIBED
BY HER DUTIFUL AND MOST OBEDIENT SERVANT,

WILLIAM BLACKSTONE.

PREFACE.

i

THE following sheets contain the substance of a course of lectures on the laws of England, which were read by the author in the university of Oxford. His original plan took its rise in the year 1753: and, notwithstanding the novelty of such an attempt in this age and country, and the prejudices usually conceived against any innovations in the established mode of education, he had the satisfaction to find (and he acknowledges it with a mixture of pride and gratitude) that his endeavours were encouraged and patronized by those, both in the university and out of it, whose good opinion and esteem he was principally desirous to obtain.

THE death of Mr VINER in 1756, and his ample benefaction to the university for promoting the study of the law, produced about two years afterwards a regular and public establishment of what the author had privately undertaken. The knowledge of our laws and constitution was adopted as a liberal science by general academical authority; competent endowments were decreed for the support of a lecturer, and the perpetual encouragement of students; and the compiler of the ensuing commentaries had the honour to be elected the first Vinerian professor.

ii

IN this situation he was led, both by duty and inclination, to investigate the elements of the law, and the grounds of our civil polity, with greater assiduity and attention than many have thought it necessary to do. And yet all, who of late years have attended the public administration of justice, must be sensible that a masterly acquaintance with the general spirit of laws and the principles of universal jurisprudence, combined with an accurate knowledge of our own municipal constitutions, their original, reason, and history, hath given a beauty and energy to many modern judicial decisions, with which our ancestors were wholly unacquainted. If, in the pursuit of these inquiries, the author hath been able to rectify any errors which either himself or others may have heretofore imbibed, his pains will be sufficiently answered: and, if in some points he is still mistaken, the candid and judicious reader will make due allowances for the difficulties of a search so new, so extensive, and so laborious.

THE labour indeed of these researches, and of a regular attention to his duty, for a series of so many years, he hath found inconsistent with his health, as well as his other avocations: and hath therefore desired the university's permission to retire from his office, after the conclusion of the annual course in which he is at present engaged. But the hints, which he had collected for the use of his pupils, having been thought by some of his more experienced friends not wholly unworthy of the public eye, it is therefore with the less reluctance that he now commits them to the press: though probably the little degree of reputation, which their author may have acquired by the candor of an audience (a test widely different from that of a deliberate perusal) would have been better consulted by a total suppression of his lectures;—had that been a matter intirely within his power.

iii

(1) FOR the truth is, that the present publication is as much the effect of necessity, as it is of choice. The notes which were taken by his hearers, have by some of them (too partial in his favour) been thought worth revising and transcribing; and these transcripts have been frequently lent to others. Hence copies have been multiplied, in their nature imperfect, if not erroneous; some of which have fallen into mercenary hands, and become the object of clandestine sale. Having therefore so much reason to apprehend a surreptitious impression, he chose rather to submit his own errors to the world, than to seem answerable for those of other men. And, with this apology, he commits himself to the indulgence of the public.

⟨2⟩

COMMENTARIES

1

ON THE

LAWS OF ENGLAND.

INTRODUCTION.

3

SECTION THE FIRST.

ON THE STUDY OF THE LAW.*

MR VICE-CHANCELLOR, AND GENTLEMEN OF THE UNIVERSITY,

THE general expectation of so numerous and respectable an audience, the novelty, and (I may add) the importance of the duty required from this chair, must unavoidably be productive of great diffidence and apprehensions in him who has the honour to be placed in it. He must be sensible how much will depend upon his conduct in the infancy of a study, which is now first adopted by public academical authority; which has generally been reputed (however unjustly) of a dry and unfruitful nature; and of which the theoretical, elementary parts have hitherto received a very moderate share of cultivation. He cannot but reflect that, if either his plan of instruction be crude and injudicious, or the execution of it lame and superficial, it will cast a damp upon the farther progress of this most useful and most rational branch of learning; and may defeat for a time the public-spirited design of our wise and munificent benefactor.<sup>1</sup> 4

And this he must more especially dread, when he feels by experience how unequal his abilities are (unassisted by preceding examples) to complete, in the manner he could wish, so extensive and arduous a task; since he freely confesses, that his former more private attempts have fallen very short of his own ideas of perfection. And yet the candour he has already experienced, and this last transcendent mark of regard, his present nomination by the free and unanimous suffrage of a great and learned university, (an honour to be ever remembered with the deepest and most affectionate gratitude) these testimonies of your public judgment must entirely supersede his own, and forbid him to believe himself totally insufficient for the labour at least of this employment. One thing he will venture to hope for, and it certainly shall be his constant aim, by diligence and attention to atone for his other defects; esteeming, that the best return, which he can possibly make for your favourable opinion of his capacity, will be his unwearied endeavours in some little degree to deserve it.

THE science thus committed to his charge, to be cultivated, methodized, and explained in a course of academical lectures, is that of the laws and constitution of our own country: a species of knowledge, in which the gentlemen of England have been more remarkably deficient than those of all Europe besides. In most of the nations on the continent, where the civil or imperial law<sup>2</sup> under different modifications is closely interwoven with the municipal laws of the land, no gentleman, or at least no scholar, thinks his education is completed, till he has attended a course or two of lectures, both upon the institutes of Justinian and the local constitutions of his native soil, under the very eminent professors that abound in their several universities. And in the northern parts of our own island,<sup>3</sup> where also the municipal laws are frequently connected with the civil, it is difficult to meet with a person of liberal education, who is destitute of a competent knowledge in that science, which is to be the guardian of his natural rights and the rule of his civil conduct.

* Read in Oxford at the opening of the Vinerian lectures; 25 Oct. 1758.

<sup>1</sup> Charles Viner, who at his death in 1756 bequeathed his estate to endow the Vinerian professorship and fellowships in English law.

<sup>2</sup> i.e. Roman law (on which see further I. 60–1).

- 5 NOR have the imperial laws been totally neglected even in the English nation. A general acquaintance with their decisions has ever been deservedly considered as no small accomplishment of a gentleman; and a fashion has prevailed, especially of late, to transport the growing hopes of this island to foreign universities, in Switzerland, Germany, and Holland; which, though infinitely inferior to our own in every other consideration, have been looked upon as better nurseries of the civil, or (which is nearly the same) of their own municipal law. In the mean time it has been the peculiar lot of our admirable system of laws, to be neglected, and even unknown, by all but one practical profession; though built upon the soundest foundations, and approved by the experience of ages.

FAR be it from me to derogate from the study of the civil law, considered (apart from any binding authority) as a collection of written reason. No man is more thoroughly persuaded of the general excellence of its rules, and the usual equity of its decisions; nor is better convinced of its use as well as ornament to the scholar, the divine, the statesman, and even the common lawyer. But we must not carry our veneration so far as to sacrifice our Alfred and Edward to the manes [revered ghosts] of Theodosius and Justinian:<sup>4</sup> we must not prefer the edict of the praetor, or the rescript of the Roman emperor, to our own immemorial customs, or the sanctions of an English parliament; unless we can also prefer the despotic monarchy of Rome and Byzantium, for whose meridians the former were calculated, to the free constitution of Britain, which the latter are adapted to perpetuate.

- 6 WITHOUT detracting therefore from the real merit which abounds in the imperial law, I hope I may have leave to assert, that if an Englishman must be ignorant of either the one or the other, he had better be a stranger to the Roman than the English institutions. For I think it an undeniable position, that a competent knowledge of the laws of that society, in which we live, is the proper accomplishment of every gentleman and scholar; an highly useful, I had almost said essential, part of liberal and polite education. And in this I am warranted by the example of antient Rome; where, as Cicero informs us<sup>a</sup>, the very boys were obliged to learn the twelve tables<sup>5</sup> by heart, as a carmen necessarium or indispensable lesson, to imprint on their tender minds an early knowledge of the laws (1) and constitutions of their country.

BUT as the long and universal neglect of this study, with us in England, seems in some degree to call in question the truth of this evident position, it shall therefore be the business of this introductory discourse, in the first place to demonstrate the

<sup>a</sup> De Legg. 2. 23.

<sup>3</sup> In Scotland, a separate legal system continued after the 1707 Union with England.

<sup>4</sup> The Anglo-Saxon kings Alfred and Edward were regarded as among the founders of English law, so not to be displaced by Justinian and his predecessor, as Roman Emperor in the East, Theodosius.

<sup>5</sup> The twelve tables (Duodecim tabulae), supposedly the first codification of Roman law.

utility of some general acquaintance with the municipal law of the land, by pointing out its particular uses in all considerable situations of life. Some conjectures will then be offered with regard to the causes of neglecting this useful study: to which will be subjoined a few reflexions on the peculiar propriety of reviving it in our own universities.

AND, first, to demonstrate the utility of some acquaintance with the laws of the land, let us only reflect a moment on the singular frame and polity of that land, which is governed by this system of laws. A land, perhaps the only one in the universe, in which political or civil liberty is the very end and scope of the constitution<sup>b</sup>. This liberty, rightly understood, consists in the power of doing whatever the laws permit<sup>c</sup>; which is only to be effected by a general conformity of all orders and degrees to those equitable rules of action, by which the meanest individual is protected from the insults and oppression of the greatest.<sup>6</sup> As therefore every subject is interested in the preservation of the laws, it is incumbent upon every man to be acquainted with those at least, with which he is immediately concerned; lest he incur the censure, as well as inconvenience, of living in society without knowing the obligations which it lays him under. And thus much may suffice for persons of inferior condition, who have neither 7 time nor capacity to enlarge their views beyond that contracted sphere in which they are appointed to move. But those, on whom nature and fortune have bestowed more abilities and greater leisure, cannot be so easily excused. These advantages are given them, not for the benefit of themselves only, but also of the public: and yet they cannot, in any scene of life, discharge properly their duty either to the public or themselves, without some degree of knowledge in the laws. To evince this the more clearly, it may not be amiss to descend to a few particulars.

LET us therefore begin with our gentlemen of independent estates and fortune, the most useful as well as considerable body of men in the nation; whom even to suppose ignorant in this branch of learning is treated by Mr Locke<sup>d</sup> as a strange absurdity.<sup>7</sup> It is their landed property, with its long and voluminous train of descents and conveyances, settlements, entails, and incumbrances, that forms the most intricate and most extensive object of legal knowledge. The thorough comprehension of these, in all their minute distinctions, is perhaps too laborious a task for any but a lawyer by profession: yet still the understanding of a few leading principles, relating to estates and conveyancing, may form some check and guard upon a gentleman's inferior agents, and preserve him at least from very gross and notorious imposition.

AGAIN, the policy of all laws has made some forms necessary in the wording of last wills and testaments, and more with regard to their attestation. An ignorance in these must always be of dangerous consequence, to such as by choice or necessity compile

<sup>b</sup> Montesq. Esp. L. l. 11. c. 5.

<sup>c</sup> Facultas ejus, quod cuique facere libet, nisi quid vi, aut jure prohibetur. [Its essence is the power of doing whatsoever we please, unless prohibited by force or law.] Inst. 1. 3. 1.

<sup>d</sup> Education. §. 187.

<sup>6</sup> Praise for the rule of law as a blessing unique to England was commonplace, especially after 1689: cf. D. Lemmings, Law and Government in England during the Long Eighteenth Century (Basingstoke, 2011), 3–4.

<sup>7</sup> The philosophical writings of John Locke were principal sources of reference for the Commentaries.

their own testaments without any technical assistance. Those who have attended the courts of justice are the best witnesses of the confusion and distresses that are hereby 8 occasioned in families; and of the difficulties that arise in discerning the true meaning of the testator, or sometimes in discovering any meaning at all: so that in the end his estate may often be vested quite contrary to these his enigmatical intentions, because perhaps he has omitted one or two formal words, which are necessary to ascertain the sense with indisputable legal precision, or has executed his will in the presence of fewer witnesses than the law requires.

BUT to proceed from private concerns to those of a more public consideration. All gentlemen of fortune are, in consequence of their property, liable to be called upon to establish the rights, to estimate the injuries, to weigh the accusations, and sometimes to dispose of the lives of their fellow-subjects, by serving upon juries.<sup>8</sup> In this situation (2) they are frequently to decide, and that upon their oaths, questions of nice importance, in the solution of which some legal skill is requisite; especially where the law and the fact, as it often happens, are intimately blended together. And the general incapacity, even of our best juries, to do this with any tolerable propriety has greatly debased their authority; and has unavoidably thrown more power into the hands of the judges, to direct, control, and even reverse their verdicts, than perhaps the constitution intended.<sup>9</sup>

BUT it is not as a juror only that the English gentleman is called upon to determine questions of right, and distribute justice to his fellow-subjects: it is principally with this order of men that the commission of the peace is filled. And here a very ample field is opened for a gentleman to exert his talents, by maintaining good order in his neighbourhood; by punishing the dissolute and idle; by protecting the peaceable and industrious; and, above all, by healing petty differences and preventing vexatious prosecutions. But, in order to attain these desirable ends, it is necessary that the magistrate should understand his business; and have not only the will, but the power also, (under which must be included the knowledge) of administering legal and effectual justice. Else, when he has mistaken his authority, through passion, through ignorance, 9 or absurdity, he will be the object of contempt from his inferiors, and of censure from those to whom he is accountable for his conduct.

YET farther; most gentlemen of considerable property, at some period or other in their lives, are ambitious of representing their country in parliament: and those, who are ambitious of receiving so high a trust, would also do well to remember its nature and importance. They are not thus honourably distinguished from the rest of their fellow-subjects, merely that they may privilege their persons, their estates, or their domestics;<sup>10</sup> that they may list under party banners; may grant or with-hold supplies; may vote with or vote against a popular or unpopular administration; but upon considerations far more interesting and important. They are the guardians of the English constitution; the makers, repealers, and interpreters of the English laws; delegated to watch, to check, and to avert every dangerous innovation, to propose, to adopt, and to cherish any solid and well-weighed improvement; bound by every tie of nature, of honour, and of religion, to transmit that constitution and those laws to their posterity, amended if possible, at least without any derogation. And how unbecoming must it appear in a member of the legislature to vote for a new law, who is utterly ignorant of the old! what kind of interpretation can he be enabled to give, who is a stranger to the text upon which he comments!

<sup>8</sup> See III, ch. 23, 'Of the Trial by Jury'.

<sup>9</sup> See I. 172–4.

<sup>10</sup> i.e. their servants. See I. 109–10.

INDEED it {3} is really amazing, that there should be no other state of life, no other occupation, art, or science, in which some method of instruction is not looked upon as requisite, except only the science of legislation, the noblest and most difficult of any. Apprenticeships are held necessary to almost every art, commercial or mechanical: a long course of reading and study must form the divine, the physician, and the practical professor of the laws: but every man of superior fortune thinks himself born a legislator. Yet Tully<sup>11</sup> was of a different opinion: “It is necessary, says he<sup>e</sup>, for a senator to be thoroughly acquainted with the constitution; and this, he declares, is a knowlege of the most extensive nature; a matter of science, of diligence, of reflexion; without which no senator can possibly be fit for his office.”

10

THE mischiefs that have arisen to the public from inconsiderate alterations in our laws, are too obvious to be called in question; and how far they have been owing to the defective education of our senators, is a point well worthy the public attention. The common law of England has fared like other venerable edifices of antiquity, which rash and unexperienced workmen have ventured to new-dress and refine, with all the rage of modern improvement. Hence frequently its symmetry has been destroyed, its proportions distorted, and its majestic simplicity exchanged for specious embellishments and fantastic novelties. For, to say the truth, almost all the perplexed questions, almost all the niceties, intricacies, and delays (which have sometimes disgraced the English, as well as other, courts of justice) owe their original not to the common law itself, but to innovations that have been made in it by acts of parliament; “overladen (as sir Edward Coke expresses it<sup>f</sup>) with provisoes and additions, and many times on a sudden penned or corrected by men of none or very little judgment in law.” This great and well-experienced judge declares, that in all his time he never knew two questions made upon rights merely depending upon the common law; and warmly laments the confusion introduced by ill-judging and unlearned legislators. “But if, he subjoins, acts of parliament were after the old fashion penned, by such only as perfectly knew what the common law was before the making of any act of parliament concerning that matter, as also how far forth former statutes had provided remedy for former mischiefs, and defects discovered by experience; then should very few questions in law arise, and the learned should not so often and so much perplex their heads to make atonement and peace, by construction of law, between insensible and disagreeing words, sentences, and

11

<sup>e</sup> De Legg. 3. 18. Est senatori necessarium nosse rempublicam; idque late patet:—genus hoc omne scientiae, diligentiae, memoriae est; sine quo paratus esse senator nullo pacto potest.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Rep. Pref.

<sup>11</sup> i.e. Cicero.

provisoers, as they now do.” And if this inconvenience was so heavily felt in the reign of queen Elizabeth, you may judge how the evil is increased in later times, when the statute book is swelled to ten times a larger bulk; unless it should be found, that the penners of our modern statutes have proportionably better informed themselves in the knowlege of the common law.

WHAT is said of our gentlemen in general, and the propriety of their application to the study of the laws of their country, will hold equally strong or still stronger with regard to the nobility of this realm, except only in the article of serving upon juries. But, instead of this, they have several peculiar provinces of far greater consequence and concern; being not only by birth hereditary counsellors of the crown, and judges upon their honour of the lives of their brother-peers, but also arbiters of the property of all their fellow-subjects, and that in the last resort. In this their judicial capacity they are bound to decide the nicest and most critical points of the law; to examine and correct such errors as have escaped the most experienced sages of the profession, the lord keeper and the judges of the courts at Westminster. Their sentence is final, decisive, irrevocable: no appeal, no correction, not even a review can be had: and to their determination, whatever it be, the inferior courts of justice must conform; otherwise the rule of property would no longer be uniform and steady.<sup>12</sup> 12 SHOULD a judge in the most subordinate jurisdiction be deficient in the knowlege of the law, it would reflect infinite contempt upon himself and disgrace upon those who employ him. And yet the consequence of his ignorance is comparatively very trifling and small: his judgment may be examined, and his errors rectified, by other courts. But how much more serious and affecting is the case of a superior judge, if without any skill in the laws he will boldly venture to decide a question, upon which the welfare and subsistence of whole families may depend! where the chance of his judging right, or wrong, is barely equal; and where, if he chanches to judge wrong, he does an injury of the most alarming nature, an injury without possibility of redress!

YET, vast as this trust is, it can no where be so properly reposed as in the noble hands where our excellent constitution has placed it: and therefore placed it, because, from the independence of their fortune and the dignity of their station, they are presumed to employ that leisure which is the consequence of both, in attaining a more extensive knowlege of the laws than persons of inferior rank: and because the founders of our polity relied upon that delicacy of sentiment, so peculiar to noble birth; which, as on the one hand it will prevent either interest or affection from interfering in questions of right, so on the other it will bind a peer in honour, an obligation which the law esteems equal to another’s oath, to be master of those points upon which it is his birthright to decide.

THE Roman pandects<sup>13</sup> will furnish us with a piece of history not unapplicable to our present purpose. Servius Sulpicius, a gentleman of the patrician order, and a celebrated orator, had occasion to take the opinion of Quintus Mutius Scaevola, the oracle of the Roman law; but for want of some knowlege in that science, could not so much as understand even the technical terms, which his friend was obliged to make use of. Upon which Mutius Scaevola could not forbear to upbraid him with this memorable reproof<sup>g</sup>, “that it was a shame for a patrician, a nobleman, and an orator of causes, to be ignorant of that law in which he was so peculiarly concerned.” This reproach made so deep an impression on Sulpicius, that he immediately applied himself to the study of the law; wherein he arrived to that proficiency, that he left behind him (4) about a hundred and fourscore volumes of his own compiling upon the subject; and became, in the opinion of Cicero<sup>h</sup>, a much more complete lawyer than even Mutius Scaevola himself. 13

<sup>12</sup> For the peerage see I. 104–5, 110–11, 255–9; and for the House of Lords as a supreme court of appeal, see III. 37.

<sup>13</sup> Pandects (Gk. pandektes, ‘all receiving’), i.e. Justinian’s Digest of Roman law, promulgated in the year 533.

I WOULD not be thought to recommend to our English nobility and gentry to become as great lawyers as Sulpicius; though he, together with this character, sustained likewise that of an excellent orator, a firm patriot, and a wise indefatigable senator; but the inference which arises from the story is this, that ignorance of the laws of the land hath ever been esteemed dishonourable, in those who are entrusted by their country to maintain, to administer, and to amend them.

BUT surely there is little occasion to enforce this argument any farther to persons of rank and distinction, if we of this place may be allowed to form a general judgment from those who are under our inspection: happy, that while we lay down the rule, we can also produce the example. You will therefore permit your professor to indulge both a public and private satisfaction, by bearing this open testimony; that in the infancy of these studies among us, they were favoured with the most diligent attendance, and pursued with the most unwearied application, by those of the noblest birth and most ample patrimony: some of whom are still the ornaments of this seat of learning; and others at a greater distance continue doing honour to its institutions, by comparing our polity and laws with those of other kingdoms abroad, or exerting their senatorial abilities in the councils of the nation at home.<sup>14</sup>

NOR will some degree of legal knowledge be found in the least superfluous to persons of inferior rank; especially those of the learned professions. The clergy in particular, besides the common obligations they are under in proportion to their rank and fortune, have also abundant reason, considered merely as clergymen, to be acquainted with many branches of the law, which are almost peculiar and appropriated to themselves alone. Such are the laws relating to advowsons, institutions, and inductions;<sup>15</sup> to simony, and simoniacal contracts; to uniformity, residence, and pluralities; to tithes and other ecclesiastical dues; to marriages (more especially of late)<sup>16</sup> and to a variety of other subjects, which are consigned to the care of their order by the provisions of particular statutes. To understand these aright, to discern what is warranted or enjoined, and what is forbidden by law, demands a sort of legal 14

<sup>g</sup> Ff. 1. 2. 2. §. 43. Turpe esse patricio, & nobili, & causas oranti, jus in quo versaretur ignorare.

<sup>h</sup> Brut. 41.

<sup>14</sup> Blackstone is referring here to the private course of lectures he established in 1753, and the attendance of students from noble families including William Petty, Viscount Fitzmaurice, and his brother Thomas Fitzmaurice.

<sup>15</sup> Technical terms concerning the installation of clergymen in benefices: see III. 167–8.

<sup>16</sup> Hardwicke's Marriage Act, 1753 (26 Geo. II. c. 33) imposed severe penalties on clergymen who officiated at clandestine unions.

apprehension; which is no otherwise to be acquired than by use and a familiar acquaintance with legal writers.

FOR the gentlemen of the faculty of physic,<sup>17</sup> I must frankly own that I see no special reason, why they in particular should apply themselves to the study of the law; unless in common with other gentlemen, and to complete the character of general and extensive knowlege; a character which their profession, beyond others, has remarkably deserved. They will give me leave however to suggest, and that not ludicrously, that it might frequently be of use to families upon sudden emergencies, if the physician were acquainted with the doctrine of last wills and testaments, at least so far as relates to the formal part of their execution.

BUT those gentlemen who intend to profess the civil and ecclesiastical laws in the spiritual and maritime courts of this kingdom, are of all men (next to common lawyers) the most indispensably obliged to apply themselves seriously to the study of our municipal laws. For the civil and canon laws, considered with respect to any intrinsic obligation, have no force or authority in this kingdom; they are no more binding in England than our laws are binding at Rome. But as far as these foreign laws, on account of some peculiar propriety, have in some particular cases, and in some particular courts, been introduced and allowed by our laws, so far they oblige, and no farther; their authority being wholly founded upon that permission and adoption. In 15 which we are not singular in our notions; for even in Holland, where the imperial law is much cultivated and its decisions pretty generally followed, we are informed by Van Leeuwen<sup>i</sup>, that, “it receives its force from custom and the consent of the people, either tacitly or expressly given: for otherwise, he adds, we should no more be bound by this law, than by that of the Almaines, the Franks, the Saxons, the Goths, the Vandals,<sup>18</sup> and other of the antient nations.” Wherefore, in all points in which the different systems depart from each other, the law of the land takes place of the law of Rome, whether antient or modern, imperial or pontifical. And in those of our English courts wherein a reception has been allowed to the civil and canon laws, if either they exceed the bounds of that reception, by extending themselves to other matters, than are permitted to them; or if such courts proceed according to the decisions of those laws, in cases wherein it is controlled by the law of the land, the common law in either instance both may, and frequently does, prohibit and annul their proceedings<sup>k</sup>: and it will not be a sufficient excuse for them to tell the king’s courts at Westminster, that their practice is warranted by the laws of Justinian or Gregory,<sup>19</sup> or is conformable to the decrees of the Rota or imperial chamber.<sup>20</sup> For which reason it becomes highly necessary for every

<sup>i</sup> Dedicatio corporis juris civilis. Edit. 1663.

<sup>k</sup> Hale. Hist. C. L. c. 2. Selden in Fletam. 5 Rep. [8] Caudrey’s Case. 2 Inst. 599.

<sup>17</sup> i.e. the faculty of medicine.

<sup>18</sup> Almaines [Alemanni], Franks, Saxons, Goths, Vandals: Germanic confederations which overran the western Roman empire from the fourth century AD; their customary laws prevailed in public use until the twelfth-century reception of Roman law.

<sup>19</sup> Liber decretalium Gregorii, an authoritative codification of canon law, promulgated in 1234 by Pope Gregory IX.

<sup>20</sup> The Roman rota, which developed from the late twelfth century, is the highest appellate tribunal of the papal curia; from 1495 to 1806 the imperial chamber (Reichskammergericht) served a similar function for the Holy Roman Empire.

civilian<sup>21</sup> and canonist<sup>22</sup> that would act with safety as a judge, or with prudence and reputation as an advocate, to know in what cases and how far the English laws have given sanction to the Roman; in what points the latter are rejected; and where they are both so intermixed and blended together, as to form certain supplemental parts of the common law of England, distinguished by the titles of the king's maritime, the king's military, and the king's ecclesiastical law. The propriety of which enquiry the university of Oxford has for more than a century so thoroughly seen, that in her statutes<sup>1</sup> she appoints,<sup>23</sup> that one of the three questions to be annually discussed at the act by the jurist-inceptors shall relate to the common law;<sup>24</sup> subjoining this reason, "quia juris civilis studiosos decet haud imperitos esse juris municipalis, & differentias exteri patriique juris notas habere."<sup>25</sup> And the statutes<sup>m</sup> of the university of Cambridge speak expressly to the same effect. 16

FROM the general use and necessity of some acquaintance with the common law, the inference were extremely easy, with regard to the propriety of the present institution, in a place to which gentlemen of all ranks and degrees resort, as the fountain of all useful knowledge. But how it has come to pass that a design of this sort has never before taken place in the university, and the reason why the study of our laws has in general fallen into disuse, I shall previously proceed to enquire.

SIR John Fortescue, in his panegyric on the laws of England, (which was written in the reign of Henry the sixth) puts<sup>a</sup> a very obvious question in the mouth of the young prince,<sup>26</sup> whom he is exhorting to apply himself to that branch of learning; "why the laws of England, being so good, so fruitful, and so commodious, are not taught in the universities, as the civil and canon laws are?" In answer to which he gives<sup>o</sup> what seems, with due deference be it spoken, a very jejune and unsatisfactory reason; being in short, that "as the proceedings at common law were in his time carried on in three different tongues, the English, the Latin, and the French, that science must be necessarily taught in those three several languages; but that in the universities all sciences were taught in the Latin tongue only; and therefore he concludes, that they could not be conveniently taught or studied in our universities." But without attempting to examine seriously the validity of this reason, (the very shadow of which by the wisdom of your late constitutions is entirely taken away<sup>27</sup>) we perhaps

<sup>1</sup> Tit. VII. Sect. 2. §. 2.

<sup>m</sup> Doctor legum mox a doctoratu dabit operam legibus Angliae, ut non sit imperitus earum legum quas habet sua patria, et differentias exteri patriique juris noscat. [A doctor of laws, having taken his degree, should study the laws of England, so that he is not unskilled in those of his own country, nor ignorant of the differences between them and foreign laws.] Stat. Eliz. R. c. 14. Cowel. Institut. in proëmio. [preface]

<sup>a</sup> [Fortescue, de Laud. LL] c. 47.

<sup>o</sup> c. 48.

<sup>21</sup> A Roman, or civil lawyer.

<sup>22</sup> Canon or ecclesiastical lawyer.

<sup>23</sup> The governing statutes of the University of Oxford were codified under the aegis of Archbishop Laud in 1636.

<sup>24</sup> Prospective doctors of law were required to argue questions formulated by the inceptors at the annual 'Acts' or formal academic disputations.

<sup>25</sup> 'It is fitting that those studying civil law should not be ignorant of the law of their own country and the known differences between their own laws and those of foreign nations.'

<sup>26</sup> Fortescue's book was cast in the form of a dialogue between the Chancellor and the Prince of Wales.

<sup>27</sup> i.e. by the establishment of the Vinerian foundation.

may find out a better, or at least a more plausible account, why the study of the municipal laws has been banished from these seats of science, than what the learned chancellor thought it prudent to give to his royal pupil.

- 17 THAT antient collection of unwritten maxims and customs, which is called the common law, however compounded or from whatever fountains derived, had subsisted immemorially in this kingdom; and, though somewhat altered and impaired by the violence of the times, had in great measure weathered the rude shock of the Norman conquest.<sup>28</sup> This had endeared it to the people in general, as well because its decisions were universally known, as because it was found to be excellently adapted to the genius of the English nation. In the knowledge of this law consisted great part of the learning of those dark ages; it was then taught, says Mr Selden<sup>p</sup>, in the monasteries, in the universities, and in the families of the principal nobility. The clergy in particular, as they then engrossed almost every other branch of learning, so (like their predecessors the British druids<sup>q</sup>) they were peculiarly remarkable for their proficiency in the study of the law. Nullus clericus nisi causidicus [no clerk unless a lawyer], is the character given of them soon after the conquest by William of Malmshbury<sup>r</sup>. The judges therefore were usually created out of the sacred order<sup>s</sup>, as was likewise the case among the Normans<sup>t</sup>; and all the inferior offices were supplied by the lower clergy, which has occasioned their successors to be denominated clerks to this day.

- 18 BUT the common law of England, being not committed to writing, but only handed down by tradition, use, and experience, was not so heartily relished by the foreign clergy; who came over hither in shoals during the reign of the conqueror and his two sons, and were utter strangers to our constitution as well as our language. And an accident, which soon after happened, had nearly completed its ruin. A copy of Justinian's pandects, being newly<sup>u</sup> discovered at Amalfi, soon brought the civil law into vogue all over the west of Europe, where before it was quite laid aside<sup>w</sup> and in a manner forgotten; though some traces of its authority remained in Italy<sup>x</sup> and the eastern provinces of the empire<sup>y</sup>. This now became in a particular manner the favourite of the popish clergy, who borrowed the method and many of the maxims of their canon law from this original. The study of it was introduced into several universities abroad, particularly that of Bologna; where exercises were performed, lectures read, and degrees conferred in this faculty, as in other branches of science: and many nations on the continent, just

<sup>p</sup> in Fletam. 7. 7.

<sup>q</sup> Caesar de bello Gal. 6. 12. [ch. 13 in modern editions.]

<sup>r</sup> de gest. Reg. l. 4.

<sup>s</sup> Dugdale Orig. jurid. c. 8.

<sup>t</sup> Les juges sont sages personnes & autentiques,—sicome les archevesques, evesques, les <5> chanoines les eglises cathedraulx, & les autres personnes qui ont dignitez in sainte eglise; les abbez, les prieurs conventaulx, & les gouverneurs des eglises, &c. [The judges are persons of wisdom and authority—such as archbishops, bishops, canons of cathedral churches, and other dignitaries of the holy church; the abbots, priors of convents, and church governors, &c.] Grand Coustumier, ch. 9.

<sup>u</sup> circ. A.D. 1130.

<sup>w</sup> LL. Wisigoth. 2. 1. 9.

<sup>x</sup> Capitular. Hludov. Pii. 4. 102.

<sup>y</sup> Selden in Fletam. 5. 5.

<sup>28</sup> Here Blackstone propagates the traditional common law view that the 'Ancient Constitution' of the Saxons survived the conquest of England in 1066.

then beginning to recover from the convulsions consequent upon the overthrow of the Roman empire, and settling by degrees into peaceable forms of government, adopted the civil law, (being the best written system then extant) as the basis of their several constitutions; blending and interweaving it among their own feudal customs, in some places with a more extensive, in others a more confined authority<sup>z</sup>.

NOR was it long before the prevailing mode of the times reached England. For Theobald, a Norman abbot, being elected to the see of Canterbury<sup>a</sup>, and extremely addicted to this new study, brought over with him in his retinue many learned proficients therein; and among the rest Roger surnamed Vacarius, whom he placed in the university of Oxford<sup>b</sup>, to teach it to the people of this country. But it did not meet with the same easy reception in England, where a mild and rational system of laws had been long established, as it did upon the continent; and, though the monkish clergy (devoted to the will of a foreign primate) received it with eagerness and zeal, yet the laity who were more interested to preserve the old constitution, and had already severely felt the effect of many Norman innovations, continued wedded to the use of the common law. King Stephen immediately published a proclamation<sup>c</sup>, 19 forbidding the study of the laws, then newly imported from Italy; which was treated by the monks<sup>d</sup> as a piece of impiety, and, though it might prevent the introduction of the civil law process into our courts of justice, yet did not hinder the clergy from reading and teaching it in their own schools and monasteries.

FROM this time the nation seems to have been divided into two parties; the bishops and clergy, many of them foreigners, who applied themselves wholly to the study of the civil and canon laws, which now came to be inseparably interwoven with each other; and the nobility and laity, who adhered with equal pertinacity to the old common law; both of them reciprocally jealous of what they were unacquainted with, and neither of them perhaps allowing the opposite system that real merit which is abundantly to be found in each. This appears on the one hand from the spleen with which the monastic writers<sup>e</sup> speak of our municipal laws upon all occasions; and, on the other, from the firm temper which the nobility shewed at the famous parliament of Merton; when the prelates endeavoured to procure an act, to declare all bastards legitimate in case the parents intermarried at any time afterwards; alleging this only reason, because holy church (that is, the canon law) declared such children legitimate: but "all the earls and barons (says the parliament roll<sup>f</sup>) with one voice answered, that they would not change the laws of England, which had hitherto been used and approved."<sup>29</sup> And we find the same jealousy prevailing above a century afterwards<sup>g</sup>, when the nobility declared with a kind of prophetic spirit, "that the realm of England

<sup>z</sup> (6) Domat's treatise of laws. c. 13. §. 9. Epistol. Innocent. IV. in M. Paris. ad A.D. 1254.

<sup>a</sup> A.D. 1138.

<sup>b</sup> Gervas. Dorobern. Act. Pontif. Cantuar. col. 1665.

<sup>c</sup> Rog. Bacon, citat. per Selden. in Fletam. 7. 6. in Fortesc. c. 33. & 8 Rep. Pref.

<sup>d</sup> Joan. Sarisburiens. Polycrat. 8. 22.

<sup>e</sup> Idem, ibid. 5. 16. Polydor. Vergil. Hist. l. 9.

<sup>f</sup> Stat. Merton. 20 Hen. III. c. 9. Et omnes comites & barones una voce responderunt, quod nolunt leges Angliae mutare, quae hucusque usitatae sunt & approbatae.

<sup>g</sup> 11 Ric. II.

<sup>29</sup> See I. 294.

20 hath never been unto this hour, neither by the consent of our lord the king and the lords of parliament shall it ever be, ruled or governed by the civil law<sup>h</sup>.” And of this temper between the clergy and laity many more instances might be given.

WHILE things were in this situation, the clergy, finding it impossible to root out the municipal law, began to withdraw themselves by degrees from the temporal courts; and to that end, very early in the reign of king Henry the third, episcopal constitutions were published<sup>i</sup>, forbidding all ecclesiastics to appear as advocates in foro saeculari [in the secular court]; nor did they long continue to act as judges there, (7) nor caring to take the oath of office which was then found necessary to be administred, that they should in all things determine according to the law and custom of this realm<sup>k</sup>; though they still kept possession of the high office of chancellor, an office then of little juridical power; and afterwards, as its business increased by degrees, they modelled the process of the court at their own discretion.

21 BUT wherever they retired, and wherever their authority extended, they carried with them the same zeal to introduce the rules of the civil, in exclusion of the municipal law. This appears in a particular manner from the spiritual courts of all denominations, from the chancellor’s courts in both our universities, and from the high court of chancery before-mentioned; in all of which the proceedings are to this day in a course much conformed to the civil law: for which no tolerable reason can be assigned, unless that these courts were all under the immediate direction of the popish ecclesiastics, among whom it was a point of religion to exclude the municipal law; pope Innocent the fourth having<sup>l</sup> forbidden the very reading of it by the clergy, because its decisions were not founded on the imperial constitutions, but merely on the customs of the laity. And if it be considered, that our universities began about that period to receive their present form of scholastic discipline; that they were then, and continued to be till the time of the reformation, entirely under the influence of the popish clergy; (sir John Mason the first protestant, being also the first lay, chancellor of Oxford) this will lead us to perceive the reason, why the study of the Roman laws was in those days of bigotry<sup>m</sup> pursued with such alacrity in these seats of learning; and why the common law was entirely despised, and esteemed little better than heretical.

<sup>h</sup> Selden. Jan. Anglor. l. 2. §. 43. in Fortesc. c. 33.

<sup>i</sup> Spelman. Concil. A.D. 1217. Wilkins, vol. 1. p. 574, 599.

<sup>k</sup> Selden. in Fletam. 9. 3.

<sup>l</sup> M. Paris ad A.D. 1254.

<sup>m</sup> There cannot be a stronger instance of the absurd and superstitious veneration that was paid to these laws, than that the most learned writers of the times thought they could not form a perfect character, even of the blessed virgin, without making her a civilian and a canonist. Which Albertus Magnus, the renowned dominican doctor of the thirteenth century, thus proves in his Summa de laudibus christiferae virginis (divinum magis quam humanum opus) [now attributed to Richard of St Laurent] qu. 23. §. 5. “Item quod jura civilia, & leges, & decreta scivit in summo, probatur hoc modo: sapientia advocati manifestatur in tribus; unum, quod obtineat omnia contra judicem justum & sapientem; secundo, quod contra adversarium astutum & sagacem; tertio, quod in causa desperata: sed beatissima virgo, contra judicem sapientissimum, Dominum; contra adversarium callidissimum, dyabolum; in causa nostra desperata; sententiam optatam obtinuit.” [Likewise that she had a perfect knowledge of the civil law and decrees is thus proved; the wisdom of an advocate is manifested in three things; first, that he have a prevailing influence upon a wise and just judge; second, against a subtle and sagacious adversary; and third, in a desperate cause: the most blessed Virgin obtained the desired judgment from the most wise judge, the Lord; against our most cunning adversary, the devil; in our desperate cause.] To which an eminent franciscan, two centuries afterwards, Bernardinus de Busti (Mariale, part. 4. serm. 9.) very gravely subjoins this note. “Nec videtur incongruum mulieres

AND, since the reformation, many causes have conspired to prevent its becoming a part of academical education. As, first, long usage and established custom; which, as in every thing else, so especially in the forms of scholastic exercise, have justly great weight and authority. Secondly, the real intrinsic merit of the civil law, considered upon the footing of reason and not of obligation, which was well known to the instructors of our youth; and their total ignorance of the merit of the common law, though its equal at least, and perhaps an improvement on the other. But the principal reason of all, that has hindered the introduction of this branch of learning, is, that the study of the common law, being banished from hence in the times of popery, has fallen into a quite different chanel, and has hitherto been wholly cultivated in another place. But <8> as this long usage and established custom, <9> of ignorance in the laws of the land, begin now to be thought unreasonable; and as <10> by this means the merit of those laws will probably be more generally known; we may hope that the method of studying them will soon revert to its antient course, and the foundations at least of that science will be laid in the two universities; without being exclusively confined to the chanel which it fell into at the times I have been just describing. 22

FOR, being then entirely abandoned by the clergy, a few stragglers excepted, the study and practice of it devolved of course into the hands of laymen; who entertained upon their parts a most hearty aversion to the civil law<sup>n</sup>, and made no scruple to profess their contempt, nay even their ignorance<sup>o</sup> of it, in the most public manner. But still, as the ballance of learning was greatly on the side of the clergy, and as the common law was no longer taught, as formerly, in any part of the kingdom, it must have been subjected to many inconveniences, and perhaps would have been gradually lost and overrun by the civil, (a suspicion well justified from the frequent transcripts of Justinian to be met with in Bracton<sup>30</sup> and Fleta<sup>31</sup>) had it not been for a peculiar incident, which happened at a very critical time, and contributed greatly to its support.

<11> The incident I mean was the fixing the court of common pleas, the grand tribunal for disputes of property, to be held in one certain spot; that the seat of ordinary justice might be permanent and notorious to all the nation. Formerly that, habere peritiam juris. Legitur enim de uxore Joannis Andreae glossatoris, quod tantam peritiam in utroque jure habuit, ut publice in scholis legere ausa sit." [Nor does it seem unsuitable that women have a knowledge of the law. For we read of the wife of John Andrew the glossator, that she was so skilled in both laws, civil and canon, that she ventured to lecture publicly on both in the schools.]

<sup>n</sup> Fortesc. de laud. LL. c. 25.

<sup>o</sup> This remarkably appeared in the case of the abbot of Torun, [YB] M. 22 E. 3. 24. who had caused a certain prior to be summoned to answer at Avignon for erecting an oratory contra inhibitionem novi operis [contrary to the prohibition of a new work]; by which words Mr Selden, (in Flet. 8. 5.) very justly understands to be meant the title de novi operis nuntiatione [concerning the denunciation of a new work] both in the civil and canon laws, (Ff. 39. 1. C. 8. 11. and Decretal. not Extrav. 5. 32 [Gregorian Decretals (Liber Extra), 5; see further I. 61]) whereby the erection of any new buildings in prejudice of more antient ones was prohibited. But Skipwith the king's serjeant, and afterwards chief baron of the exchequer, declares them to be flat nonsense; "in ceux parolx, contra inhibitionem novi operis, ny ad pas entendment." [In these words, against the prohibition of a new work, there is no meaning] and justice Schardelow mends the matter but little by informing him, that they signify a restitution in their law; for which reason he very sagely resolves to pay no sort of regard to them. "Ceo n'est que un restitution en leur ley, pur que a ceo n'avomus regard, &c." [This is but a restitution in their law, therefore we shall pay no regard to it.]

<sup>30</sup> Henry de Bracton (attrib.), De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae (c. 1235).

<sup>31</sup> Fleta, seu Commentarius juris Anglicani (c. 1290), a treatise on the common law supposedly written by an anonymous inmate of the Fleet prison, London, and first published by Selden in 1647.

23 in conjunction with all the other superior courts, was held before the king's capital justiciary of England, in the aula regis [king's hall], or such of his palaces wherein his royal person resided; and removed with his household from one end of the kingdom to the other. This was found to occasion great inconvenience to the suitors; to remedy which it was made an article of the great charter of liberties,<sup>32</sup> both that of king John and king Henry the third<sup>p</sup>, that "common pleas should no longer follow the king's court, but be held in some certain place:" in consequence of which they have ever since been held (a few necessary removals in times of the plague excepted) in the palace of Westminster only. This brought together the professors of the municipal law, who before were dispersed about the kingdom, and formed them into an aggregate body; whereby a society was established of persons, who (as Spelman<sup>q</sup> observes) addicting themselves wholly to the study of the laws of the land, and no longer considering it as a mere subordinate science for the amusement of leisure hours, soon raised those laws to that pitch of perfection, which they suddenly attained under the auspices of our English Justinian, king Edward the first.<sup>33</sup>

In consequence of this lucky assemblage, they naturally fell into a kind of collegiate order, and, being excluded from Oxford and Cambridge, found it necessary to establish a new university of their own. This they did by purchasing at various times certain houses (now called the inns of court and of chancery) between the city of Westminster, the place of holding the king's courts, and the city of London; for advantage of ready access to the one, and plenty of provisions in the other<sup>r</sup>. Here exercises were performed, lectures read, and degrees were at length conferred in the common law, as at other universities in the canon and civil. The degrees were those of barristers (first stiled apprentices<sup>s</sup> from apprendre, to learn) who answered to our bachelors; as the state and degree of a serjeant<sup>t</sup>, servientis ad legem [of a serjeant at law], did to that of doctor.<sup>34</sup>

<sup>p</sup> c. 11.

<sup>q</sup> Glossar. 334.

<sup>r</sup> Fortesc. c. 48.

<sup>s</sup> Apprentices or Barristers seem to have been first appointed by an ordinance of king Edward the first in parliament, in the 20th year of his reign. (Spelm. Gloss. 37. Dugdale. Orig. jurid. 55.)

<sup>t</sup> †12 The first mention I have met with in our lawbooks of serjeants or countors, is in the statute of Westm. 1. 3 Edw. I. c. 29. [1275] and in Horn's Mirror, c. 1. §. 10. c. 2. §. 5. c. 3. §. 1 in the same reign. But M. Paris in his life of John II, abbot of St. Alban's, which he wrote in 1255, 39 Hen. III. speaks of advocates at the common law, or countors (quos banci narratores vulgariter appellamus) [whom we commonly call counters at the bench] as of an order of men well known. And we have an example of the antiquity of the coif in the same author's history of England, A.D. 1259, in the case of one William de Bussy; who, being called to account for his great knavery and malpractices, claimed the benefit of his orders or clergy, which till then remained an entire secret; and to that end voluit ligamenta coifae suae solvere, ut palam monstraret se tonsuram habere clericalem; sed non est permixsus.—Satelles vero eum arripiens, non per coifae ligamina sed per guttur eum apprehendens, traxit ad carcerem. [He wished to untie the strings of his coif that he might prove to all his having the clerical tonsure, but this was not allowed.—Then an officer seizing him, not by the strings of his coif but by his throat, dragged him to prison.] And hence sir H. Spelman conjectures, (Glossar. 335.) that coifs were introduced to hide the tonsure of such renegade clerks, as were still tempted to remain in the secular courts in the quality of advocates or judges, notwithstanding their prohibition by canon.

<sup>32</sup> Magna Carta (1215) was re-issued by John's son and successor Henry III in 1217 and 1225.

<sup>33</sup> The soubriquet goes back to Coke's commentary on the statute of Westminster I (1275) in his Second Institutes (1642). Edward I's reign (1272–90) saw many statutes of major continuing importance enacted.

<sup>34</sup> See further J. H. Baker, The Order of Serjeants at Law (1984); P. A. Brand, The Origins of the English Legal Profession (1992).

THE crown seems to have soon taken under its protection this infant seminary of common law; and, the more effectually to foster and cherish it, king Henry the third in the nineteenth year of his reign<sup>35</sup> issued out an order directed to the mayor and sheriffs of London, commanding that no regent of any law schools within that city should for the future teach law therein<sup>u</sup>. The word, law, or leges, being a general term, may create some doubt at this distance of time whether the teaching of the civil law, or the common, or both, is hereby restrained. But in either case it tends to the same end. If the civil law only is prohibited, (which is Mr Selden's<sup>w</sup> opinion) it is then a retaliation upon the clergy, who had excluded the common law from their seats of learning. If the municipal law be also included in the restriction, (as sir Edward Coke<sup>x</sup> understands it, and which the words seem to import) then the intention is evidently this; by preventing private teachers within the walls of the city, to collect all the common lawyers into the one public university, which was newly instituted in the suburbs.

IN this juridical university (for such it is insisted to have been by Fortescue<sup>y</sup> and sir Edward Coke<sup>z</sup>) there are two sorts of collegiate houses; one called inns of chancery, in which the younger students of the law were usually placed, "learning and studying, says Fortescue<sup>a</sup>, the originals and as it were the elements of the law; who, profiting therein, as <14> they grow to ripeness so are they admitted into the greater inns of the same study, called the inns of court." And in these inns of both kinds, he goes on to tell us, the knights and barons, with other grandees and noblemen of the realm, did use to place their children, though they did not desire to have them thoroughly learned in the law, or to get their living by its practice: and that in his time there were about two thousand students at these several inns, all of whom he informs us were filii nobilium, or gentlemen born.

HENCE it is evident, that (though under the influence of the monks our universities neglected this study, yet) in the time of Henry the sixth it was thought highly necessary and was the universal practice, for the young nobility and gentry to be instructed in the originals and elements of the laws. But by degrees this custom has fallen into disuse; so that in the reign of queen Elizabeth sir Edward Coke<sup>b</sup> does not reckon above a thousand students, and the number at present is very considerably less. Which seems principally owing to these reasons: first, because the inns of chancery being now almost totally filled by the inferior branch of the profession, they are neither commodious nor proper for the resort of gentlemen of any rank or figure; so that <15> there are now very rarely any young students entered at the inns of

<sup>u</sup> Ne aliquis scholas regens de legibus in eadem civitate de caetero ibidem leges doceat.

<sup>w</sup> in Flet. 8. 2.

<sup>x</sup> 2 Inst. proëm.

<sup>y</sup> c. 49.

<sup>z</sup> 3 Rep. pref.

<sup>a</sup> <13> ibid.

<sup>b</sup> ibid.

chancery: secondly, because in the inns of court all sorts of regimen and academical superintendance, either with regard to morals or studies, are found impracticable and therefore entirely neglected: lastly, because persons of birth and fortune, after 26 having finished their usual courses at the universities, have seldom leisure or resolution sufficient to enter upon a new scheme of study at a new place of instruction. Wherefore few gentlemen now resort to the inns of court, but such for whom the knowlege of practice is absolutely necessary; such, I mean, as are intended for the profession: the rest of our gentry, (not to say our nobility also) having usually retired to their estates, or visited foreign kingdoms, or entered upon public life, without any instruction in the laws of the land; and indeed with hardly any opportunity of gaining instruction, unless it can be afforded them in these seats of learning.

AND that these are the proper places, for affording assistances of this kind to gentlemen of all stations and degrees, cannot (I think) with any colour of reason be denied. For not one of the objections, which are made to the inns of court and chancery, and which I have (16) just enumerated, will hold with regard to the universities. Gentlemen may here associate with gentlemen of their own rank and degree. Nor are their conduct and studies left entirely to their own discretion; but regulated by a discipline so wise and exact, yet so liberal, so sensible and manly, that their conformity to its rules (which does at present so much honour to our youth) is not more the effect of constraint, than of their own inclinations and choice. Neither need they apprehend too long an avocation hereby from their private concerns and amusements, or (what is a more noble object) the service of their friends and their country. This study will go hand in hand with their other pursuits: it will obstruct none of them; it will ornament and assist them all.

BUT if, upon the whole, there are any still wedded to monastic prejudice, that can entertain a doubt how far this study is properly and regularly academical, such persons I am afraid either have not considered the constitution and design of an university, or else think very meanly of it. It must be a deplorable narrowness of mind, that would confine these seats of instruction to the limited views of one or two 27 learned professions. To the praise of this age be it spoken, a more open and generous way of thinking begins now universally to prevail. The attainment of liberal and genteel accomplishments, though not of the intellectual sort, has been thought by our wisest and most affectionate patrons<sup>c</sup>, and very lately by the whole university<sup>d</sup>, no small improvement of our antient plan of education;<sup>36</sup> and therefore I may safely affirm that nothing (how unusual soever) is, under due regulations, improper to be taught in this place, which is proper for a gentleman to learn. But that a science, which distinguishes the criterions of right and wrong; which teaches to establish the one, and prevent, punish, or redress the other; which employs in its theory the noblest faculties of the soul, and exerts in its practice the cardinal virtues of the heart; a science, which is universal in its use and extent, accommodated to each individual, yet comprehending the whole community; that a science like this should have ever been deemed unnecessary to be studied in an university, is matter of astonishment and concern. Surely, if it were not before an object of academical knowlege, it was high time to make it one; and to those who can doubt the propriety of its reception among us (if any such there be) we may return an answer in their own way; that ethics are confessedly a branch of academical learning, and Aristotle himself has said, speaking of the laws of his own country, that jurisprudence or the knowlege of those laws is the principal and most<sup>c</sup> perfect branch of ethics.

<sup>c</sup> Lord chancellor Clarendon, in his dialogue of education, among his tracts, p. 325, appears to have been very solicitous, that it might be made "a part of the ornament of our learned academies to teach the qualities of riding, dancing, and fencing, at those hours when more serious exercises should be intermitted."

<sup>d</sup> By accepting in full convocation the remainder of lord Clarendon's history from his noble descendants, on condition to apply the profits arising from its publication to the establishment of a manège [riding school] in the university.

<sup>36</sup> The publication of the first three volumes of the earl of Clarendon's History of the Great Rebellion had financed the construction of the Clarendon building in 1712–13, home to the University Press in Blackstone's day.

FROM a thorough conviction of this truth, our munificent benefactor Mr VINER, having employed above half a century in amassing materials for new modelling and rendering more commodious the rude study of the laws of the land,<sup>37</sup> consigned both the plan and execution of these his public-spirited designs to the wisdom of his parent university. Resolving to dedicate his learned labours “to the benefit of posterity and the perpetual service of his country<sup>f</sup>,” he was sensible he could not perform his resolutions in a better and more effectual manner, than by extending to the youth of this place those assistances, of which he so well remembered and so heartily regretted the want. And the sense, which the university has entertained of this ample and most useful benefaction, must appear beyond a doubt from their gratitude in receiving it with all possible marks of esteem<sup>g</sup>; from their alacrity and unexampled dispatch in carrying it into execution<sup>h</sup>; and, above all, from the laws and constitutions by which they have effectually guarded it<sup>38</sup> from the neglect and abuse to which such institutions

28

<sup>c</sup> Τελεία μαλιστα αρετη, ότι της τελειας αρετης χρησης εστιν. Ethic. ad Nicomach. l. 5. c. 3.

<sup>f</sup> See the preface to the eighteenth volume of his abridgment.

<sup>g</sup> Mr Viner is enrolled among the public benefactors of the university by decree of convocation.

<sup>h</sup> Mr Viner died June 5, 1756. His effects were collected and settled, near a volume of his work printed, almost the whole disposed of, and the accounts made up, in a year and a half from his decease, by the very diligent and worthy administrators with the will annexed, (Dr [Thomas] West and Dr [Richard] Good of Magdalene, Dr [Robert] Whalley of Oriel, Mr [Benjamin] Buckler of All Souls, and Mr [Joseph] Betts of University college) to whom that care was consigned by the university. Another half year was employed in considering and settling a plan of the proposed institution, and in framing the statutes thereupon, which were finally confirmed by convocation on the 3<sup>d</sup> of July, 1758. The professor was elected on the 20th of October following, and two scholars on the succeeding day. And, lastly, it was agreed at the annual audit in 1761, to establish a fellowship; and a fellow was accordingly elected in January following.—The residue of this fund, arising from the sale of Mr Viner's abridgment, will probably be sufficient hereafter to found another fellowship and scholarship, or three more scholarships, as shall be thought most expedient.

<sup>37</sup> Viner's General Abridgment of Law and Equity was published in twenty-three volumes, 1742–57.

<sup>38</sup> For Blackstone's part in establishing the Vinerian foundation see Prest, Blackstone, 138–9, 141–2, 148–50.

are liable<sup>i</sup>. We have seen an universal emulation, who best should understand, or 29 most faithfully pursue, the designs of our generous patron: and with pleasure we 30 recollect, that those who are most distinguished by their quality, their fortune, their station, their learning, or their experience, have appeared the most zealous to promote the success of Mr Viner's establishment.

<sup>i</sup> The statutes are in substance as follows:

1. THAT the accounts of this benefaction be separately kept, and annually audited by the delegates of accounts and professor, and afterwards reported to convocation.

2. THAT a professorship of the laws of England be established, with a salary of two hundred pounds per annum; the professor to be elected by convocation, and to be at the time of his election at least a master of arts or bachelor of civil law in the university of Oxford, of ten years standing from his matriculation; and also a barrister at law of four years standing at the bar.

3. That such professor (by himself, or by deputy to be previously approved by convocation) do read one solemn public lecture on the laws of England, and in the English language, in every academical term, at certain stated times previous to the commencement of the common law term; or forfeit twenty pounds for every omission to Mr Viner's general fund: and also (by himself, or by deputy to be approved, if occasional, by the vice-chancellor and proctors; or, if permanent, both the cause and the deputy to be annually approved by convocation) do yearly read one complete course of lectures on the laws of England, and in the English language, consisting of sixty lectures at the least; to be read during the university term time, with such proper intervals that not more than four lectures may fall within any single week: that the professor do give a month's notice of the time when the course is to begin, and do read gratis to the scholars of Mr Viner's foundation; but may demand of other auditors such gratuity as shall be settled from time to time by decree of convocation: and that, for every of the said sixty lectures omitted, the professor, on complaint made to the vice-chancellor within the year, do forfeit forty shillings to Mr Viner's general fund; the proof of having performed his duty to lie upon the said professor.

4. THAT every professor do continue in his office during life, unless in case of such misbehaviour as shall amount to bannition by the university statutes; or unless he deserts the profession of the law by betaking himself to another profession: or unless, after one admonition by the vice-chancellor and proctors for notorious neglect, he is guilty of another flagrant omission: in any of which cases he be deprived by the vice-chancellor, with consent of the house of convocation.

5. THAT such a number of fellowships with a stipend of fifty pounds per annum, and scholarships with a stipend of thirty pounds be established, as the convocation shall from time to time ordain, according to the state of Mr Viner's revenues.

6. THAT every fellow be elected by convocation, and at the time of election be unmarried, and at least a master of arts or bachelor of civil law, and a member of some college or hall in the university of Oxford; the scholars of this foundation or such as have been scholars (if qualified and approved of by convocation) to have the preference: that, if not a barrister when chosen, he be called to the bar within one year after his election; but do reside in the university two months in every year, or in case of non-residence do forfeit the stipend of that year to Mr Viner's general fund.

7. THAT every scholar be elected by convocation, and at the time of election be unmarried, and a member of some college or hall in the university of Oxford, who shall have been matriculated twenty four calendar months at the least: that he do take the degree of bachelor of civil law with all convenient speed; (either proceeding in arts or otherwise) and previous to his taking the same, between the second and eighth year from his matriculation, be bound to attend two courses of the professor's lectures, to be certified under the professor's hand; and within one year after taking the same be called to the bar: that he do annually reside six months till he is of four years standing, and four months from that time till he is master of arts or bachelor of civil law; after which he be bound to reside two months in every year; or, in case of non-residence, do forfeit the stipend of that year to Mr Viner's general fund.

8. THAT the scholarships do become void in case of non-attendance on the professor, or not taking the degree of bachelor of civil law, being duly admonished so to do by the vice-chancellor and proctors: and that both fellowships and scholarships do expire at the end of ten years after each respective election; and become void in case of gross misbehaviour, non-residence for two years together, marriage, not being called to the bar within the time before limited, (being duly admonished so to be by the vice-chancellor and proctors) or deserting the profession of the law by following any other profession: and that in any of these cases the vice-chancellor, with consent of convocation, do declare the place actually void.

9. THAT in case of any vacancy of the professorship, fellowships, or scholarships, the profits of the current year be ratably divided between the predecessor or his representatives, and the successor; and that a new election be had within one month afterwards, unless by that means the time of election shall fall within any vacation, in which case it be deferred to the first week in the next full term. And that before any convocation shall be held for such election, or for any other matter relating to Mr Viner's benefaction, ten days public notice be given to each college and hall of the convocation, and the cause of convoking it.

THE advantages that might result to the science of the law itself, when a little more attended to in these seats of knowlege, perhaps would be very considerable. The leisure and abilities of the learned in these retirements might either suggest expedients, or execute those dictated by wiser heads<sup>k</sup>, for improving its method, retrenching its superfluities, and reconciling the little contrarieties, which the practice of many centuries will necessarily create in any human system: a task, which those who are deeply employed in business, and the more active scenes of the profession, can hardly condescend to engage in. And as to the interest, or (which is the same) the reputation of the universities themselves, I may venture to pronounce, that if ever this study should arrive to any tolerable perfection either here or at Cambridge, the nobility and gentry of this kingdom would not shorten their residence upon this account, nor perhaps entertain a worse opinion of the benefits of academical education. Neither should it be considered as a matter of light importance, that while we thus extend the pomoeria [bounds] of university learning, and adopt a new tribe of citizens within these philosophical walls, we interest a very numerous and very 31 powerful profession in the preservation of our rights and revenues.

FOR I think it is past dispute that those gentlemen, who resort to the inns of court with a view to pursue the profession, will find it expedient (whenever it is practicable) to lay the previous foundations of this, as well as every other science, in one of our learned universities. We may appeal to the experience of every sensible lawyer, whether any thing can be more hazardous or discouraging than the usual entrance on the study of the law. A raw and unexperienced youth, in the most dangerous season of life, is transplanted on a sudden into the midst of allurements to pleasure, without any restraint or check but what his own prudence can suggest; with no public direction in what course to pursue his enquiries; no private assistance to remove the distresses and difficulties, which will always embarrass a beginner. In this situation he is expected to sequester himself from the world, and by a tedious lonely process to extract the theory of law from a mass of undigested learning; or else by an assiduous attendance on the courts to pick up theory and practice together, sufficient to qualify him for the ordinary run of business. How little therefore is it to be wondered at, that we hear of so frequent miscarriages; that so many gentlemen of bright imaginations grow weary of so unpromising a search<sup>l</sup>, and addict themselves wholly to amusements, or other less innocent pursuits; and that so many persons of moderate capacity confuse themselves at first setting out, and continue ever dark and puzzled during the remainder of their lives!

THE evident want of some assistance in the rudiments of legal knowlege, has given birth to a practice, which, if ever it had grown to be general, must have proved of

<sup>k</sup> See lord Bacon's proposals and offer of a digest.

<sup>l</sup> Sir Henry Spelman, in the preface to his glossary, (17) gives us a very lively picture of his own distress upon this occasion. "Emisit me mater Londinium, juris nostri capessendi gratia; cujus cum vestibulum salutassem, reperissemque linguam peregrinam, dialectum barbaram, methodum inconcinnam, molem non ingentem solum sed perpetuis humeris sustinendam, excidit mihi (fateor) animus, &c." [My mother sent me to London to commence the study of our laws, but when, having paid my respects to the vestibule of this branch of learning I was met by a foreign language, a barbarous dialect, an uncouth style, and a mass not only vast but always to be borne on my shoulders, I confess my courage failed me.]

- 32 extremely pernicious consequence: I mean the custom, by some so very warmly recommended, <18> to drop all liberal education, as of no use to lawyers; and to place them, in its stead, at the desk of some skilful attorney; in order to initiate them early in all the depths of practice, and render them more dextrous in the mechanical part of business. A few instances of particular persons, (men of excellent learning, and unblemished integrity) who, in spite of this method of education, have shone in the foremost ranks of the bar, have afforded some kind of sanction to this illiberal path to the profession, and biassed many parents, of shortsighted judgment, in its favour: not considering, that there are some geniuses, formed to overcome all disadvantages, and that from such particular instances no general rules can be formed; nor observing, that those very persons have frequently recommended by the most forcible of all examples, the disposal of their own offspring, a very different foundation of legal studies, a regular academical education. Perhaps too, in return, I could now direct their eyes to our principal seats of justice, and suggest a few hints, in favour of university learning<sup>m</sup>:—but in these all who hear me, I know, have already prevented me.<sup>39</sup>

MAKING therefore due allowance for one or two shining exceptions, experience may teach us to foretell that a lawyer thus educated to the bar, in subservience to attorneys and solicitors<sup>n</sup>, will find he has begun at the wrong end. If practice be the whole he is taught, practice must also be the whole he will ever know: if he be uninstructed in the elements and first principles upon which the rule of practice is founded, the least variation from established precedents will totally distract and bewilder him: ita lex scripta est<sup>o</sup> [so the law is written] is the utmost his knowledge will arrive at; he must never aspire to form, and seldom expect to comprehend, any arguments drawn a priori [by deduction], from the spirit of the laws and the natural foundations of justice.

- 33 NOR is this all; for (as few persons of birth, or fortune, or even of scholastic education, will submit to the drudgery of servitude and the manual labour of copying the trash of an office) should this infatuation prevail to any considerable degree, we must rarely expect to see a gentleman of distinction or learning at the bar. And what the consequence may be, to have the interpretation and enforcement of the laws (which include the entire disposal of our properties, liberties, and lives) fall wholly into the hands of obscure or illiterate men, is matter of very public concern.

THE inconveniences here pointed out can never be effectually prevented, but by making academical education a previous step to the profession of the common law, and at the same time making the rudiments of the law a part of academical education.

<sup>m</sup> <19> The four highest offices in the law were at that time filled by gentlemen, two of whom had been fellows of All Souls college; another, student of Christ-Church; and the fourth a fellow of Trinity college, Cambridge.

<sup>n</sup> See Kennet's life of Somner, p. 67.

<sup>o</sup> Ef. 40. 9. 12.

<sup>39</sup> The fellows of All Souls were Sir Robert Henley (Lord Keeper) and Sir John Willes (chief justice of Common Pleas); the student of Christ Church was William Murray, Lord Mansfield (chief Justice of King's Bench); and the fellow of Trinity was Sir Thomas Clarke, master of the rolls. Blackstone was suggesting that by attending his lectures aspiring lawyers had already demonstrated their conviction that a spell at university was an appropriate preparation for studying law.

For sciences are of a sociable disposition, and flourish best in the neighbourhood of each other: nor is there any branch of learning, but may be helped and improved by assistances drawn from other arts. If therefore the student in our laws hath formed both his sentiments and style, by perusal and imitation of the purest classical writers, among whom the historians and orators will best deserve his regard; if he can reason with precision, and separate argument from fallacy, by the clear simple rules of pure unsophisticated logic; if he can fix his attention, and steadily pursue truth through any the most intricate deduction, by the use of mathematical demonstrations; if he has enlarged his conceptions of nature and art, by a view of the several branches of genuine, experimental, philosophy; if he has impressed on his mind the sound maxims of the law of nature, the best and most authentic foundation of human laws; if, lastly, he has contemplated those maxims reduced to a practical system in the laws of imperial Rome; if he has done this or any part of it, (though all may be easily done under as able instructors as ever graced any seats of learning) a student thus qualified may enter upon the study of the law with incredible advantage and reputation. And if, at the conclusion, or during the acquisition of these accomplishments, he will afford himself here a year or two's farther leisure, to lay the foundation of his future labours in a solid scientific method, without thirsting too early to attend that practice which it is impossible he should rightly comprehend, he will afterwards proceed with the greatest ease, and will unfold the most intricate points with an intuitive rapidity and clearness. 34

I SHALL not insist upon such motives as might be drawn from principles of oeconomy, and are applicable to particulars only: I reason upon more general topics. And therefore to the qualities of the head, which I have just enumerated, I cannot but add those of the heart; affectionate loyalty to the king, a zeal for liberty and the constitution, a sense of real honour, and well grounded principles of religion; as necessary to form a truly valuable English lawyer, a Hyde, a Hale, or a Talbot.<sup>40</sup> And, whatever the ignorance of some, or unkindness of others, may have heretofore untruly suggested, experience will warrant us to affirm, that these endowments of loyalty and public spirit, of honour and religion, are no where to be found in more high perfection than in the two universities of this kingdom.<sup>41</sup>

BEFORE I conclude, it may perhaps be expected, that I lay before you a short and general account of the method I propose to follow, in endeavouring to execute the trust you have been pleased to repose in my hands. And in these solemn lectures, which are ordained to be read at the entrance of every term, (more perhaps to do public honour to this laudable institution, than for the private instruction of individuals<sup>p</sup>) I presume it will best answer the intent of our benefactor and the expectation of this learned body, if I attempt to illustrate at times such detached titles of the law, as are the most easy to be understood, and most capable of historical or critical ornament. But in reading the complete course, which is annually consigned 35 to my care, a more regular method will be necessary; and, till a better is proposed, I shall take the liberty to follow the same that I have already submitted to the public<sup>q</sup>. To fill up and finish that outline with propriety and correctness, and to render the whole intelligible to the uninformed minds of beginners, (whom we are too apt to suppose acquainted with terms and ideas, which they never had opportunity to learn) this must be my ardent endeavour, though by no means my promise to accomplish. You will permit me however very briefly to describe, rather what I conceive an academical expounder of the laws should do, than what I have ever known to be done.

<sup>p</sup> See Lowth's Oratio Crewiana, p. 365 [R. Louth, De Sacra Poesi Hebraeorum ... Et Oratio Crewiana (Oxford, 1753)].

<sup>40</sup> Edward Hyde, lord chancellor and earl of Clarendon; Sir Matthew Hale, chief justice of King's Bench; and Charles, Lord Talbot, lord chancellor. Blackstone may have singled them out because they were all Oxford men and independent, reforming judges.

<sup>41</sup> Blackstone is responding here to Oxford's contemporary reputation for Jacobitism.

HE should consider his course as a general map of the law, marking out the shape of the country, its connexions and boundaries, its greater divisions and principal cities: it is not his business to describe minutely the subordinate limits, or to fix the longitude and latitude of every inconsiderable hamlet. His attention should be engaged, like that of the readers in Fortescue's inns of chancery, "in tracing out the originals and as it were the elements of the law." For if, as Justinian<sup>r</sup> has observed, the tender understanding of the student be loaded at the first with a multitude and variety of matter, it will either occasion him to desert his studies, or will carry him heavily through them, with much labour, delay, and despondence. These originals should be traced to their fountains, as well as our distance will permit; to the customs of the Britons and Germans, as recorded by Caesar and Tacitus; to the codes of the northern nations on the continent, and more especially to those of our own Saxon 36 princes; to the rules of the Roman law, either left here in the days of Papinian, or imported by Vacarius and his followers; but, above all, to that inexhaustible reservoir of legal antiquities and learning, the feudal law, or, as Spelman<sup>s</sup> has entitled it, the law of nations in our western orb. These primary rules and fundamental principles should be weighed and compared with the precepts of the law of nature, and the practice of other countries; should be explained by reasons, illustrated by examples, and confirmed by undoubted authorities; their history should be deduced, their changes and revolutions observed, and it should be shewn how far they are connected with, or have at any time been affected by, the civil transactions of the kingdom.

<sup>q</sup> The Analysis of the laws of England, first published, A.D. 1756, and exhibiting the order and principal divisions of the ensuing COMMENTARIES; which were originally submitted to the university in a private course of lectures, A.D. 1753.

<sup>r</sup> Incipientibus nobis exponere jura populi Romani, ita videntur tradi posse commodissime, si primo levi ac simplici via singula tradantur: Alioqui, si statim ab initio rudem adhuc & infirmum animum studiosi multitudine ac varietate rerum oneravimus, duorum alterum, aut desertorem studiorum efficiemus, aut cum magno labore, saepe etiam cum diffidentia (quae plerumque juvenes avertit) serius ad id perducemus, ad quod levior via ductus, sine magno labore & sine ulla diffidentia maturius perducipotuisset. [To us about to expound the laws of the Roman people, it seems that it may be done more advantageously if first delivered separately and in an easy and simple manner, otherwise, if in the very beginning we burden the mind of the student, as yet unexercised and weak, with a multitude and diversity of matters, we do one of two things: either cause him to relinquish his studies altogether, or bring him much later, with great labour, and often with great diffidence (which very frequently deters young men) to that point, to which, conducted by an easier method, he might have been brought earlier, with little trouble, and with sufficient confidence.] Inst. l. 1. 2.

<sup>s</sup> Of Parliaments. 57.

A PLAN of this nature, if executed with care and ability, cannot fail of administering a most useful and rational entertainment to students of all ranks and professions; and yet it must be confessed that the study of the laws is not merely a matter of amusement: for as a very judicious writer<sup>t</sup> has observed upon a similar occasion, the learner “will be considerably disappointed if he looks for entertainment without the expence of attention.” An attention, however, not greater than is usually bestowed in mastering the rudiments of other sciences, or sometimes in pursuing a favorite recreation or exercise. And this attention is not equally necessary to be exerted by every student upon every occasion. Some branches of the law, as the formal process of civil suits, and the subtile distinctions incident to landed property, which are the most difficult to be thoroughly understood, are the least worth the pains of understanding, except to such gentlemen as intend to pursue the profession. To others I may venture to apply, with a slight alteration, the words of sir John Fortescue<sup>u</sup>, when first his royal pupil determines to engage in this study. “It will not be necessary for a gentleman, as such, to examine with a close application the critical niceties of the law. It will fully be sufficient, and he may well enough be denominated a lawyer, if under the instruction of a master he traces up the principles and grounds of the law, even to their original elements. Therefore in a very short period, and with very little labour, he may be sufficiently informed in the laws of his country, if he will but apply his mind in good earnest to receive and apprehend them. For, though such knowlege as is necessary for a judge is hardly to be acquired by the lucubrations of twenty years, yet with a genius of tolerable perspicacity, that knowlege which is fit for a person of birth or condition may be learned in a single year, without neglecting his other improvements.”

37

To the few therefore (the very few, I am persuaded,) that entertain such unworthy notions of an university, as to suppose it intended for mere dissipation of thought; to such as mean only to while away the aukward interval from childhood to twenty one, between the restraints of the school and the licentiousness of politer life, in a calm middle state of mental and of moral inactivity; to these Mr Viner gives no invitation to an entertainment which they never can relish. But to the long and illustrious train of noble and ingenuous youth, who are not more distinguished among us by their birth and possessions, than by the regularity of their conduct and their thirst after useful knowlege, to these our benefactor has consecrated the fruits of a long and laborious life, worn out in the duties of his calling; and will joyfully reflect (if such reflexions can be now the employment of his thoughts) that he could not more effectually have benefited posterity, or contributed to the service of the public, than by founding an institution which may instruct the rising generation in the wisdom of our civil polity, and inform them with a desire to be still better acquainted with the laws and constitution of their country.

<sup>t</sup> Dr Taylor's preface to Elem. of civil law.

<sup>u</sup> <20> Tibi, princeps, necesse non erit mysteria legis Angliae longo disciplinatu rimare. Sufficiet tibi,—et satis denominari legista mereberis, si legum principia & causas, usque ad elementa, discipuli more indagaveris.—Quare tu, princeps serenissime, parvo tempore, parva industria, sufficienter eris in legibus regni Angliae eruditus, dummodo ad ejus apprehensionem tu conferas animum tuum.—Nosco namque ingenii tui perspicacitatem, quo audacter pronuntio quod in legibus illis (licet earum peritia, qualis judicibus necessaria est, vix viginti annorum lucubrationibus acquiratur) tu, doctrinam principi congruam in anno uno sufficienter nancisceris; nec interim militarem disciplinam, ad quam tam ardentem anhelas, negliges; sed ea, recreationis loco, etiam anno illo tu ad libitum perfrueris. [So, my Prince, there will be no occasion for you to search into the arcana of our laws with such tedious application and study; it will be sufficient (and enough) if you may be deemed a lawyer in some competent degree, when, as a learner, you shall become acquainted with the principles, causes and elements of the law. Wherefore, most gracious Prince, you will soon, with a moderate application, be sufficiently instructed in the laws of England, if so be you give your mind to it. I know very well the quickness of your apprehension and the forwardness of your parts; and I dare say, that in those studies (though a knowledge and practice of twenty years is but barely sufficient to qualify for a judge), you will acquire a knowledge sufficient to qualify for one of your high quality, within the compass of one year; and in the meanwhile attend to, and inure yourself to martial exercises, to which your natural inclination prompts you on so much, and still makes it your diversion, as shall best please you, at your leisure.] c. 8.

OF THE NATURE OF LAWS IN GENERAL

LAW, in its most general and comprehensive sense, signifies a rule of action; and is applied indiscriminately to all kinds of action, whether animate, or inanimate, rational or irrational. Thus we say, the laws of motion, of gravitation, of optics, or mechanics, as well as the laws of nature and of nations. And it is that rule of action, which is prescribed by some superior, and which the inferior is bound to obey.<sup>1</sup>

THUS when the supreme being formed the universe, and created matter out of nothing, he impressed certain principles upon that matter, from which it can never depart, and without which it would cease to be. When he put that matter into motion, he established certain laws of motion, to which all moveable bodies must conform. And, to descend from the greatest operations to the smallest, when a workman forms a clock, or other piece of mechanism, he establishes at his own pleasure certain arbitrary laws for its direction; as that the hand shall describe a given space in a given time; to which law as long as the work conforms, so long it continues in perfection, and answers the end of its formation.

IF we farther advance, from mere inactive matter to vegetable and animal life, we shall find them still governed by laws; more numerous indeed, but equally fixed and invariable. The whole progress of plants, from the seed to the root, and from thence to the seed again;—the method of animal nutrition, digestion, secretion, and all other branches of vital oeconomy;—are not left to chance, or the will of the creature itself, but are performed in a wondrous involuntary manner, and guided by unerring rules laid down by the great creator. 39

THIS then is the general signification of law, a rule of action dictated by some superior being; and in those creatures that have neither the power to think, nor to will, such laws must be invariably obeyed, so long as the creature itself subsists, for its existence depends on that obedience. But laws, in their more confined sense, and in which it is our present business to consider them, denote the rules, not of action in general, but of human action or conduct: that is, the precepts by which man, the noblest of all sublunary beings, a creature endowed with both reason and freewill, is commanded to make use of those faculties in the general regulation of his behaviour.

MAN, considered as a creature, must necessarily be subject to the laws of his creator, for he is entirely a dependent being. A being, independent of any other, has no rule to pursue, but such as he prescribes to himself; but a state of dependance will inevitably oblige the inferior to take the will of him, on whom he depends, as the rule of his conduct: not indeed in every particular, but in all those points wherein his dependance consists. This principle therefore has more or less extent and effect, in proportion as the superiority of the one and the dependance of the other is greater or less, absolute or limited. And consequently as man depends absolutely upon his maker for every thing, it is necessary that he should in all points conform to his maker's will.

<sup>1</sup> This section—especially pp. 38–42—was the principal target of Bentham's Fragment on Government (1776): see J. H. Burns and H. L. A. Hart (eds.), A Comment on the Commentaries and A Fragment on Government (Oxford, 1977), 422–501.

THIS will of his maker is called the law of nature. For as God, when he created matter, and endued it with a principle of mobility, established certain rules for the perpetual direction of that motion; so, when he created man, and endued him with 40 freewill to conduct himself in all parts of life, he laid down certain immutable laws of human nature, whereby that freewill is in some degree regulated and restrained, and gave him also the faculty of reason to discover the purport of those laws.

CONSIDERING the creator only as a being of infinite power, he was able unquestionably to have prescribed whatever laws he pleased to his creature, man, however unjust or severe. But as he is also a being of infinite wisdom, he has laid down only such laws as were founded in those relations of justice, that existed in the nature of things antecedent to any positive precept. These are the eternal, immutable laws of good and evil, to which the creator himself in all his dispensations conforms; and which he has enabled human reason to discover, so far as they are necessary for the conduct of human actions. Such among others are these principles: that we should live honestly, should hurt nobody, and should render ⟨1⟩ to every one its due; to which three general precepts Justinian<sup>a</sup> has reduced the whole doctrine of law.

BUT if the discovery of these first principles of the law of nature depended only upon the due exertion of right reason, and could not otherwise be ⟨2⟩ attained than by a chain of metaphysical disquisitions, mankind would have wanted some inducement to have quickened their inquiries, and the greater part of the world would have rested content in mental indolence, and ignorance its inseparable companion. As therefore the creator is a being, not only of infinite power, and wisdom, but also of infinite goodness, he has been pleased so to contrive the constitution and frame of humanity, that we should want no other prompter to enquire after and pursue the rule of right, but only our own self-love, that universal principle of action. For he has so intimately connected, so inseparably interwoven the laws of eternal justice with the happiness of each individual, that the latter cannot be attained but by observing the former; and, if the former be punctually obeyed, it cannot but induce the latter. In consequence of which mutual connection of justice and human felicity, 41 he has not perplexed the law of nature with a multitude of abstracted rules and precepts, referring merely to the fitness or unfitness of things, as some have vainly surmised; but has graciously reduced the rule of obedience to this one paternal precept, "that man should pursue his ⟨3⟩ own happiness." This is the foundation of what we call ethics, or natural law. For the several articles into which it is branched in our systems, amount to no more than demonstrating, that this or that action tends to man's real happiness, and therefore very justly concluding that the performance of it is a part of the law of nature; or, on the other hand, that this or that action is destructive of man's real happiness, and therefore that the law of nature forbids it.

<sup>a</sup> Juris praecepta sunt haec, honeste vivere, alterum non laedere, suum cuique tribuere. [The precepts of the law are these, to live honestly, not to harm another, and to give every one his due.] Inst 1. 1. 5.

THIS law of nature, being co-eval with mankind and dictated by God himself, is of course superior in obligation to any other. It is binding over all the globe, in all countries, and at all times: no human laws are of any validity, if contrary to this; and such of them as are valid derive all their force, and all their authority, mediately or immediately, from this original.

BUT in order to apply this to the particular exigencies of each individual, it is still necessary to have recourse to reason; whose office it is to discover, as was before observed, what the law of nature directs in every circumstance of life; by considering, what method will tend the most effectually to our own substantial happiness. And if our reason were always, as in our first ancestor before his transgression, clear and perfect, unruffled by passions, unclouded by prejudice, unimpaired by disease or intemperance, the task would be pleasant and easy; we should need no other guide but this. But every man now finds the contrary in his own experience; that his reason is corrupt, and his understanding full of ignorance and error.

THIS has given manifold occasion for the benign interposition of divine providence; which, in compassion to the frailty, the imperfection, and the blindness of human reason, hath been pleased, at sundry times and in divers manners, to discover and enforce its laws by an immediate and direct revelation. The doctrines thus delivered we call the revealed or divine law, and they are to be found only in the holy scriptures. These precepts, when revealed, are found upon comparison to be really a part of the original law of nature, as they tend in all their consequences to man's felicity. But we are not from thence to conclude that the knowledge of these truths was attainable by reason, in its present corrupted state; since we find that, until they were revealed, they were hid from the wisdom of ages. As then the moral precepts of this law are indeed of the same original with those of the law of nature, so their intrinsic obligation is of equal strength and perpetuity. Yet undoubtedly the revealed law (4) is (humanly speaking) of infinitely more authority than what we generally call the natural law. Because one is the law of nature, expressly declared so to be by God himself; the other is only what, by the assistance of human reason, we imagine to be that law. If we could be as certain of the latter as we are of the former, both would have an equal authority; but, till then, they can never be put in any competition together.

42

UPON these two foundations, the law of nature and the law of revelation, depend all human laws; that is to say, no human laws should be suffered to contradict these. There is, it is true, a great number of indifferent points, in which both the divine law and the natural leave a man at his own liberty; but which are found necessary for the benefit of society to be restrained within certain limits. And herein it is that human laws have their greatest force and efficacy; for, with regard to such points as are not indifferent, human laws are only declaratory of, and act in subordination to, the former. To instance in the case of murder: this is expressly forbidden by the divine, and demonstrably by the natural law; and from these prohibitions arises the true unlawfulness of this crime. Those human laws, that annex a punishment to it, do not 43 at all increase its moral guilt, or superadd any fresh obligation in foro conscientiae [in the court of conscience] to abstain from its perpetration. Nay, if any human law should allow or injoin us to commit it, we are bound to transgress that human law, or else we must offend both the natural and the divine. But with regard to matters that are in themselves indifferent, and are not commanded or forbidden by those superior laws; such, for instance, as exporting of wool into foreign countries; here the inferior legislature has scope and opportunity to interpose, and to make that action unlawful which before was not so.

IF man were to live in a state of nature, unconnected with other individuals, there would be no occasion for any other laws, than the law of nature, and the law of God. Neither could any other law possibly exist; for a law always supposes some superior who is to make it; and in a state of nature we are all equal, without any other superior but him who is the author of our being. But man was formed for society; and, as is demonstrated by the writers on this subject<sup>b</sup>, is neither capable of living alone, nor indeed has the courage to do it. However, as it is impossible for the whole race of mankind to be united in one great society, they must necessarily divide into many; and form separate states, commonwealths, and nations; entirely independent of each other, and yet liable to a mutual intercourse. Hence arises a third kind of law to regulate this mutual intercourse, called “the law of nations;” which, as none of these states will acknowledge a superiority in the other, cannot be dictated by either; but depends entirely upon the rules of natural law, or upon mutual compacts, treaties, leagues, and agreements between these several communities: in the construction also of which compacts we have no other rule to resort to, but the law of nature; being the only one to which (5) both communities are equally subject: and therefore the civil law<sup>c</sup> very justly observes, that quod naturalis ratio inter omnes homines constituit, vocatur jus gentium [what natural reason has dictated to all men, is called the law of nations].

44 THUS much I thought it necessary to premise concerning the law of nature, the revealed law, and the law of nations, before I proceeded to treat more fully of the principal subject of this section, municipal or civil law; that is, the rule by which particular districts, communities, or nations are governed; being thus defined by Justinian<sup>d</sup>, “jus civile est quod quisque sibi populus constituit [the civil law is what every people has established for itself].” I call it municipal law, in compliance with common speech; for, tho’ strictly that expression denotes the particular customs of one single municipium or free town, yet it may with sufficient propriety be applied to any one state or nation, which is governed by the same laws and customs.

MUNICIPAL law, thus understood, is properly defined to be “a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong.” Let us endeavour to explain its several properties, as they arise out of this definition.

<sup>b</sup> Puffendorf, l. 7. c. 1. compared with Barbeyrac’s commentary.

<sup>c</sup> Ef. I. I. 9.

<sup>d</sup> Inst. 1. 2. 1.

AND, first, it is a rule; not a transient sudden order from a superior to or concerning a particular person; but something permanent, uniform, and universal. Therefore a particular act of the legislature to confiscate the goods of Titius,<sup>2</sup> or to attain him of high treason, does not enter into the idea of a municipal law: for the operation of this act is spent upon Titius only, and has no relation to the community in general; it is rather a sentence than a law. But an act to declare that the crime of which Titius is accused shall be deemed high treason; this has permanency, uniformity, and universality, and therefore is properly a rule. It is also called a rule, to distinguish it from advice or counsel, which we are at liberty to follow or not, as we see proper; and to judge upon the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the thing advised. Whereas our obedience to the law depends not upon our approbation, but upon the maker's will. Counsel is only matter of persuasion, law is matter of injunction; counsel acts only upon the willing, law upon the unwilling also.

It is also called a rule, to distinguish it from a compact or agreement; for a compact 45 is a promise proceeding from us, law is a command directed to us. The language of a compact is, "I will, or will not, do this;" that of a law is, "thou shalt, or shalt not, do it." It is true there is an obligation which a compact carries with it, equal in point of conscience to that of a law; but then the original of the obligation is different. In compacts, we ourselves determine and promise what shall be done, before we are obliged to do it; in laws, we are obliged to act, without ourselves determining or promising any thing at all. Upon these accounts law is defined to be "a rule."

MUNICIPAL law is also "a rule of civil conduct." This distinguishes municipal law from the natural, or revealed; the former of which is the rule of moral conduct, and the latter not only the rule of moral conduct, but also the rule of faith. These regard man as a creature, and point out his duty to God, to himself, and to his neighbour, considered in the light of an individual. But municipal or civil law regards him also as a citizen, and bound to other duties towards his neighbour, than those of mere nature and religion: duties, which he has engaged in by enjoying the benefits of the common union; and which amount to no more, than that he do contribute, on his part, to the subsistence and peace of the society.

It is likewise "a rule prescribed." Because a bare resolution, confined in the breast of the legislator, without manifesting itself by some external sign, can never be properly a law. It is requisite that this resolution be notified to the people who are to obey it. But the manner in which this notification is to be made, is matter of very great indifference. It may be notified by universal tradition and long practice, which supposes a previous publication, and is the case of the common law of England. It may be notified, viva voce, by officers appointed for that purpose, as is done with regard to proclamations, and such acts of parliament as are appointed to be publicly 46 read in churches and other assemblies. It may lastly be notified by writing, printing, or the like; which is the general course taken with all our acts of parliament. Yet, whatever way is made use of, it is incumbent on the promulgators to do it in the most public and perspicuous manner; not like Caligula, who (according to Dio Cassius) wrote his laws in a very small character, and hung them up upon high pillars, the more effectually to ensnare the people.<sup>3</sup> There is still a more unreasonable method than this, which is called making of laws ex post facto [after the fact]; when after (6) an action is committed, the legislator then for the first time declares it to have been a crime, and inflicts a punishment upon the person who has committed it; here it is impossible that the party could foresee that an action, innocent when it was done, should be afterwards converted to guilt by a subsequent law; he had therefore no cause to abstain from it; and all punishment for not abstaining must of consequence be cruel and unjust<sup>c</sup>. All laws should be therefore made to commence in futuro [in the future], and be notified before their commencement; which is implied in the term “prescribed.” But when this rule is in the usual manner notified, or prescribed, it is then the subject’s business to be thoroughly acquainted therewith; for if ignorance, of what he might know, were admitted as a legitimate excuse, the laws would be of no effect, but might always be eluded with impunity.

<sup>2</sup> 'Titius' is the name often used generically to represent a fictitious party to hypothetical cases discussed in the Digest and texts on feudal law.

BUT farther: municipal law is “a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state.” For legislature, as was before observed, is the greatest act of superiority that can be exercised by one being over another. Wherefore it is requisite to the very essence of a law, that it be made by the supreme power. Sovereignty and legislature are indeed convertible terms; one cannot subsist without the other.

47 THIS (7) will naturally lead us into a short enquiry concerning the nature of society and civil government; and the natural, inherent right that belongs to the sovereignty of a state, wherever that sovereignty be lodged, of making and enforcing laws.

THE only true and natural foundations of society are the wants and the fears of individuals. Not that we can believe, with some theoretical writers, that there ever was a time when there was no such thing as (8) society; and that, from the impulse of reason, and through a sense of their wants and weaknesses, individuals met together in a large plain, entered into an original contract, and chose the tallest man present to be their governor.<sup>4</sup> This notion, of an actually existing unconnected state of nature, is too wild to be seriously admitted; and besides it is plainly contradictory to the revealed accounts of the primitive origin of mankind, and their preservation two thousand years afterwards; both which were effected by the means of single families.<sup>5</sup> These formed the first society, among themselves; (9) which every day extended its

<sup>c</sup> Such laws among the Romans were denominated privilegia, or private laws, of which Cicero de leg. 3. 19. and in his oration pro domo, 17. thus speaks; “Vetant leges sacratae, vetant duodecim tabulae, leges privatis hominibus irrogari; id enim est privilegium. Nemo unquam tulit, nihil est crudelius, nihil perniciosius, nihil quod minus haec civitas ferre possit.” [The sacred laws, the laws of the twelve tables, forbid legislation imposed only on private individuals; for that is privilegium. There has never been an instance of it: nothing could be more cruel, nothing more injurious, nothing less tolerable to this city.]

<sup>3</sup> Cassius Dio, Historia Romana (c. 202–c. 224 AD), I. 59, c. 28.

<sup>4</sup> Blackstone’s sarcasm was most likely aimed here at Thomas Hobbes and John Locke, both of whom constructed theories of governance based on overcoming the dangers of a pre-social state of nature.

<sup>5</sup> Blackstone is referring here to the Garden of Eden (Gen., 2–3), and Noah’s Ark (Gen., 6–9).

limits, and when it grew too large to subsist with convenience in that pastoral state, wherein the patriarchs appear to have lived, it necessarily subdivided itself by various migrations into more. Afterwards, as agriculture increased, which employs and can maintain a much greater number of hands, migrations became less frequent; and various tribes, which had formerly separated, reunited again; sometimes by compulsion and conquest, sometimes by accident, and sometimes perhaps by compact. But though society had not its formal beginning from any convention of individuals, actuated by their wants and their fears; yet it is the sense of their weakness and imperfection that keeps mankind together; that demonstrates the necessity of this union; and that therefore is the solid and natural foundation, as well as <10> the cement, of society. And this is what we mean by the original contract of society; which, though perhaps in no instance it has ever been formally expressed at the first institution of a state, yet in nature and reason must always be understood and implied, in the very act of associating together: namely, that the whole should protect all its parts, and that every part should pay obedience to the will of the whole; or, in other words, that the community should guard the rights of each individual member, and that (in return for this protection) each individual should submit to the laws of the community; without which submission of all it was impossible that protection could be certainly extended to any. 48

FOR when <11> society is once formed, government results of course, as necessary to preserve and to keep that society in order. Unless some superior <12> were constituted, whose commands and decisions all the members are bound to obey, they would still remain as in a state of nature, without any judge upon earth to define their several rights, and redress their several wrongs. But, as all the members <13> of society are naturally equal, it may be asked, in whose hands are the reins of government to be entrusted? To this the general answer is easy; but the application of it to particular cases has occasioned one half of those mischiefs which are apt to proceed from misguided political zeal. In general, all mankind will agree that government should be reposed in such persons, in whom those qualities are most likely to be found, the perfection of which are among the attributes of him who is emphatically stiled the supreme being; the three grand requisites, I mean, of wisdom, of goodness, and of power: wisdom, to discern the real interest of the community; goodness, to endeavour always to pursue that real interest; and strength, or power, to carry this knowledge and intention into action. These are the natural foundations of sovereignty, and these are the requisites that ought to be found in every well constituted frame of government.

How the several forms of government we now see in the world at first actually began, is matter of great uncertainty, and has occasioned infinite disputes. It is not my business or intention to enter into any of them. However they began, or by what right soever they subsist, there is and must be in all of them a supreme, irresistible, absolute, uncontrolled authority, in which the jura summi imperii [rights of supreme power], or the rights of sovereignty, reside. And this authority is placed in those hands, wherein (according to the opinion of the founders of such respective states, either expressly given, or collected from their tacit approbation) the qualities requisite for supremacy, wisdom, goodness, and power, are the most likely to be found. 49

THE political writers of antiquity will not allow more than three regular forms of government; the first, when the sovereign power is lodged in an aggregate assembly consisting of all (14) the members of a community, which is called a democracy; the second, when it is lodged in a council, composed of select members, and then it is stiled an aristocracy; the last, when it is entrusted in the hands of a single person, and then it takes the name of a monarchy. All other species of government, they say, are either corruptions of, or reducible to, these three.

By the sovereign power, as was before observed, is meant the making of laws; for wherever that power resides, all others must conform to, and be directed by it, whatever appearance the outward form and administration of the government may put on. For it is at any time in the option of the legislature to alter that form and administration by a new edict or rule, and to put the execution of the laws into whatever hands it (15) pleases: and all the other powers of the state must obey the legislative power in the (16) execution of their several functions, or else the constitution is at an end.

IN a democracy, where the right of making laws resides in the people at large, public virtue, or goodness of intention, is more likely to be found, than either of the other qualities of government. Popular assemblies are frequently foolish in their contrivance, and weak in their execution; but generally mean to do the thing that is 50 right and just, and have always a degree of patriotism or public spirit. In aristocracies there is more wisdom to be found, than in the other frames of government; being composed, or intended to be composed, of the most experienced citizens; but there is less honesty than in a republic, and less strength than in a monarchy. A monarchy is indeed the most powerful of (17) any, all the sinews of government being knit together, and united in the hand of the prince; but then there is imminent danger of his employing that strength to improvident or oppressive purposes.

THUS these three species of government have, all of them, their several perfections and imperfections. Democracies are usually the best calculated to direct the end of a law; aristocracies to invent the means by which that end shall be obtained; and monarchies to carry those means into execution. And the antients, as was observed, had in general no idea of any other permanent form of government but these three; for though Cicero<sup>f</sup> declares himself of opinion, “esse optime constitutam rempublicam, quae ex tribus generibus illis, regali, optimo, et populari, sit modice confusa [that the best constituted republic is that which is duly compounded of these three estates, regal, aristocratic, and democratic];” yet Tacitus treats this notion of a mixed government, formed out of them all, and partaking of the advantages of each, as a visionary whim; and one that, if effected, could never be lasting or secure<sup>g</sup>.

BUT happily for us of this island, the British constitution has long remained, and I trust will long continue, a standing exception to the truth of this observation. For, as with us the executive power of the laws is lodged in a single person, they have all the advantages of strength and dispatch, that are to be found in the most absolute monarchy; and, as the legislature of the kingdom is entrusted to three distinct powers, entirely independent of each other; first, the king; secondly, the lords spiritual and temporal, which is an aristocratical assembly of persons selected for their piety, their birth, their wisdom, their valour, or their property; and, thirdly, the house of commons, freely chosen by the people from among themselves, which makes it a kind of democracy; as this aggregate body, actuated by different springs, and attentive to different interests, composes the British parliament, and has the supreme disposal of every thing; there can no inconvenience be attempted by either of the three branches, but will be withstood by one of the other two; each branch being armed with a negative power, sufficient to repel any innovation which it shall think inexpedient or dangerous. 51

<sup>f</sup> In his fragments de rep. l. 2.

<sup>g</sup> “Cunctas nationes et urbes populus, aut primores, aut singuli regunt: delecta ex his, et constituta reipublicae forma laudari facilius quam evenire, vel, si evenit, haud diuturna esse potest.” [The government of all nations is either democratic, aristocratic, or monarchical. It is easier to approve of a government composed of these three in the form of a republic than to carry it into execution, or if effected, it cannot be lasting.] Ann. l. 4.

HERE then is lodged the sovereignty of the British constitution; and lodged as beneficially as is possible for society. For in no other shape could we be so certain of finding the three great qualities of government so well and so happily united. If the supreme power were lodged in any one of the three branches separately, we must be exposed to the inconveniences of either absolute monarchy, aristocracy, or democracy; and so want two of the three principal ingredients of good polity, either virtue, wisdom, or power. If it were lodged in any two of the branches; for instance, in the king and house of lords, our laws might be providently made, and well executed, but they might not always have the good of the people in view: if lodged in the king and commons, we should want that circumspection and mediatory caution, which the wisdom of the peers is to afford: if the supreme rights of legislature were lodged in the two houses only, and the king had no negative upon their proceedings, they might be tempted to encroach upon the royal prerogative, or perhaps to abolish the kingly office, and thereby weaken (if not totally destroy) the strength of the executive power. But the constitutional government of this island is so admirably tempered and compounded, that nothing can endanger or hurt it, but destroying the equilibrium of power between one branch of the legislature and the rest. For if ever it should happen that the independence of any one of the three should be lost, or that it should become subservient to the views of either of the other two, there would soon be an end of our constitution. 52

The legislature would be changed from that, <18> which was originally set up by the general consent and fundamental act of the society; and such a change, however effected, is according to Mr Locke<sup>h</sup> (who perhaps carries his theory too far) at once an entire dissolution of the bands of government; and the people <19> would be reduced to a state of anarchy, with liberty to constitute to themselves a new legislative power.

HAVING thus cursorily considered the three usual species of government, and our own singular constitution, selected and compounded from them all, I proceed to observe, that, as the power of making laws constitutes the supreme authority, so wherever the supreme authority in any state resides, it is the right of that authority to make laws; that is, in the words of our definition, to prescribe the rule of civil action.

<sup>h</sup> On government, part 2. §. 212.

And this may be discovered from the very end and institution of civil states. For a state is a collective body, composed of a multitude of individuals, united for their safety and convenience, and intending to act together as one man. If it therefore is to act as one man, it ought to act by one uniform will. But, inasmuch as political communities are made up of many natural persons, each of whom has his particular will and inclination, these several wills cannot by any natural union be joined together, or tempered and disposed into a lasting harmony, so as to constitute and produce that one uniform will of the whole. It can therefore be no otherwise produced than by a political union; by the consent of all persons to submit their own private wills to the will of one man, or of one or more assemblies of men, to whom the supreme authority is entrusted: and this will of that one man, or assemblage of men, is in different states, according to their different constitutions, understood to be law.

53 THUS far as to the right of the supreme power to make laws; but farther, it is its duty likewise. For since the respective members are bound to conform themselves to the will of the state, it is expedient that they receive directions from the state declaratory of that its will. But since it is impossible, in so great a multitude, to give injunctions to every particular man, relative to each particular action, (20) therefore the state establishes general rules, for the perpetual information and direction of all persons in all points, whether of positive or negative duty. And this, in order that every man may know what to look upon as his own, what as another's; what absolute and what relative duties are required at his hands; what is to be esteemed honest, dishonest, or indifferent; what degree every man retains of his natural liberty; what he has given up as the price of the benefits of society; and after what manner each person is to moderate the use and exercise of those rights which the state assigns him, in order to promote and secure the public tranquillity.

FROM what has been advanced, the truth of the former branch of our definition, is (I trust) sufficiently evident; that "municipal law is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state." I proceed now to the latter branch of it; that it is a rule so prescribed, "commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong."

Now in order to do this completely, it is first of all necessary that the boundaries of right and wrong be established and ascertained by law. And when this is once done, it will follow of course that it is likewise the business of the law, considered as a rule of civil conduct, to enforce these rights and to restrain or redress these wrongs. It remains therefore only to consider in what manner the law is said to ascertain the boundaries of right and wrong; and the methods which it takes to command the one and prohibit the other.

54 FOR this purpose every law may be said to consist of several parts: one, declaratory; whereby the rights to be observed, and the wrongs to be eschewed, are clearly defined and laid down: another, directory; whereby the subject is instructed and enjoined to observe those rights, and to abstain from the commission of those wrongs: a third, remedial; whereby a method is pointed out to recover a man's private rights, or redress his private wrongs: to which may be added a fourth, usually termed the sanction, or vindictory branch of the law; whereby it is signified what evil or penalty shall be incurred by such as commit any public wrongs, and transgress or neglect their duty.

WITH regard to the first of these, the declaratory part of the municipal law, this depends not so much upon the law of revelation or of nature, as upon the wisdom and will of the legislator. This doctrine, which before was slightly touched, deserves a more particular explication. Those rights then which God and nature have established, and are therefore called natural rights, such as are life and liberty, need not the aid of human laws to be more effectually invested in every man than they are; neither do they receive any additional strength when declared by the municipal laws to be inviolable. On the contrary, no human legislature has power to abridge or destroy them, unless the owner shall himself commit some act that amounts to a forfeiture. Neither do divine or natural duties (such as, for instance, the worship of God, the maintenance of children, and the like) receive any stronger sanction from being also declared to be duties by the law of the land. The case is the same as to crimes and misdemeanors, that are forbidden by the superior laws, and therefore stiled mala in se [wrongs in themselves], such as murder, theft, and perjury; which contract no additional turpitude from being declared unlawful by the inferior legislature. For that legislature in all these cases acts only, as was before observed, in subordination to the great lawgiver, transcribing and publishing his precepts. So that, upon the whole, the declaratory part of the municipal law has no force or operation at all, with regard to actions that are naturally and intrinsically right or wrong.

BUT with regard to things in themselves indifferent, the case is entirely altered. 55 These become either right or wrong, just or unjust, duties or misdemeanors, according as the municipal legislator sees proper, for promoting the welfare of the society, and more effectually carrying on the purposes of civil life. Thus our own common law has declared, that the goods of the wife do instantly upon marriage become the property and right of the husband; and our statute law has declared all monopolies a public offence: yet that right, and this offence, have no foundation in nature; but are merely created by the law, for the purposes of civil society. And sometimes, where the thing itself has its rise from the law of nature, the particular circumstances and mode of doing it become right or wrong, as the laws of the land shall direct. Thus, for instance, in civil duties; obedience to superiors is the doctrine of revealed as well as natural religion: but who those superiors shall be, and in what circumstances, or to what degrees they shall be obeyed, is the province of human laws to determine. And so, as to injuries or crimes, it must be left to our own legislature to decide, in what cases the seising another's cattle shall amount to <21> the crime of robbery; and where it shall be a justifiable action, as when a landlord takes them by way of distress for rent.

THUS much for the declaratory part of the municipal law: and the directory stands much upon the same footing; for this virtually includes the former, the declaration being usually collected from the direction. The law that says, "thou shalt not steal," implies a declaration that stealing is a crime. And we have seen that, in things naturally indifferent, the very essence of right and wrong depends upon the direction of the laws to do or to <22> omit it.

THE remedial part of a law is so necessary a consequence of the former two, that laws must be very vague and imperfect without it. For in vain would rights be declared, in vain directed to be observed, if there were no method of recovering and 56 asserting those rights, when wrongfully withheld or invaded. This is what we mean properly, when we speak of the protection of the law. When, for instance, the declaratory part of the law has said “that the field or inheritance, which belonged to Titius’s father, is vested by his death in Titius;” and the directory part has “forbidden any one to enter on another’s property without the leave of the owner;” if Gaius after this will presume to take possession of the land, the remedial part of the law will then interpose its office; will make Gaius restore the possession to Titius, and also pay him damages for the invasion.<sup>6</sup>

WITH regard to the sanction of laws, or the evil that may attend the breach of public duties; it is observed, that human legislators have for the most part chosen to make the sanction of their laws rather vindictory than remuneratory, or to consist rather in punishments, than in actual particular rewards. Because, in the first place, the quiet enjoyment and protection of all our civil rights and liberties, which are the sure and general consequence of obedience to the municipal law, are in themselves the best and most valuable of all rewards. Because also, were the exercise of every virtue to be enforced by the proposal of particular rewards, it were impossible for any state to furnish stock enough for so profuse a bounty. And farther, because the dread of evil is a much more forcible principle of human actions than the prospect of good<sup>i</sup>. For which reasons, though a prudent bestowing of rewards is sometimes of exquisite use, yet we find that those civil laws, which enforce and enjoin our duty, do seldom, if ever, propose any privilege or gift to such as obey the law; but do constantly come armed with a penalty denounced against transgressors, either expressly defining the nature and quantity of the punishment, or else leaving it to the discretion of the judges, and those who are entrusted with the care of putting the laws in execution.

57 OF all the parts of a law the most effectual is the vindictory. For it is but lost labour to say, “do this, or avoid that,” unless we also declare, “this shall be the consequence of your noncompliance.” We must therefore observe, that the main strength and force of a law consists in the penalty annexed to it. Herein is to be found the principal obligation of human laws.

LEGISLATORS and their laws are said to compel and oblige; not that by any natural violence they so constrain a man, as to render it impossible for him to act otherwise than as they direct, which is the strict sense of obligation: but because, by declaring and exhibiting a penalty against offenders, they bring it to pass that no man can easily choose to transgress the law; since, by reason of the impending correction, compliance is in a high degree preferable to disobedience. And, even where rewards are proposed as well as punishments threatened, the obligation of the law seems chiefly to consist in the penalty: for rewards, in their nature, can only persuade and allure; nothing is compulsory but punishment.

It is (23) held, it is true, and very justly, by the principal of our ethical writers, that human laws are binding upon mens consciences. But if that were the only, or most forcible obligation, the good only would regard the laws, and the bad would set them at defiance. And, true as this principle is, it must still be understood with some restriction. It holds, I apprehend, as to rights; and that, when the law has determined the field to belong to Titius, it is matter of conscience no longer to withhold or to invade it. So also in regard to natural duties, and such offences as are mala in se [wrongs in themselves]: here we are bound in conscience, because we are bound by superior laws, before those human laws were in being, to perform the one and abstain from the other. But in relation to those laws which enjoin only positive duties, and forbid only such things as are not mala in se but mala prohibita [wrongs, because forbidden] <24> merely, annexing a penalty to noncompliance, here I apprehend 58 conscience is no farther concerned, than by directing a submission to the penalty, in case of our breach of those laws: for otherwise the multitude of penal laws in a state would not only be looked upon as an impolitic, but would also be a very wicked thing; if every such law were a snare for the conscience of the subject. But in these cases the alternative is offered to every man; “either abstain from this, or submit to such a penalty;” and his conscience will be clear, whichever side of the alternative he thinks proper to embrace. Thus, by the statutes for preserving the game, a penalty is denounced against every unqualified person <25> that kills a hare. <26> Now this prohibitory law does not make the transgression a moral offence: the only obligation in conscience is to submit to the penalty if levied.

<sup>i</sup> Locke, Hum. Und. b. 2. c. 21.

<sup>6</sup> Like ‘Titius’ (note 2 above), the name ‘Gaius’ is conventional.

I HAVE now gone through the definition laid down of a municipal law; and have shewn that it is “a rule—of civil conduct—prescribed—by the supreme power in a state—commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong:” in the explication of which I have endeavoured to interweave a few useful principles, concerning the nature of civil government, and the obligation of human laws. Before I conclude this section, it may not be amiss to add a few observations concerning the interpretation of laws.

WHEN any doubt arose upon the construction of the Roman laws, the usage was to state the case to the emperor in writing, and take his opinion upon it. This was certainly a bad method of interpretation. To interrogate the legislature to decide particular disputes, is not only endless, but affords great room for partiality and oppression. The answers of the emperor were called his rescripts, and these had in succeeding cases the force of perpetual laws; though they ought to be carefully distinguished, by every rational civilian, from those general constitutions, which had only the nature of things for their guide. The emperor Macrinus, as his historian Capitolinus informs us, had once resolved to abolish these rescripts, and retain only 59 the general edicts; he could not bear that the hasty and crude answers of such princes as Commodus and Caracalla should be revered as laws. But Justinian thought otherwise<sup>k</sup>, and he has preserved them all. In like manner the canon laws, or decretal epistles of the popes, are all of them rescripts in the strictest sense. Contrary to all true forms of reasoning, they argue from particulars to generals.

THE fairest and most rational method to interpret the will of the legislator, is by exploring his intentions at the time when the law was made, by signs the most natural and probable. And these signs are either the words, the context, the subject matter, the effects and consequence, or the spirit and reason of the law. Let us take a short view of them all.

<sup>k</sup> Inst. 1. 2. 6.

1. Words are generally to be understood in their usual and most known signification; not so much regarding the propriety of grammar, as their general and popular use. Thus the law mentioned by Puffendorf<sup>1</sup>, which forbid a layman to lay hands on a priest, was adjudged to extend to him, who had hurt a priest with a weapon.<sup>7</sup> Again; terms of art, or technical terms, must be taken according to the acceptation of the learned in each art, trade, and science. So in the act of settlement,<sup>8</sup> where the crown of England is limited “to the princess Sophia, and the heirs of her body, being protestants,” it becomes necessary to call in the assistance of lawyers, to ascertain the precise idea of the words “heirs of her body,” which in a legal sense comprize only certain of her lineal <27> descendants. Lastly, where words are clearly repugnant in two laws, the later law takes place of the elder: leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant [subsequent laws repeal their contrary predecessors] is a maxim of universal law, as well as of our own constitutions. And accordingly it was laid down by a law of the twelve tables at Rome, quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto [what the people have last enacted, let that be the settled law].

60 2. If words happen to be still dubious, we may establish their meaning from the context; with which it may be of singular use to compare a word, or a sentence, whenever they are ambiguous, equivocal, or intricate. Thus the proeme, or preamble, is often called in to help the construction of an act of parliament. Of the same nature and use is the comparison of a law with other laws, that are made by the same legislator, that have some affinity with the subject, or that expressly relate to the same point. Thus, when the law of England declares murder to be felony without benefit of clergy, we must resort to the same law of England to learn what the benefit of clergy is: and, when the common law censures simoniacal contracts, it affords great light to the subject to consider what the canon law has adjudged to be simony.

3. As to the subject matter, words are always to be understood as having a regard thereto; for that is always supposed to be in the eye of the legislator, and all his expressions directed to that end. Thus, when a law of our Edward III forbids all ecclesiastical persons to purchase provisions at Rome,<sup>9</sup> it might seem to prohibit the buying of grain and other victual; but when we consider that the statute was made to repress the usurpations of the papal see, and that the nominations <28> to vacant benefices by the pope were called provisions, we shall see that the restraint is intended to be laid upon such provisions only.

4. As to the effects and consequence, the rule is, where words bear either none, or a very absurd signification, if literally understood, we must a little deviate from the

<sup>1</sup> L. of N. and N. 5. 12. 3.

<sup>7</sup> A ‘certain Person denied positively that he had laid Hands on a Priest, for he had only cudgell’d and kick’d him’: S. Puffendorf, Of the Law of Nature and Nations (Oxford, 1703), 52. Samuel Pufendorf (1632–94), influential German jurist and philosopher.

<sup>8</sup> Stat. 12 & 13 Will. III c. 2.

<sup>9</sup> Stat. 25 Edw. III st. 5. c. 22.

received sense of them. Therefore the Bolognian law, mentioned by Puffendorf<sup>m</sup>, which enacted “that whoever drew blood in the streets should be punished with the utmost severity,” was held after long debate not to extend to the surgeon, who opened the vein of a person that fell down in the street with a fit.

5. BUT, lastly, the most universal and effectual way of discovering the true meaning of a law, when the words are dubious, is by considering the reason and spirit of it; or the cause which moved the legislator to enact it. For when this reason ceases, the law itself ought likewise to cease with it. An instance of this is given in a case put by Cicero, or whoever was the author of ⟨29⟩ the rhetorical treatise inscribed to Herennius<sup>n</sup>. There was a law, that those who in a storm forsook the ship should forfeit all property therein; and the ship and lading should belong entirely to those who staid in it. In a dangerous tempest all the mariners forsook the ship, except only one sick passenger, who by reason of his disease was unable to get out and escape. By chance the ship came safe to port. The sick man kept possession and claimed the benefit of the law. Now here all the learned agree, that the sick man is not within the reason of the law; for the reason of making it was, to give encouragement to such as should venture their lives to save the vessel: but this is a merit, which he could never pretend to, who neither staid in the ship upon that account, nor contributed any thing to its preservation. 61

FROM this method of interpreting laws, by the reason of them, arises what we call equity; which is thus defined by Grotius<sup>o</sup>, “the correction of that, wherein the law (by reason of its universality) is deficient.”<sup>10</sup> For since in laws all cases cannot be foreseen or expressed, it is necessary, that when the general decrees of the law come to be applied to particular cases, there should be somewhere a power vested ⟨30⟩ of excepting those circumstances, which (had they been foreseen) the legislator himself would have ⟨31⟩ excepted. And these are the cases, which, as Grotius expresses it, “lex non exacte definit, sed arbitrio boni viri permittit [the law does not define exactly, but leaves something to the discretion of a good man].”

EQUITY thus depending, essentially, upon the particular circumstances of each individual case, there can be no established rules and fixed precepts of equity laid down, without destroying its very essence, and reducing it to a positive law. And, on the other hand, the liberty of considering all cases in an equitable light must not be indulged too far, lest thereby we destroy all law, and leave the decision of every question entirely in the breast of the judge. And law, without equity, tho’ hard and disagreeable, is much more desirable for the public good, than equity without law; which would make every judge a legislator, and introduce most infinite confusion; as there would then be almost as many different rules of action laid down in our courts, as there are differences of capacity and sentiment in the human mind. 62

<sup>m</sup> l. 5. c. 12. §. 8.

<sup>n</sup> l. 1. c. 11.

<sup>o</sup> ⟨32⟩ de aequitate. [s. 3.]

<sup>10</sup> Hugo Grotius (1583–1645), Dutch diplomat, lawyer, and philosopher, whose writings on natural law enjoyed wide influence.

OF THE LAWS OF ENGLAND.

THE municipal law of England, or the rule of civil conduct prescribed to the inhabitants of this kingdom, may with sufficient propriety be divided into two kinds; the lex non scripta, the unwritten, or common law; and the lex scripta, the written, or statute law.

THE lex non scripta, or unwritten law, includes not only general customs, or the common law properly so called; but also the particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom; and likewise those particular laws, that are by custom observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions.

WHEN I call these parts of our law leges non scriptae, I would not be understood as if all those laws were at present merely oral, or communicated from the former ages to the present solely by word of mouth. It is true indeed that, in the profound ignorance of letters which formerly overspread the whole western world, all laws were intirely traditional, for this plain reason, (1) that the nations among which they prevailed had but little idea of writing. Thus the British as well as the Gallic druids committed all their laws as well as learning to memory<sup>a</sup>; and it is said of the primitive Saxons here, as well as their brethren on the continent, that leges sola memoria et usu retinebant [they retained their laws solely by memory and custom]<sup>b</sup>. But with us at present the monuments and evidences of our legal customs are contained in the 64 records of the several courts of justice, in books of reports and judicial decisions, and in the treatises of learned sages of the profession, preserved and handed down to us from the times of highest antiquity. However I therefore stile these parts of our law leges non scriptae, because their original institution and authority are not set down in writing, as acts of parliament are, but they receive their binding power, and the force of laws, by long and immemorial usage, and by their universal reception throughout the kingdom. In like manner as Aulus Gellius defines the jus non scriptum to be that, which is “tacito et illiterato hominum consensu et moribus expressum [expressed or sanctioned by the tacit and unwritten customs and consent of men].”<sup>c</sup>

OUR antient lawyers, and particularly Fortescue<sup>c</sup>, insist with abundance of warmth, that these customs are as old as the primitive Britons, and continued down, through the several mutations of government and inhabitants, to the present time, unchanged and unadulterated. This may be the case as to some; but in general, as Mr Selden in his notes observes, this assertion must be understood with many

<sup>a</sup> Caes. de b. G. lib. 6. c. 13.

<sup>b</sup> Spelm. Gl. 362.

<sup>c</sup> c. 17.

<sup>1</sup> This quotation paraphrases Gellius, Noctes Atticae, 11.18.4.

grains of allowance; and ought only to signify, as the truth seems to be, that there never was any formal exchange of one system of laws for another: though doubtless by the intermixture of adventitious nations, the Romans, the Picts, the Saxons, the Danes, and the Normans, they must have insensibly introduced and incorporated many of their own customs with those that were before established: thereby in all probability improving the texture and wisdom of the whole, by the accumulated wisdom of divers particular countries. Our laws, saith lord Bacon<sup>d</sup>, are mixed as our language: and as our language is so much the richer, the laws are the more complete.<sup>2</sup>

AND indeed our antiquarians and (2) first historians do all positively assure us, that our body of laws is of this compounded nature. For they tell us, that in the time of Alfred<sup>3</sup> the local customs of the several provinces of the kingdom were grown so various, that he found it expedient to compile his dome-book or liber judicialis [book for judges],<sup>4</sup> for the general use of the whole kingdom. This book is said to have been 65 extant so late as the reign of king Edward the fourth, but is now unfortunately lost. It contained, we may probably suppose, the principal maxims of the common law, the penalties for misdemeanors, and the forms of judicial proceedings. Thus much may at least be collected from that injunction to observe it, which we find in the laws of king Edward the elder, the son of Alfred<sup>e</sup>. “Omnibus qui reipublicae praesunt, etiam atque etiam mando, ut omnibus aequos se praebeant iudices, perinde ac in judiciali libro (Saxonice, dom-bec) scriptum habetur; nec quicquam formident quin jus commune (Saxonice, folcgrifite) audacter libereque dicant.”<sup>5</sup>

BUT the irruption and establishment of the Danes in England which followed soon after, introduced new customs and caused this code of Alfred in many provinces to fall into disuse; or at least to be mixed and debased with other laws of a coarser alloy. So that about the beginning of the eleventh century there were three principal systems of laws prevailing in different districts. 1. The Mercen-Lage, or Mercian laws, which were observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales; the retreat of the antient Britons; and therefore very probably intermixed with the British or Druidical customs. 2. The West-Saxon-Lage, or laws of the west Saxons, which obtained in the counties to the south and west of the island, from Kent to Devonshire. These were probably much the same with the laws of Alfred abovementioned, being the municipal law of the far most considerable part of his dominions, and particularly including Berkshire, the seat of his peculiar residence. 3. The Dane-Lage, or Danish law, the very name of which speaks its original and composition. This was principally maintained in the rest of the midland counties,

<sup>d</sup> See his proposals for a digest [mentioned previously, I. 27 note k].

<sup>e</sup> c. 1.

<sup>2</sup> Francis Bacon, Viscount St Alban (1561–1626), jurist, lord chancellor, statesman, and philosopher.

<sup>3</sup> Alfred, ‘the Great’ (849–99), king of Wessex from 871.

<sup>4</sup> A code of laws issued by Alfred c. 893.

<sup>5</sup> ‘To all who are in charge of matters affecting the people, my positive and repeated injunction is, that they conduct themselves towards all as just judges, as it is written in the doom-book (in Saxon, dom-bec), and without fear boldly and freely to declare the common law (in Saxon, folcgrifite).’

and also on the eastern coast, <3> the seat of that piratical people. As for the very northern provinces, they were at that time under a distinct government<sup>f</sup>.

66 OUT of these three laws, Roger Hoveden<sup>g</sup> and Ranulphus<sup>h</sup> Cestrensis<sup>h</sup> inform us, king Edward the confessor extracted one uniform law or digest of laws, to be observed throughout the whole kingdom; though Hoveden and the author of an old manuscript chronicle<sup>i</sup> assure us likewise, that this work was projected and begun by his grandfather king Edgar. And indeed a general digest of the same nature has been constantly found expedient, and therefore put in practice by other great <4> nations, formed from an assemblage of little provinces, governed by peculiar customs. As in Portugal, under king Edward, about the beginning of the fifteenth century<sup>k</sup>. In Spain under Alonzo X, who about the year 1250 executed the plan of his father St. Ferdinand, and collected all the provincial customs into one uniform law, in the celebrated code entitled las partidas [the parts]<sup>l</sup>.<sup>7</sup> And in Sweden about the same aera, a universal body of common law was compiled out of the particular customs established by the laghman [law-speaker] of every province, and intitled the land's lagh,<sup>8</sup> being analogous to the common law of England<sup>m</sup>.

BOTH these undertakings, of king Edgar and Edward the confessor, seem to have been no more than a new edition, or fresh promulgation, of Alfred's code or dome-book, with such additions and improvements as the experience of a century and an half had suggested. For Alfred is generally stiled by the same historians the legum Anglicanarum conditor [founder of English law], as Edward the confessor is the restitutor [restorer]. These however are the laws which our histories so often mention under the name of the laws of Edward the confessor; which our ancestors struggled so hardly to maintain, under the first princes of the Norman line; and which subsequent princes so frequently promised to keep and to restore, as the most popular act they could do, when pressed by foreign emergencies or domestic discontents. These are the laws, that so vigorously withstood the repeated attacks of 67 the civil law; which established in the twelfth century a new Roman empire over most of the states on the continent: states that have lost, and perhaps upon that account, their political liberties; while the free constitution of England, perhaps upon the same account, has been rather improved than debased. These, in short, are the laws which gave rise and original to that collection of maxims and customs, which is now known by the name of the common law. A name either given to it, in contradistinction to other laws, as the statute law, the civil law, the law merchant, and

<sup>f</sup> Hal. Hist. 55.

<sup>g</sup> in Hen. II. [Roger of Hoveden, Chronica Majora.]

<sup>h</sup> in Edw. Confessor.

<sup>i</sup> in Seld. ad Eadmer. 6.

<sup>k</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xxii. 135.

<sup>l</sup> Ibid. xx. 211.

<sup>m</sup> Ibid. xxxiii. 21, 58.

<sup>6</sup> Ranulph Higden (d. 1364), a monk of Chester, author of Polychronicon.

<sup>7</sup> The seven-part code (Código de las Siete Partidas) of Alfonso X (1256–65).

<sup>8</sup> The landslag or Swedish national 'land-law' of Magnus IV Eriksson (c. 1350).

the like; or, more probably, as a law common to all the realm, the jus commune or folcright mentioned by king Edward the elder, after the abolition of the several provincial customs and particular laws beforementioned.

BUT though this is the most likely foundation of this collection of maxims and customs, yet the maxims and customs, so collected, are of higher antiquity than memory or history can reach: nothing being more difficult than to ascertain the precise beginning and first spring of an antient and long established custom. Whence it is that in our law the goodness of a custom depends upon its having been used time out of mind; or, in the solemnity of our legal phrase, time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. This it is that gives it its weight and authority; and of this nature are the maxims and customs which compose the common law, or lex non scripta, of this kingdom.

THIS unwritten, or common, law is properly distinguishable into three kinds: 1. General customs; which are the universal rule of the whole kingdom, and form the common law, in its stricter and more usual signification. 2. Particular customs; which for the most part affect only the inhabitants of particular districts. 3. Certain particular laws; which by custom are adopted and used by some particular courts, of pretty general and extensive jurisdiction.

I. As to general customs, or the common law, properly so called; this is that law, by which proceedings and determinations in the king's ordinary courts of justice are guided and directed. This, for the most part, settles the course in which lands descend by inheritance; the manner and form of acquiring and transferring property; the solemnities and obligation of contracts; the rules of expounding wills, deeds, and acts of parliament; the respective remedies of civil injuries; the several species of temporal offences, with the manner and degree of punishment; and an infinite number of minuter particulars, which diffuse themselves as extensively as the ordinary distribution of common justice requires. Thus, for example, that there shall be four superior courts of record, the chancery, the king's bench, the common pleas, and the exchequer;—that the eldest son alone is heir to his ancestor;—that property may be acquired and transferred by writing;—that a deed is of no validity (5) unless sealed;—that wills shall be construed more favorably, and deeds more strictly;—that money lent upon bond is recoverable by action of debt;—that breaking the public peace is an offence, and punishable by fine and imprisonment;—all these are doctrines that are not set down in any written statute or ordinance, but depend merely upon immemorial usage, that is, upon common law, for their support. 68

SOME have divided the common law into two principal grounds or foundations: 1. established customs; such as that where there are three brothers, the eldest brother shall be heir to the second, in exclusion of the youngest: and 2. established rules and maxims; as, "that the king can do no wrong, that no man shall be bound to accuse himself;" and the like. But I take these to be one and the same thing. For the authority of these maxims rests entirely upon general reception and usage; and the only method of proving, that this or that maxim is a rule of the common law, is by shewing that it hath been always the custom to observe it.

- 69 BUT here a very natural, and very material, question arises: how are these customs or maxims to be known, and by whom is their validity to be determined? The answer is, by the judges in the several courts of justice. They are (6) the depositary of the laws; the living oracles, who must decide in all cases of doubt, and who are bound by an oath to decide according to the law of the land. Their knowledge of that law is derived from experience and study; from the “viginti annorum lucubrationes [twenty years’ studies],” which Fortescue<sup>n</sup> mentions; and from being long personally accustomed to the judicial decisions of their predecessors. And indeed these judicial decisions are the principal and most authoritative evidence, that can be given, of the existence of such a custom as shall form a part of the common law. The judgment itself, and all the proceedings previous thereto, are carefully registered and preserved, under the name of records, in publick repositories set apart for that particular purpose; and to them frequent recourse is had, when any critical question arises, in the determination of which former precedents may give light or assistance. And therefore, even so early as the conquest, we find the “praeteritorum memoria eventorum [remembrance of past events]” reckoned up as one of the chief qualifications of those who were held to be “legibus patriae optime instituti [best instructed in the laws of their country].”<sup>o</sup> For it is an established rule to abide by former precedents, where the same points come again in litigation; as well to keep the scale of justice even and steady, and not liable to waver with every new judge’s opinion; as also because the law in that case being solemnly declared and determined, what before was uncertain, and perhaps indifferent, is now become a permanent rule, which it is not in the breast of any subsequent judge to alter or vary from, according to his private sentiments: he being sworn to determine, not according to his own private judgment, but according to the known laws and customs of the land; not delegated to pronounce a new law, but to maintain and expound the old one. Yet this rule admits of exception, where the former
- 70 determination is most evidently contrary to reason; much more if it be (7) contrary to the divine law. But even in such cases the subsequent judges do not pretend to make a new law, but to vindicate the old one from misrepresentation. For if it be found that the former decision is manifestly absurd or unjust, it is declared, not that such a sentence was bad law, but that it was not law; that is, that it is not the established custom of the realm, as has been erroneously determined. And hence it is that our lawyers are with justice so copious in their encomiums on the reason of the common law; that they tell us, that the law is the perfection of reason, that it always intends to conform thereto, and that what is not reason is not law. Not that the particular reason of every rule in the law can at this distance of time be always precisely assigned; but it is sufficient that there be nothing in the rule flatly contradictory to reason, and then the law will presume it to be well founded<sup>p</sup>. And it hath been an antient observation in the laws of England, that whenever a standing rule of law, of which the reason perhaps could not be remembered or discerned, hath been wantonly broke in upon by statutes or new resolutions, the wisdom of the rule hath in the end appeared from the inconveniences that have followed the innovation.

<sup>n</sup> cap. 8.

<sup>o</sup> Seld. review of Tith. c. 8.

<sup>p</sup> Herein agreeing with the civil law, Ff. l. 3. 20, 21. “Non omnium, quae a majoribus nostris constituta sunt, ratio reddi potest. Et ideo rationes eorum quae constituuntur, inquiri non oportet: alioquin multa ex his, quae certa sunt, subvertuntur.” [Reasons cannot be given for all the laws which our ancestors have appointed, therefore we should not seek them; otherwise many of those laws which are established would be subverted.]

THE doctrine of the law then is this: that precedents and rules must be followed, unless flatly absurd or unjust: for though their reason be not obvious at first view, yet we owe such a deference to former times as not to suppose they acted wholly without consideration. To illustrate this doctrine by examples. It has been determined, time out of mind, that a brother of the half (8) blood (i. e. where they have only one parent the same, and the other different) shall never succeed as heir to the estate of his half brother, but it shall rather escheat to the king, or other superior lord.<sup>9</sup> Now this is a positive law, fixed and established by custom, which custom is evidenced by judicial decisions; and therefore can never be departed from by any modern judge without a breach of his oath and the law. For herein there is nothing repugnant to natural justice; (9) though the reason of it, drawn from the feudal law, may not be quite obvious to every body. And therefore, on account of a supposed hardship upon the half brother, a modern judge might wish it had been otherwise settled; yet it is not in his power to alter it. But if any court were now to determine, that an elder brother of the half blood might enter upon and seise any lands that were purchased by his younger brother, no subsequent judges would scruple to declare that such prior determination was unjust, was unreasonable, and therefore was not law. So that the law, and the opinion of the judge are not always convertible terms, or one and the same thing; since it sometimes may happen that the judge may mistake the law. Upon the whole however, we may take it as a general rule, “that the decisions of courts of justice are the evidence of what is common law:” in the same manner as, in the civil law, what the emperor had once determined was to serve for a guide for the future<sup>4</sup>. 71

THE decisions therefore of courts are held in the highest regard, and are not only preserved as authentic records in the treasuries of the several courts, but are handed out to public view in the numerous volumes of reports which furnish the lawyer’s library. These reports are histories of the several cases, with a short summary of the proceedings, which are preserved at large in the record; the arguments on both sides; and the reasons the court gave for their judgment; taken down in short notes by persons present at the determination. And these serve as indexes to, and also to explain, the records; which always, in matters of consequence and nicety, the judges direct to be searched. The reports are extant in a regular series from the reign of king Edward the second inclusive; and from his time to that of Henry the eighth were taken by the prothonotaries,<sup>10</sup> or chief 72 scribes of the court, at the expence of the crown, and published annually, whence they are known under the denomination of the year books.<sup>11</sup> And it is much to be wished that this beneficial custom had, under proper regulations, been continued to this day: for, though king James the first at the instance of lord Bacon appointed two ⟨10⟩ reporters with a handsome stipend for this purpose, yet that wise institution was soon neglected, and from the reign of Henry the eighth to the present time this task has been executed by many private and cotemporary hands; who sometimes through haste and inaccuracy, sometimes through mistake and want of skill, have published very crude and imperfect (perhaps contradictory) accounts of one and the same determination. Some of the most valuable of the antient reports are those published by lord chief justice Coke; a man of infinite learning in his profession, though not a little infected with the pedantry and quaintness of the times he lived in, which appear strongly in all his works.<sup>12</sup> However his writings are so highly esteemed, that they are generally cited without the author's name<sup>r</sup>.

<sup>4</sup> “Si imperialis majestas causam cognitionaliter examinaverit, et partibus cominus constitutis sententiam dixerit, omnes omnino iudices, qui sub nostro imperio sunt, sciant hanc esse legem, non solum illi causae pro qua producta est, sed et in omnibus similibus.” [If the Emperor shall have examined the cause, and shall immediately declare his opinion, let all the judges of the land know that this is law, not only with respect to that cause which first produced the opinion, but in all similar cases.] C. 1. 14. 12.

<sup>9</sup> This rule is discussed further at II. 153–7.

<sup>10</sup> Prothonotary (from Gk. πρωτονοτάριος, officer who held a court in Byzantium); a chief clerk or registrar in the Court of Common Pleas.

BESIDES these reporters, there are also other authors, to whom great veneration and respect is paid by the students of the common law. Such are Glanvil<sup>13</sup> and Bracton,<sup>14</sup> Britton<sup>15</sup> and Fleta,<sup>16</sup> ⟨11⟩ Littleton<sup>17</sup> and Fitzherbert,<sup>18</sup> with some others of antient date, whose treatises are cited as authority; and are evidence that cases have formerly happened in which such and such points were determined, which are now become settled and first principles. One of the last of these methodical writers in point of time, whose works are of any intrinsic authority in the courts of justice, and do not entirely depend on the strength of their quotations from older authors, is the same learned judge we have just mentioned, sir Edward Coke; who hath written four volumes of institutes, as he is pleased to call them, though they have little of the institutional method to warrant such a title. The first volume is a very extensive comment upon a little excellent treatise of tenures, compiled by judge Littleton in the reign of Edward the fourth. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common law learning, collected and heaped together from the antient reports and year books, but greatly defective in method<sup>s</sup>. The second volume is a <sup>r</sup> His reports, for instance, are stiled, κατ'εξοχην [by way of pre-eminence], the reports; and in quoting them we usually say, 1 or 2 Rep. not 1 or 2 Coke's Rep. as in citing other authors. The reports of judge Croke are also cited in a peculiar manner, by the name of those princes, in whose reigns the cases reported in his three volumes were determined; viz. Qu. Elizabeth, K. James, and K. Charles the first; as well as by the number of each volume. For sometimes we call them, 1, 2, and 3 Cro. but more commonly Cro. Eliz. Cro. Jac. and Cro. Car.

<sup>s</sup> It is usually cited either by the name of Co. Litt. or as 1 Inst.

<sup>11</sup> Unofficial collections of case notes from c. 1268 to 1535, with a standard 'vulgate' edition of 1679. See now An Index and Paraphrase of Printed Year Book Reports, 1268–1535, comp. D. Seipp (www.bu.edu/law/seipp).

<sup>12</sup> Sir Edward Coke (1552–1634), jurist and legal author, successively chief justice of common pleas and king's bench.

<sup>13</sup> Ranulf de Glanvil [Glanvill] (d. 1190), justiciar, supposed author of the first treatise on the common law, the Tractatus de legibus et consuetudinibus regni Angliae (completed c. 1186–9).

<sup>14</sup> Henry de Bracton [Henry of Bratton] (d. 1268), judge and ecclesiastic, purported author but more probably reviser of De Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliae (c. 1235; 1st printed edn, 1569), an early treatise on English law.

<sup>15</sup> John le Britton [Breton] (d. 1275), justice and bishop of Hereford, to whom was attributed (presumably in an earlier form) a practical work on English law, the Britton (c. 1290–1300).

<sup>16</sup> Anonymous author of Fleta, seu Commentarius juris Anglicani (c. 1290), possibly Matthew of the Exchequer, presumed an inmate of the Fleet prison, London, at the time it was compiled.

<sup>17</sup> Sir Thomas Littleton (d. 1481), justice of common pleas and author of Tenures (first published c. 1481), a treatise on real property law.

<sup>18</sup> Sir Anthony Fitzherbert (c. 1470–1538), justice of common pleas and legal author.

comment upon many old acts of parliament, without any systematical order; the third a more methodical treatise of the pleas of the crown; and the fourth an account of the several species of courts†.

AND thus much for the first ground and chief corner stone of the laws of England, which is, general immemorial custom, or common law, from time to time declared in the decisions of the courts of justice; which decisions are preserved among our public records, explained in our reports, and digested for general use in the authoritative writings of the venerable sages of the law.

THE Roman law, as practised in the times of its liberty, paid also a great regard to custom; but not so much as our law: it only then adopting it, when (13) the written law is deficient. Though the reasons alleged in the digest<sup>u</sup> will fully justify our practice, in making it of equal authority with, when it is not contradicted by, the written law. “For since, says Julianus,<sup>19</sup> the written law binds us for no other reason but because it is approved by the judgment of the people, therefore those laws which the people hath approved without writing ought also to bind every body. For where is the difference, whether the people declare their assent to a law by suffrage, or by a uniform course of acting accordingly?” Thus did they reason while Rome had some remains of her freedom; but when the imperial tyranny came to be fully established, the civil laws speak a very different language. “Quod principi placuit legis habet vigorem, cum populus ei et in eum omne suum imperium et potestatem conferat [what pleases the prince has the force of law, as the people place all their power and authority in his hands],” says Ulpian<sup>w</sup>. “Imperator solus et conditor et interpres legis existimatur [the Emperor alone is considered both maker and interpreter of the law],” says the code<sup>x</sup>. And again, “sacrilegii instar est rescripto principis obviare [it is sacrilege to oppose the mandate of the prince].” And indeed it is one of the characteristic marks of English liberty, that our common law depends upon custom; which carries this internal evidence of freedom along with it, that it probably was introduced by the voluntary consent of the people.

74

II. THE second branch of the unwritten laws of England are particular customs, or laws which affect only the inhabitants of particular districts.

THESE particular customs, or some of them, are without doubt the remains of that multitude of local customs before mentioned, out of which the common law, as it now stands, was collected at first by king Alfred, and afterwards by king Edgar and Edward the confessor: each district mutually sacrificing some of its own special usages, in order that the whole kingdom might enjoy the benefit of one uniform and † These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 Inst. without any author's name. An honorary distinction, which, (12) we observed, was paid to the works of no other writer; the generality of reports and other tracts being quoted in the name of the compiler, as 2 Ventris, 4 Leonard, 1 Siderfin, and the like.

<sup>u</sup> Ff. 1. 3. 32.

<sup>w</sup> Ff. 1. 4. 1.

<sup>x</sup> C. 1. 14. 12.

<sup>y</sup> C. 1. 23. 5.

<sup>19</sup> Salvius Julianus [Julian] (before 90 AD–c. 169), Roman jurist, counsellor of the emperor Hadrian, and compiler of a digest of the mid-second century.

universal system of laws. But, for reasons that have been now long forgotten, particular counties, cities, towns, manors, and lordships, were very early indulged with the privilege of abiding by their own customs, in contradistinction to the rest of the nation at large: which privilege is confirmed to them by several acts of parliament<sup>z</sup>.

75 SUCH is the custom of gavelkind in Kent and some other parts of the kingdom (though perhaps it was also general till the Norman conquest) which ordains, among other things, that not the eldest son only of the father shall succeed to his inheritance, but all the sons alike: and that, though the ancestor be attainted and hanged, yet the heir shall succeed to his estate, without any escheat to the lord.<sup>20</sup>—Such is the custom that prevails in divers antient boroughs, and therefore called borough-english, that the youngest son shall inherit the estate, in preference to all his elder brothers.—Such is the custom in other boroughs that a widow shall be intitled, for her dower, to all her husband's lands; whereas at the common law she shall be endowed of one third part only.—Such also are the special and particular customs of manors, of which every one has more or less, and which bind all the copyhold-tenants that hold of the said manors.—Such likewise is the custom of holding divers inferior courts, with power of trying causes, in cities and trading towns; the right of holding which, when no royal grant can be shewn, depends entirely upon immemorial and established usage.—Such, lastly, are many particular customs within the city of London, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, and a variety of other <14> matters; which are all contrary to the general law of the land, and are good only by special custom, though those of London are also confirmed by act of parliament<sup>a</sup>.

To this head may most properly be referred a particular system of customs used only among one set of the king's subjects, called the custom of merchants or lex mercatoria [law merchant]; which, however <15> different from the common law, is allowed for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions; the maxim of law being, that “cuilibet in sua arte credendum est [every man is to be believed in what concerns his own occupation].”

THE rules relating to particular customs regard either the proof of their existence; their legality when proved; or their usual method of allowance. And first we will consider the rules of proof.

76 As to gavelkind, and borough-english, the law takes particular notice of them<sup>b</sup>, and there is no occasion to prove that such customs actually exist, but only that the lands in question are subject thereto. All other private customs must be particularly pleaded<sup>c</sup>, and as well the existence of such customs must be shewn, as that the thing in dispute is within the custom alleged. The trial in both cases (both to shew the existence of the custom, as, “that in the manor of Dale lands shall descend only to the heirs male, and never to the heirs female;” and also to shew that the lands in question

<sup>z</sup> Mag. Cart. c. 9. 1 Edw. III. st. 2. c. 9. 14 Edw. III. st. 1. c. 1. and 2 Hen. IV. c. 1.

<sup>a</sup> [The City of London's case] 8. Rep. 126. [R. v Bagshaw] Cro. Car. 347.

<sup>b</sup> <16> Co. Litt. 175 b.

<sup>c</sup> Litt. §. 265.

<sup>20</sup> See II. 56-7.

are within that manor) is by a jury of twelve men, and not by the judges, except the same particular custom has been before tried, determined, and recorded in the same court<sup>d</sup>.

THE customs of London differ from all others in point of trial: for, if the existence of the custom be brought in question, it shall not be tried by a jury, but by certificate from the lord mayor and aldermen by the mouth of their recorder<sup>e</sup>; <sup>21</sup> unless it be such a custom as the corporation is itself interested in, as a right of taking toll, &c, for then the law permits them not to certify on their own behalf<sup>f</sup>.

WHEN a custom is actually proved to exist, the next enquiry is into the legality of it; for if it is not a good custom it ought to be no longer used. “Malus usus abolendus est [a bad custom should be abolished]” is an established maxim of the law<sup>g</sup>. To make a particular custom good, the following are necessary requisites.

1. THAT it have been used so long, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. So that if any one can shew the beginning of it, it is no good custom. For which reason no custom can prevail against an express act of parliament; since the statute itself is a proof of a time when such a custom did not exist<sup>h</sup>. 77

2. IT must have been continued. Any interruption would cause a temporary ceasing: the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be within time of memory, and thereupon the custom will be void. But this must be understood with regard to an interruption of the right; for an interruption of the possession only, for ten or twenty years, will not destroy the custom<sup>i</sup>. As if <18> I have a right of way by custom over another’s field, the custom is not destroyed, though I do not pass over it for ten years; it only becomes more difficult to prove: but if the right be any how discontinued for a day, the custom is quite at an end.

3. IT must have been peaceable, and acquiesced in; not subject to contention and dispute<sup>k</sup>. For as customs owe their original to common consent, their being immemorially disputed either at law or otherwise is a proof that such consent was wanting.

4. CUSTOMS must be reasonable<sup>l</sup>; or rather, taken negatively, they must not be unreasonable. Which is not always, as sir Edward Coke says<sup>m</sup>, to be understood of every unlearned man’s reason, but of artificial and legal reason, warranted by authority of law. Upon which account a custom may be good, though the particular reason of it cannot be assigned; for it sufficeth, if no good legal reason can be assigned against it. Thus a custom in a parish, that no man shall put his beasts into the common

<sup>d</sup> Dr and St. 1. 10.

<sup>e</sup> [Appleton v Stoughton] Cro. Car. 516.

<sup>f</sup> [Day v Savadge] Hob. 85.

<sup>g</sup> Litt. §. 212. 4 Inst. 274.

<sup>h</sup> <17> Co. Litt. 113 b.

<sup>i</sup> <19> Co. Litt. 114 b.

<sup>k</sup> Co. Litt. 114.

<sup>l</sup> Litt. §. 212.

<sup>m</sup> 1 Inst. 62.

<sup>21</sup> The Recorder is the chief judicial and legal officer of the City of London.

till the third of october, would be good; and yet it would be hard to shew the reason why that day in particular is fixed upon, rather than the day before or after. But a custom that no cattle shall be put in till the lord of the manor has first put in his, is unreasonable, and therefore bad: for peradventure the lord will never put in his; and then the tenants will lose all their profits<sup>n</sup>.

78 5. CUSTOMS ought to be certain. A custom, that lands shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's blood, is void; for how shall this worth be determined? But a custom to descend to the next male of the blood, exclusive of females, is certain, and therefore good<sup>o</sup>. A custom, to pay two pence an acre in lieu of tythes, is good; but to pay sometimes two pence and sometimes three pence, as the occupier of the land pleases, is bad for its uncertainty. Yet a custom, to pay a year's improved value for a fine on a copyhold estate, is good: though the value is a thing uncertain. For the value may at any time be ascertained; and the maxim of law is, id certum est, quod certum reddi potest [that is certain which can be made certain].

6. CUSTOMS, though established by consent, must be (when established) compulsory; and not left to the option of every man, whether he will use them or no. Therefore a custom, that all the inhabitants shall be rated toward the maintenance of a bridge, will be good; but a custom, that every man is to contribute thereto at his own pleasure, is idle and absurd, and, indeed, no custom at all.

7. LASTLY, customs must be consistent with each other: one custom cannot be set up in opposition to another. For if both are really customs, then both are of equal antiquity, and both established by mutual consent: which to say of contradictory customs is absurd. Therefore, if one man prescribes that by custom he has a right to have windows looking into another's garden; the other cannot claim a right by custom to stop up or obstruct those windows: for these two contradictory customs cannot both be good, nor both stand together. He ought rather to deny the existence of the former custom<sup>p</sup>.

79 NEXT, as to the allowance of special customs. Customs, in derogation of the common law, must be construed strictly. Thus, by the custom of gavelkind, an infant of fifteen years may by one species of conveyance (called a deed of feoffment) convey away his lands in fee simple, or for ever. Yet this custom does not impower him to use any other conveyance, or even to lease them for seven years: for the custom must be strictly pursued<sup>q</sup>. And, moreover, all special customs must submit to the king's prerogative. Therefore, if the king purchases lands of the nature of gavelkind, where all the sons inherit equally; yet, upon the king's demise, his eldest son shall succeed to those lands alone<sup>r</sup>. And thus much for the second part of the leges non scriptae, or those particular customs which affect particular persons or districts only.

III. THE third branch of them are those peculiar laws, which by custom are adopted and used only in certain peculiar courts and jurisdictions. And by these I understand the civil and canon laws.

<sup>n</sup> Co. Copyh. §. 33.

<sup>o</sup> [Case of Tanistry] 1 Roll. Abr. 565.

<sup>p</sup> [William Aldred's case] 9 Rep. 58.

<sup>q</sup> Co. Cop. §. 33.

<sup>r</sup> (20) Co. Litt. 15 b.

It may seem a little improper at first view to rank these laws under the head of leges non scriptae, or unwritten laws, seeing they are set forth by authority in their pandects, their codes, and their institutions; their councils, decrees, and decretals; and enforced by an immense number of expositions, decisions, and treatises of the learned in both branches of the law. But I do this, after the example of sir Matthew Hale,<sup>8,22</sup> because it is most plain, that it is not on account of their being written laws, that either the canon law, or the civil law, have any obligation within this kingdom; neither do their force and efficacy depend upon their own intrinsic authority; which is the case of our written laws, or acts of parliament. They bind not the subjects of England, because their materials were collected from popes or emperors; were digested by Justinian, or declared to be authentic by Gregory.<sup>23</sup> These considerations give them no authority here: for the legislature of England doth not, nor ever did, recognize any foreign power, as superior or equal to it in this kingdom; or as having the right to give law to any, the meanest, of its subjects. But all the strength that either 80 the papal or imperial laws have obtained in this realm, or indeed in any other kingdom in Europe, is only because they have been admitted and received by immemorial usage and custom in some particular cases, and some particular courts; and then they form a branch of the leges non scriptae, or customary law: or else, because they are in some other cases introduced by consent of parliament, and then they owe their validity to the leges scriptae, or statute law. This is expressly declared in those remarkable words of the statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21. addressed to the king's royal majesty: "This your grace's realm, recognizing no superior under God but only your grace, hath been and is free from subjection to any man's laws, but only to such as have been devised, made, and ordained within this realm for the wealth of the same; or to such other, as by sufferance of your grace and your progenitors, the people of this your realm, have taken at their free liberty, by their own consent, to be used among them; and have bound themselves by long use and custom to the observance of the same: not as to the observance of the laws of any foreign prince, potentate, or prelate; but as to the customed and antient laws of this realm, originally established as laws of the same, by the said sufferance, consents, and custom; and none otherwise."<sup>24</sup>

By the civil law, absolutely taken, is generally understood the civil or municipal law of the Roman empire, as comprized in the institutes, the code, and the digest of the emperor Justinian, and the novel constitutions of himself and some of his successors. Of which, as there will frequently be occasion to cite them, by way of illustrating our own laws, it may not be amiss to give a short and general account.

<sup>8</sup> Hist. C. L. c. 2.

<sup>22</sup> Sir Matthew Hale (1609–76), judge and writer, chief baron of the exchequer (1660–71), and chief justice of king's bench (1671–6).

<sup>23</sup> i.e. Pope Gregory IX, who issued the Nova Compilatio Decretalium in 1234.

<sup>24</sup> 'Act for the exoneration from exactions paid to the see of Rome' (1533–4), which was one of the legislative foundations of the English Reformation.

THE Roman law (founded first upon the regal constitutions of their antient kings, next upon the twelve tables of the decemviri [ten men], then upon the laws or statutes enacted by the senate or people, the edicts of the praetor, and the responsa prudentum 81 or opinions of learned lawyers, and lastly upon the imperial decrees, or constitutions of successive emperors) had grown to so great a bulk, or as Livy expresses it<sup>t</sup>, “tam immensus aliarum super alias acervatarum legum cumulus [such a vast pile of laws heaped one upon the other],” that they were computed to be many camels’ load by an author who preceded Justinian<sup>u</sup>. This was in part remedied by the collections of three private lawyers, Gregorius, Hermogenes, and Papirius; and then by the emperor Theodosius the younger, by whose orders a code was compiled, A.D. 438, being a methodical collection of all the imperial constitutions then in force: which Theodosian code was the only book of civil law received as authentic in the western part of Europe till many centuries after; and to this it is probable that the Franks<sup>25</sup> and Goths<sup>26</sup> might frequently pay some regard, in framing legal constitutions for their newly erected kingdoms. For Justinian commanded only in the eastern remains of the empire; and it was under his auspices, that the present body of civil law was compiled and finished by Tribonian and other lawyers, about the year 533.

THIS consists of, 1. The institutes, which contain the elements or first principles of the Roman law, in four books. 2. The digests, or pandects, in fifty books, containing the opinions and writings of eminent lawyers, digested in a systematical method. 3. A new code, or collection of <21> imperial constitutions, the lapse of a whole century having rendered the former code, of Theodosius, imperfect. 4. The novels, or new constitutions,<sup>27</sup> posterior in time to the other books, and amounting to a supplement to the code; containing new decrees of successive emperors, as new questions happened to arise. These form the body of Roman law, or corpus juris civilis, as published about the time of Justinian: which however fell soon into neglect and oblivion, till about the year 1130, when a copy of the digests was found at Amalfi in Italy; which accident, concurring with the policy of the <22> Romish ecclesiastics<sup>w</sup>, suddenly gave new vogue and authority to the civil law, introduced it into several 82 nations, and occasioned that mighty inundation of voluminous comments, with which this system of law, more than any other, is now loaded.

THE canon law is a body of Roman ecclesiastical law, relative to such matters as that church either has, or pretends to have, the proper jurisdiction over. This is compiled from the opinions of the antient Latin fathers, the decrees of general councils, the decretal epistles and bulles of the holy see. All which lay in the same

<sup>t</sup> [Ab urbe condita] l. 3. c. 34.

<sup>u</sup> Taylor’s elements of civil law. 17.

<sup>w</sup> See §. 1. pag. 18 [l. 18–19].

<sup>25</sup> The Germanic people who conquered Roman Gaul in the fifth century and dominated most of western Europe in the early middle ages.

<sup>26</sup> Another Germanic group which overran parts of the western Roman empire in the fourth and fifth centuries.

<sup>27</sup> The novellae constitutiones post codicem, or ‘novels’, were issued by Justinian after the completion of his code in 529.

disorder and confusion as the Roman civil law, till about the year 1151, one Gratian an Italian monk, animated by the discovery of Justinian's <23> pandects at Amalfi, reduced them into some method in three books, which he entitled concordia discordantium canonum [the concord of discordant canons], but which are generally known by the name of decretum Gratiani [Gratian's Decretum]. These reached as low as the time of pope Alexander III. The subsequent papal decrees, to the pontificate of Gregory IX, were published in much the same method under the auspices of that pope, about the year 1230, in five books entitled decretalia Gregorii noni. A sixth book was added by Boniface VIII, about the year 1298, which is called sextus decretalium. The Clementine constitutions, or decrees of Clement V, were in like manner authenticated in 1317 by his successor John XXII; who also published twenty constitutions of his own, called the extravagantes Joannis: all which in some measure answer to the novels of the civil law. To these have been since added some decrees of later popes in five books, called extravagantes communes. And all these together, Gratian's decree, Gregory's decretals, the sixth decretal, the Clementine constitutions, and the extravagants of John and his successors, form the corpus juris canonici, or body of the Roman canon law.

BESIDES these pontifical collections, which during the times of popery were received as authentic in this island, as well as in other parts of christendom, there is also a kind of national canon law, composed of legatine and provincial constitutions, and adapted only to the exigencies of this church and kingdom. The legatine constitutions were ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under the 83 cardinals Otho and Othobon, legates from pope Gregory IX and <24> pope Adrian IV, in the reign of king Henry III about the years 1220 and 1268. The provincial constitutions are principally the decrees of provincial synods, held under divers arch-bishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton in the reign of Henry III to Henry Chichele in the reign of Henry V; and adopted also by the province of York<sup>x</sup> in the reign of Henry VI. At the dawn of the reformation, in the reign of king Henry VIII, it was enacted in parliament<sup>y</sup> that a review should be had of the canon law; and, till such review should be made, all canons, constitutions, ordinances, and synodals provincial, being then already made, and not repugnant to the law of the land or the king's prerogative, should still be used and executed. And, as no such review has yet been perfected, upon this statute now depends the authority of the canon law in England.

As for the canons enacted by the clergy under James I, in the year 1603, and never confirmed in parliament, it has been solemnly adjudged upon the principles of law and the constitution, that where they are not merely declaratory of the antient canon law, but are introductory of new regulations, they do not bind the laity<sup>z</sup>; whatever regard the clergy may think proper to pay them.

<sup>x</sup> Burn's eccl. law, pref. viii.

<sup>y</sup> Statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19; revived and confirmed by 1 Eliz. c. 1.

<sup>z</sup> [Middleton and his wife v Croft] [2] Stra. 1057.

THERE are four species of courts in which the civil and canon laws are permitted under different restrictions to be used. 1. The courts of the arch-bishops and bishops and their derivative officers, usually called in our law courts christian, curiae christianitatis, or the ecclesiastical courts. 2. The military courts. 3. The courts of admiralty. 4. The courts of the two universities. In all, their reception in general, and the different degrees of that reception, are grounded intirely upon custom; corroborated in the latter instance by act of parliament, ratifying those charters which confirm the customary law of the universities. The more minute consideration of these will fall properly under that part of these commentaries which treats of the jurisdiction of courts. It will suffice at present to remark a few particulars relative to them all, which may serve to inculcate more strongly the doctrine laid down concerning them<sup>a</sup>.

84

1. AND, first, the courts of common law have the superintendency over these courts; to keep them within their jurisdictions, to determine wherein they exceed them, to restrain and prohibit such excess, and (in case of contumacy) to punish the officer who executes, and in some cases the judge who enforces, the sentence so declared to be illegal.

2. THE common law has reserved to itself the exposition of all such acts of parliament, as concern either the extent of these courts or the matters depending before them. And therefore if these courts either refuse to allow these acts of parliament, or will expound them in any other sense than what the common law puts upon them, the king's courts at Westminster will grant prohibitions to restrain and control them.

3. AN appeal lies from all these courts to the king, in the last resort; which proves that the jurisdiction exercised in them is derived from the crown of England, and not from any foreign potentate, or intrinsic authority of their own.—And, from these three strong marks and ensigns of superiority, it appears beyond a doubt that the civil and canon laws, though admitted in some cases by custom in some courts, are only subordinate and leges sub graviore lege [laws subject to a more weighty law]; and that, thus admitted, restrained, altered, new-modelled, and amended, they are by no means with us a distinct independent species of laws, but are inferior branches of the customary or unwritten laws of England, properly called, the king's ecclesiastical, the king's military, the king's maritime, or the king's academical, laws.

85

LET us next proceed to the leges scriptae, the written laws of the kingdom, which are statutes, acts, or edicts, made by the king's majesty by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in parliament assembled<sup>b</sup>. The oldest of these now extant, and printed in our statute books, is the famous magna carta, as confirmed in parliament 9 Hen. III:<sup>28</sup> though doubtless there were many acts before that time, the records of which are now lost, and the determinations of them perhaps at present currently received for the maxims of the old common law.

<sup>a</sup> Hale Hist. c. 2.

<sup>b</sup> [The Prince's case] 8 Rep. 20.

<sup>28</sup> The 'Great Charter', accepted by King John at Runnymede in 1215, was confirmed in modified form by his son and successor Henry III in 1225, after reissues in 1216 and 1217.

THE manner of making these statutes will be better considered hereafter, when we examine the constitution of parliaments.<sup>29</sup> At present we will only take notice of the different kinds of statutes; and of some general rules with regard to their construction<sup>c</sup>.

FIRST, as to their several kinds. Statutes are either general or special, public or private. A general or public act is an universal rule, that regards the whole community; and of these the courts of law are bound to take notice judicially and ex officio [by virtue of their office]; without the statute being particularly pleaded, or formally set forth by the party who claims an advantage under it. Special or private acts are rather exceptions than rules, being those which only operate upon particular persons, and private concerns; such as the Romans intitled senatus-decreta [decrees of the senate], in contradistinction to the senatus-consulta [acts of the senate], which regarded the whole community<sup>d</sup>: and of (25) these the judges are not bound to take notice, unless they be formally shewn and pleaded. Thus, to shew the distinction, the statute 13 Eliz. c. 10. to prevent spiritual persons from making leases for longer terms than twenty one years, or three lives, is a public act; it being a rule prescribed to the whole body of spiritual persons in the nation: but an act to enable the bishop of Chester to make a lease to A. B. for sixty years, is an exception to this rule; it concerns only the parties and the bishop's successors; and is therefore a private act.

86

STATUTES also are either declaratory of the common law, or remedial of some defects therein. Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium [as a lasting testimony of the thing], and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been. Thus the statute of treasons, 25 Edw. III. c. 2 doth not make any new species of treasons; but only, for the benefit of the subject, declares and enumerates those several kinds of offence, which before were treason at the common law. Remedial statutes are those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superfluities, in the common law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and <sup>c</sup> The method of citing these acts of parliament is various. Many of our antient statutes are called after the name of the place, where the parliament was held that made them: as the statutes of Merton and Marlbridge, of Westminster, Gloucester, and Winchester. Others are denominated entirely from their subject; as the statutes of Wales and Ireland, the articuli cleri, and the praerogativa regis. Some are distinguished by their initial words, a method of citing very antient; being used by the Jews in denominating the books of the pentateuch; by the christian church in distinguishing their hymns and divine offices; by the Romanists in describing their papal bulles; and in short by the whole body of antient civilians and canonists, among whom this method of citation generally prevailed, not only with regard to chapters, but inferior sections also: in imitation of all which we still call some of our old statutes by their initial words, as the statute of quia emptores [because purchasers] (18 Edw. I.), and that of circumspecte agatis [that ye act circumspectly]. But the most usual method of citing them, especially since the time of Edward the second, is by naming the year of the king's reign in which the statute was made, together with the chapter, or particular act, according to its numeral order; as, 9 Geo. II. c. 4. For all the acts of one session of parliament taken together make properly but one statute; and therefore when two sessions have been held in one year, we usually mention stat. 1. or 2. Thus the bill of rights is cited, as 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. signifying that it is the second chapter or act, of the second statute or the laws made in the second sessions of parliament, held in the first year of king William and queen Mary.

<sup>d</sup> Gravin. Orig. 1. §. 24.

<sup>29</sup> See I. 98–123.

unadvised determinations of <26> unlearned judges, or from any other cause whatsoever. And, this being done either by enlarging the common law where it was 87 too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it was too lax and luxuriant, this has occasioned another subordinate division of remedial acts of parliament into enlarging and restraining statutes. To instance again in the case of treason. Clipping the current coin of the kingdom was an offence not sufficiently guarded against by the common law: therefore it was thought expedient by statute 5 Eliz. c. 11. to make it high treason, which it was not at the common law: so that this was an enlarging statute. At common law also spiritual corporations might lease out their estates for any term of years, till prevented by the statute 13 Eliz. beforementioned: this was therefore a restraining statute.

SECONDLY, the rules to be observed with regard to the construction of statutes are principally these which follow.

1. THERE are three points to be considered in the construction of all remedial statutes; the old law, the mischief, and the remedy: that is, how the common law stood at the making of the act; what the mischief was, for which the common law did not provide; and what remedy the parliament hath provided to cure this mischief. And it is the business of the judges so to construe the act, as to suppress the mischief and advance the remedy<sup>e</sup>. Let us instance again in the same <27> restraining statute of the 13 Eliz. By the common law ecclesiastical corporations might let as long leases as they thought proper: the mischief was, that they let long and unreasonable leases, to the impoverishment of their successors: the remedy applied by the statute was by making void all leases by ecclesiastical bodies for longer terms than three lives or twenty one years. Now in the construction of this statute it is held, that leases, though for a longer term, if made by a bishop, are not void during the <29> bishop's life; or, if made by a <30> dean with concurrence of his chapter, they are not void <31> during the life of the dean: for the act was made for the benefit and protection of the successor<sup>f</sup>. The mischief is therefore sufficiently suppressed by vacating them <33>
 88 after the death <34> of the grantor; but the leases, <35> during their lives, being not within the mischief, are not within the remedy.

2. A STATUTE, which treats of things or persons of an inferior rank, cannot by any general words be extended to those of a superior. So a statute, treating of "deans, prebendaries, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotion," is held not to extend to bishops, though they have spiritual promotion; deans being the highest persons named, and bishops being of a still higher order<sup>g</sup>.

3. PENAL statutes must be construed strictly. Thus a statute 1 Edw. VI.<sup>30</sup> having enacted that those who are convicted of stealing horses should not have the benefit of clergy, the judges conceived that this did not extend to him that should steal but one horse, and therefore procured a new act for that purpose in the following year<sup>h</sup>. And,

<sup>e</sup> [Heydon's case] <28> 3 Rep. 7 b. Co. Litt. 11 b. 42.

<sup>f</sup> Co. Litt. 45. [Lincoln College case] 3 Rep. <32> 60.

<sup>g</sup> [Archbishop of Canterbury's case] 2 Rep. 46.

<sup>h</sup> <36> Bac. Elem. c. 12.

<sup>30</sup> Stat. 1 Edw. VI c. 12.

to come nearer our own times, by the statute 14 Geo. II. c. 6. stealing sheep, or other cattle, was made felony without benefit of clergy. But these general words, “or other cattle,” being looked upon as much too loose to create a capital offence, the act was held to extend to nothing but mere sheep. And therefore, in the next sessions, it was found necessary to make another statute, 15 Geo. II. c. 34. extending the former to bulls, cows, oxen, steers, bullocks, heifers, calves, and lambs, by name.

4. STATUTES against frauds are to be liberally and beneficially expounded. This may seem a contradiction to the last rule; most statutes against frauds being in their consequences penal. But this difference is here to be taken: where the statute acts upon the offender, and inflicts a penalty, as the pillory or a fine, it is then to be taken strictly: but when the statute acts upon the offence, by setting aside the fraudulent transaction, here it is to be construed liberally. Upon this footing the statute of 13 Eliz. c. 5. which avoids all gifts of goods, &c, made to defraud creditors and others, was held to extend by the general words to a gift made to defraud the queen of a forfeiture<sup>i</sup>. 89

5. ONE part of a statute must be so construed by another, that the whole may if possible stand: ut res magis valeat, quam pereat [that the whole subject matter may rather operate than be annulled]. As if land be vested in the king and his heirs by act of parliament, saving the right of A; and A has at that time a lease of it for three years: here A shall hold it for his term of three years, and afterwards it shall go to the king. For this interpretation furnishes matter for every clause of the statute to work and operate upon. But

6. A SAVING, totally repugnant to the body of the act, is void. If therefore an act of parliament vests land in the king and his heirs, saving the right of all persons whatsoever; or vests the land of A in the king, saving the right of A: in either of these cases the saving is totally repugnant to the body of the statute, and (if good) would render the statute of no effect or operation; and therefore the saving is void, and the land vests absolutely in the king<sup>k</sup>.

7. WHERE the common law and a statute differ, the common law gives place to the statute; and an old statute gives place to a new one. And this upon ⟨37⟩ the general principle laid down in the last section, that “leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant [subsequent laws repeal their contrary predecessors].” But this is to be understood, only when the latter statute is couched in negative terms, or by its ⟨38⟩ matter necessarily implies a negative. As if a former act says, that a juror upon such a trial shall have twenty pounds a year; and a new ⟨39⟩ statute comes and says, he shall have twenty marks:<sup>31</sup> here the latter statute, though it does not express, yet necessarily implies a negative, and virtually repeals the former. For if twenty marks be made qualification sufficient, the former statute which requires twenty pounds is at an end<sup>l</sup>. But if both acts be merely affirmative, and the substance such that both 90

<sup>i</sup> [Twyne's case] 3 Rep. 82.

<sup>k</sup> [Case of Alton Woods] 1 Rep. 47.

<sup>l</sup> [YB] Jenk. Cent. 2. 73.

<sup>31</sup> 1 mark = 13s. 4d., so 20 marks = £13 6s. 8d.

may stand together, here the latter does not repeal the former, but they shall both have a concurrent efficacy. If by a former law an offence be indictable at the quarter sessions, and a latter law makes the same offence indictable at the assises; here the jurisdiction of the sessions is not taken away, but both have a concurrent jurisdiction, and the offender may be prosecuted at either; unless the new statute subjoins express negative words, as, that the offence shall be indictable at the assises, and not elsewhere<sup>m</sup>.

8. If a statute, that repeals another, is itself repealed afterwards, the first statute is hereby revived, without any formal words for that purpose. So when the statutes of 26 and 35 Hen. VIII, declaring the king to be the supreme head of the church, were repealed by a statute 1 & 2 Ph. and Mary, and this latter statute was afterwards repealed by an act of 1 Eliz. there needed not any express words of revival in queen Elizabeth's statute, but these acts of king Henry were impliedly and virtually revived<sup>n</sup>.

9. ACTS of parliament derogatory from the power of subsequent parliaments bind not. So the statute 11 Hen. VII. c. 1. which directs, that no person for assisting a king de facto [in actual fact] shall be attainted of treason by act of parliament or otherwise, is held to be good only as to common prosecutions for high treason; but will not restrain or clog any parliamentary attainder<sup>o</sup>. Because the legislature, being in truth the sovereign power, is always of equal, always of absolute authority: it acknowledges no superior upon earth, which the prior legislature must have been, if its ordinances could bind <40> the present parliament. And upon the same principle Cicero, in his letters to Atticus, treats with a proper contempt these restraining clauses which 91 endeavour to tie up the hands of succeeding legislatures. "When you repeal the law itself, says he, you at the same time repeal the prohibitory clause, which guards against such repeal<sup>p</sup>."

10. LASTLY, acts of parliament that are impossible to be performed are of no validity; and if there arise out of them collaterally any absurd consequences, manifestly contradictory to common reason, they are, with regard to those collateral consequences, void. I lay down the rule with these restrictions; though I know it is generally laid down more largely, that acts of parliament contrary to reason are void. But if the parliament will positively enact a thing to be done which is unreasonable, I know of no <41> power that can control it: and the examples usually alleged in support of this sense of the rule do none of them prove, that where the main object of a statute is unreasonable the judges are at liberty to reject it; for that were to set the judicial power above that of the legislature, which would be subversive of all government. But where some collateral matter arises out of the general words, and happens to be unreasonable; there the judges are in decency to conclude that this consequence was not foreseen by the parliament, and therefore they are at liberty to expound the statute by equity, and only quoad hoc [as to this] disregard it. Thus if an

<sup>m</sup> [Dr Foster's case] 11 Rep. 63.

<sup>n</sup> 4 Inst. 325.

<sup>o</sup> 4 Inst. 43.

<sup>p</sup> Cum lex abrogatur, illud ipsum abrogatur, quo non eam abrogari oporteat. [Cicero, Epistulae ad Atticum] l. 3. ep. 23.

act of parliament gives a man power to try all causes, that arise within his manor of Dale; yet, if a cause should arise in which he himself is party, the act is construed not to extend to that; because it is unreasonable that any man should determine his own quarrel<sup>9</sup>. But, if we could conceive it possible for the parliament to enact, that he should try as well his own causes as those of other persons, there is no court that has power to defeat the intent of the legislature, when couched in such evident and express words, as leave no doubt whether it was the intent of the legislature or no.

THESE are the several grounds of the laws of England: over and above which, equity is also frequently called in to assist, to moderate, and to explain it. What equity is, and how impossible in its very essence to be reduced to stated rules, hath been shewn in the preceding section. I shall therefore only add, (42) that there are courts of this kind established for the benefit of the subject, to correct and soften the rigor of the law, when through its generality it bears too hard in particular cases; to detect and punish latent frauds, which the law is not minute enough to reach; to enforce the execution of such matters of trust and confidence, as are binding in conscience, though perhaps not strictly legal; to deliver from such dangers as are owing to misfortune or oversight; and, in short, to relieve in all such cases as are, bona fide [in good faith], objects of relief. This is the business of our courts of equity, which however are only conversant in matters of property. For the freedom of our constitution will not permit, that in criminal cases a power should be lodged in any judge, to construe the law otherwise than according to the letter. This caution, while it admirably protects the public liberty, can never bear hard upon individuals. A man cannot suffer more punishment than the law assigns, but he may suffer less. The laws cannot be strained by partiality to inflict a penalty beyond what the letter will warrant; but in cases where the letter induces any apparent hardship, the crown has the power to pardon. 92

<sup>9</sup> [Dr Bonham's case] 8 Rep. 118.

OF THE COUNTRIES SUBJECT TO THE LAWS OF ENGLAND.

THE kingdom of England, over which our municipal laws have jurisdiction, includes not, by the common law, either Wales, Scotland, or Ireland, or any other part of the king's dominions, except the territory of England only. And yet the civil laws and local customs of this territory do now obtain, in part or in all, with more or less restrictions, in these and many other adjacent countries; of which it will be proper first to take a review, before we consider the kingdom of England itself, the original and proper subject of these laws.

WALES had continued independent of England, unconquered and uncultivated, in the primitive pastoral state which Caesar and Tacitus ascribe to Britain in general, for many centuries; even from the time of the hostile invasions of the Saxons, when the antient and christian inhabitants of the island retired to those natural intrenchments, for protection from their pagan visitants. But when these invaders themselves were converted to christianity, and settled into regular and potent governments, this retreat of the antient Britons grew every day narrower; they were overrun by little and little, gradually driven from one fastness to another, and by repeated losses abridged of their wild independence. Very early in our history we find their princes doing homage to the crown of England; till at length in the reign of Edward the first,

94 who may justly be stiled the conqueror of Wales, the line of their antient princes was abolished, and the king of England's eldest son became, as a matter of course, their titular prince: the territory of Wales being then (1) entirely annexed to the dominion of the crown of England<sup>a</sup>, or, as the (2) statute of Rutland<sup>b</sup> expresses it, "terra Walliae cum incolis suis, prius regi jure feodali subjecta, (of which homage was the sign) jam in proprietatis dominium totaliter et cum integritate conversa est, et coronae regni Angliae tanquam pars corporis ejusdem annexa et unita."<sup>1</sup> By the statute also of Wales<sup>c</sup> very material alterations were made in divers parts of their laws, so as to reduce them nearer to the English standard, especially in the forms of their judicial proceedings: but they still retained very much of their original polity, particularly their rule of inheritance, viz. that their lands were divided equally among all the issue male, and did not descend to the eldest son alone. By other subsequent statutes

<sup>a</sup> [Process into Wales] Vaugh. 400.

<sup>b</sup> 10 Edw. I.

<sup>c</sup> 12 Edw. I.

<sup>1</sup> 'The land of Wales, together with its inhabitants, was formerly subject to the king by feudal right; it is now completely and wholly converted into full ownership, and annexed to, and united with, the crown of the kingdom of England, as forming a part of the body of the same.' This is a quotation from the Statute of Wales, 12 Edw. I, c. 1 (Statutes of the Realm, i. 55.), which was a royal ordinance given at Rhuddlan (north Wales) in 1284. The Statute of Rutland (10 Edw. I) was concerned with recovering debts in the Exchequer (Statutes at Large, ed. O. Ruffhead, 7 vols, 1763, i. 74-6).

their provincial immunities were still farther abridged: but the finishing stroke to their independency, was given by the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26. which at the same time gave the utmost advancement to their civil prosperity, by admitting them to a thorough communication of laws with the subjects of England. Thus were this brave people gradually conquered into the enjoyment of true liberty; being insensibly put upon the same footing, and made fellow-citizens with their conquerors. A generous method of triumph, which the republic of Rome practised with great success; till she reduced all Italy to her obedience, by admitting the vanquished states to partake of the Roman privileges.

It is enacted by this statute 27 Hen. VIII, 1. That the dominion of Wales shall be for ever united to the kingdom of England. 2. That all Welchmen born shall have the same liberties as other the king's subjects. 3. That lands in Wales shall be inheritable according to the English tenures and rules of descent. 4. That the laws of England, and no other, shall be used in Wales: besides many other regulations of the police<sup>2</sup> of this principality. And the statute 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 26. confirms the same, adds 95 farther regulations, divides it into twelve shires, and, in short, reduces it into the same order in which it stands at this day; differing from the kingdom of England in only a few particulars, and those too of the nature of privileges, (such as having courts within itself, independent of the process of Westminster hall) and some other immaterial peculiarities, hardly more than are to be found in many counties of England itself.

THE kingdom of Scotland, notwithstanding the union of the crowns on the accession of their king James VI to that of England, continued an entirely separate and distinct kingdom for (3) above a century, though an union had been long projected; which was judged to be the more easy to be done, as both kingdoms were antiently under the same government, and still retained a very great resemblance, though far from an identity, in their laws. By an act of parliament 1 Jac. I. c. 1. it is declared, that these two, mighty, famous, and antient kingdoms were formerly one. And sir Edward Coke observes<sup>d</sup>, how marvellous a conformity there was, not only in the religion and language of the two nations, but also in their antient laws, the descent of the crown, their parliaments, their titles of nobility, their officers of state and of justice, their writs, their customs, and even the language of their laws. Upon which account he supposes the common law of each to have been originally the same, especially as their most antient and authentic book, called regiam majestatem and containing the rules of their antient common law, is extremely (4) similar that of Glanvil, which contains the principles of ours, as it stood in the reign of Henry II. And the many diversities, subsisting between the two laws at present, may be well enough accounted for, from a diversity of practice in two large and uncommunicating jurisdictions, and from the acts of two distinct and independent parliaments, which have in many points altered and abrogated the old common law of both kingdoms.

<sup>d</sup> 4 Inst. 345.

<sup>2</sup> Blackstone is using the term 'police' to mean 'policy' or 'regulation and government' (see S. Johnson, A Dictionary of the English Language, 1755).

96 HOWEVER sir Edward Coke, and the politicians of that time, conceived great difficulties in carrying on the projected union: but these were at length overcome, and the great work was happily effected in (5) 1707, 5 Anne; when twenty five articles of union were agreed to by the parliaments of both nations: the purport of the most considerable being as follows:

1. THAT on the first of May 1707, and for ever after, the kingdoms of England and Scotland, shall be united into one kingdom, by the name of Great Britain.

2. THE succession to the monarchy of Great Britain shall be the same as was before settled with regard to that of England.

3. THE united kingdom shall be represented by one parliament.

4. THERE shall be a communication of all rights and privileges between the subjects of both kingdoms, except where it is otherwise agreed.

9. WHEN England raises 2,000,000*l.* by a land tax, Scotland shall raise 48,000*l.*

16, 17. THE standards of the coin, of weights, and of measures, shall be reduced to those of England, throughout the united kingdoms.

18. THE laws relating to trade, customs, and the excise, shall be the same in Scotland as in England. But all the other laws of Scotland shall remain in force; but alterable by the parliament of Great Britain. Yet with this caution; that laws relating to public policy are alterable at the discretion of the parliament; laws relating to private rights are not to be altered but for the evident utility of the people of Scotland.

97 22. SIXTEEN peers are to be chosen to represent the peerage of Scotland in parliament, and forty five members to sit in the house of commons.

23. THE sixteen peers of Scotland shall have all privileges of parliament: and all peers of Scotland shall be peers of Great Britain, and rank next after those of the same degree at the time of the union, and shall have all privileges of peers, except sitting in the house of lords and voting on the trial of a peer.

THESE are the principal of the twenty five articles of union, which are ratified and confirmed by statute 5 Ann. c. 8. in which statute there are also two acts of parliament recited; the one of Scotland,<sup>3</sup> whereby the church of Scotland, and also the four universities of that kingdom, are established for ever, and all succeeding sovereigns are to take an oath inviolably to maintain the same; the other of England, 5 Ann. c. 6. whereby the acts of uniformity of 13 Eliz. and 13 Car. II. (except as the same had been altered by parliament at that time) and all other acts then in force for the preservation of the church of England, are declared perpetual; and it is stipulated, that every subsequent king and queen shall take an oath inviolably to maintain the same within England, Ireland, Wales, and the town of Berwick upon Tweed. And it is enacted, that these two acts “shall for ever be observed as fundamental and essential conditions of the union.”

UPON these articles, and act of union, it is to be observed, 1. That the two kingdoms are now so inseparably united, that nothing can ever disunite them again, (6) but an infringement of those points which, when they were separate and independent nations, it was mutually stipulated should be (7) “fundamental and essential conditions of the union.” 2. That whatever else may be deemed “fundamental and essential conditions,” the preservation of the two churches, of England and Scotland, in the same state that they were in at the time of the union, and the maintenance of the acts of uniformity which establish our common prayer, are expressly declared so to be. 3. That therefore any alteration in the constitutions of either of those churches, or in the liturgy of the ⟨8⟩ church of England, would be an infringement of these “fundamental and essential conditions,” and greatly endanger the union. 4. That the municipal laws of Scotland are ordained to be still observed in that part of the island, unless altered by parliament; and, as the parliament has not yet thought proper, except in a few instances, to alter them, they still (with regard to the particulars unaltered) continue in full force. Wherefore the municipal or common laws of England are, generally speaking, of no force or validity in Scotland; and, of consequence, in the ensuing commentaries, we shall have very little occasion to mention, any farther than sometimes by way of illustration, the municipal laws of that part of the united kingdoms. 98

<sup>3</sup> Protestant Religion and Presbyterian Church Act, 1707, c. 6 (Scotland).

⟨9⟩ THE town of Berwick upon Tweed, though subject to the crown of England ever since the conquest of it in the reign of Edward IV, is not part of the kingdom of England, nor subject to the common law; though it is subject to all acts of parliament, being represented by burgesses therein. And therefore ⟨10⟩ it was declared by statute 20 Geo. II. c. 42. that where England only is mentioned in any act of parliament, the same notwithstanding shall be deemed to comprehend the dominion of Wales, and town of Berwick upon Tweed. ⟨11⟩ But the general law there used is the Scots law, and the ordinary process of the courts of Westminster-hall is there of no authority<sup>e</sup>.

As to Ireland, that is still a distinct kingdom; though a dependent, subordinate kingdom. It was only entitled the dominion or lordship of Ireland<sup>f</sup>, and the king’s stile was no other than dominus Hiberniae, lord of Ireland, till the thirty third year of king Henry the eighth; when he assumed the title of king, which is recognized by act of parliament 35 Hen. VIII. c. 3. But, as Scotland and England are now one and the same kingdom, and yet differ in their municipal laws; so England and Ireland are, on the other hand, distinct kingdoms, and yet in general agree in their laws. The inhabitants of Ireland are, for the most part, descended from the English, who planted it as a kind of colony, after the conquest of it by king Henry the second, ⟨13⟩ at which time they carried over the English laws along with them. And as Ireland, thus conquered, planted, and governed, still continues in a state of dependence, it must necessarily conform to, and be obliged by such laws as the superior state thinks proper to prescribe. 99

At the time of this conquest the Irish were governed by what they called the Brehon law, so stiled from the Irish name of judges, who were denominated Brehons<sup>g</sup>. But king John in the twelfth year of his reign went into Ireland, and carried over with him many able sages of the law; and there by his letters patent, in right of the dominion of conquest, is said to have ordained and established that Ireland should be governed by the laws of England<sup>h</sup>: which letters patent sir Edward Coke<sup>i</sup> apprehends to have been there confirmed in parliament. But to this ordinance many of the Irish were averse to conform, and still stuck to their Brehon law: so that both Henry the third<sup>k</sup> and Edward the first<sup>l</sup> were obliged to renew the injunction; and at length in a parliament holden at Kilkenny, 40 Edw. III, under Lionel duke of Clarence, the then lieutenant of Ireland, the Brehon law was formally abolished,<sup>4</sup> it being unanimously declared to be indeed no law, but a lewd custom crept in of later times. And yet, even in the reign of queen Elizabeth, the wild natives still kept and preserved their Brehon law; which is described<sup>m</sup> to have been “a rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another, in which oftentimes there appeared great shew of equity in determining the right between party and party, but in many things repugnant quite both to God’s law and man’s.” The latter part <16> of which character is alone allowed it under Edward the first and his grandson.

<sup>e</sup> ⟨12⟩ [Jackson and Crispe v Mayor, &c. of Berwick] 1 Sid. 382. [Mayor of Berwick’s case] 2 Show. [K.B.] 365.

<sup>f</sup> Stat. Hiberniae. 14 Hen. III.

<sup>g</sup> 4 Inst. 358. Edm. Spenser’s state of Ireland. p. 1513. edit. Hughes.

BUT as Ireland was a distinct dominion, and had parliaments of its own, it is to be observed, that though the immemorial customs, or common law, of England were made the rule of justice in Ireland also, yet no acts of the English parliament, since the twelfth of king John, extended into that kingdom; unless it were specially named, or included under general words, such as, “within any of the king’s dominions.” And this is particularly expressed, and <17> the reason given in the year book<sup>n</sup>: “Ireland hath a parliament of its own, and maketh and altereth laws; and our statutes do not bind them, because they do not <19> send representatives to our parliament: but their persons are the king’s subjects, like as the inhabitants of Calais,<sup>5</sup> Gascoigny, and Guienne,<sup>6</sup> while they continued under <20> the king’s subjection.” <21> The method made use of in Ireland, as stated by sir Edward Coke<sup>o</sup>, of making statutes in their parliaments, according to Poyning’s law,<sup>7</sup> of which hereafter, is this: <22> 1. The lord lieutenant and council of Ireland must certify to the king under the great seal of Ireland the acts proposed to be passed. <23> 2. The king and council of England are to consider, approve, alter, or reject the said acts; and certify them back again under the great seal of England. And then, 3. They are to be proposed, received, or rejected in the parliament of Ireland. By this means nothing was left to the parliament in Ireland, <sup>h</sup> <14> [Craw v Ramsey] Vaugh. 294. 2 Pryn. Rec. 85.

<sup>i</sup> <15> 1 Inst. 341.

<sup>k</sup> A. R. 30. [i.e. 1246 ] 1 Rym. Foed. 442.

<sup>l</sup> A. R. 5. [i.e. 1276–7]—pro eo quod leges quibus utuntur Hybernici Deo detestabiles existunt, et omni juri dissonant, adeo quod leges censi non debeant—nobis et consilio nostro satis videtur expediens eisdem utendas concedere leges Anglicanas. [Inasmuch as the laws which the Irish use, are hateful to God and incompatible with justice, and therefore ought not to be considered as laws—it seems highly expedient to us and to our council, that we grant them the use of English law.] 3 Pryn. Rec. 1218.

<sup>m</sup> Edm. Spenser. ibid.

<sup>n</sup> <18> [YB] 2 Ric. III. pl. 12.

<sup>o</sup> 4 Inst. 353.

<sup>4</sup> Statutes of Kilkenny, 40 Edw. III c. 4 (Ireland), 1366.

<sup>5</sup> Calais, in northern France, was an English possession from 1347 to 1558.

<sup>6</sup> Gascony and Guienne, south-western regions of France, were associated with the English crown from the mid-twelfth to the mid-fifteenth century.

<sup>7</sup> Stat. 10 Henry VII c. 9 (Ireland).

but a bare negative or power of rejecting, not of proposing, any law. But the usage now is, that bills are often framed <24> in either house of parliament under the denomination of heads for a bill or bills; and in that shape they are offered to the consideration of the lord lieutenant and privy council, who then reject them at pleasure, without transmitting them to England.

BUT the Irish nation, being excluded from the benefit of the English statutes, were deprived of many good and profitable laws, made for the improvement of the common law: and, the measure of justice in both kingdoms becoming thereby no longer uniform, <25> therefore in the 10 Hen. VII. [1494] a set of statutes passed in Ireland, (sir Edward Poynings being then lord deputy, whence it is called Poynings' law) by which it was, among other things, enacted, that all acts of parliament before made in England, should be of force within the realm of Ireland<sup>p</sup>. But, by the same rule that no laws made in England, between king John's time and Poynings' law, were then binding in Ireland, it follows that no acts of the English parliament made since the 10 Hen. VII. do now bind the people of Ireland, unless specially named or included under general words<sup>q</sup>. And on the other hand it is equally clear, that where Ireland is particularly named, or is included under general words, they are bound by such acts of parliament. For this follows from the very nature and constitution of a dependent state: dependence being very little else, but an obligation to conform to the will or law of that superior person or state, upon which the inferior depends. The original and true ground of <26> this superiority is the right of conquest: a right allowed by the law of nations, if not by that of nature; and founded upon a compact either expressly or tacitly made between the conqueror and the conquered, that if they will acknowledge the victor for their master, he will treat them for the future as subjects, and not as enemies<sup>r</sup>. 101

BUT this state of dependence being almost forgotten, and ready to be disputed by the Irish nation, it became necessary some years ago to declare how that matter really stood: and therefore by statute 6 Geo. I. c. 5. it is declared, that the kingdom of Ireland ought to be subordinate to, and dependent upon, the imperial crown of Great Britain, as being inseparably united thereto; and that the king's majesty, with the consent of the lords and commons of Great Britain in parliament, hath power to make laws to bind the people of Ireland.

THUS we see how extensively the laws of Ireland communicate with those of England: and indeed such communication is highly necessary, as the ultimate resort from the courts of justice in Ireland is, as in Wales, to those in England; a writ of error (in the nature of an appeal) lying from the king's bench in Ireland to the king's bench in England<sup>s</sup>, as <27> the appeal from all other courts in Ireland lies immediately to the house of lords here: it being expressly declared, by the same statute 6 Geo. I. c. 5 that the peers of Ireland have no jurisdiction to affirm or reverse any judgments or decrees whatsoever. The propriety, and even necessity, in all inferior dominions, of 102

<sup>p</sup> 4 Inst. 351.

<sup>q</sup> [Parliament in Ireland] 12 Rep. 112.

<sup>r</sup> Puff. L. of N. 3. 6. 24.

<sup>s</sup> This was law in the time of Hen. VIII. as appears by the antient book, entituled, diversity of courts, c. bank le roy.

this constitution, “that, though justice be in general administred by courts of their own, yet that the appeal in the last resort ought to be to the courts of the superior state,” is founded upon these two reasons. 1. Because otherwise the law, appointed or permitted to such inferior dominion, might be insensibly changed within itself, without the assent of the superior. 2. Because otherwise judgments might be given to the disadvantage or diminution of the superiority; or to make the dependence to be only of the person of the king, and (28) not of the crown of England<sup>1</sup>.

WITH regard to the other adjacent islands which are subject to the crown of Great Britain, some of them (as the isle of Wight, of Portland, of Thanet, &c.) are comprized within some neighbouring county, and are therefore to be looked upon as annexed to the mother island, and part of the kingdom of England. But there are others, which require a more particular consideration.

AND, first, the isle of Man is a distinct territory from England and is not governed by our laws; neither doth any act of parliament extend to it, unless it be particularly 103 named therein; and then an act of parliament is binding there<sup>a</sup>. It was formerly a subordinate feudatory kingdom, subject to the kings of Norway;<sup>8</sup> then to king John and Henry III of England; afterwards to the kings of Scotland; and then again to the crown of England: and at length we find king Henry IV claiming the island by right of conquest, and disposing of it to the earl of Northumberland; upon whose attainder it was granted (by the name of the lordship of Man) to sir John de Stanley by letters patent 7 Hen. IV<sup>w</sup>. In his lineal descendants it continued for eight generations, till the death of Ferdinando earl of Derby, A.D. 1594; when a controversy arose concerning the inheritance thereof, between his daughters and William his surviving brother: upon which, and a doubt that was started concerning the validity of the original patent<sup>x</sup>, the island was seised into the queen’s<sup>9</sup> hands, and afterwards various grants were made of it by king James the first; all which being expired or surrendered, it was granted afresh in 7 Jac. I. to William earl of Derby, and the heirs male of his body, with remainder to his heirs general; which grant was the next year confirmed by act of parliament,<sup>10</sup> with a restraint of the power of alienation by the said earl and his issue male. On the death of James earl of Derby, A.D. 1735, the male line of earl William failing, the duke of Atholl succeeded to the island as heir general by a female branch. In the mean time, though the title of king had long been disused, the earls of Derby, as lords of Man, had maintained a sort of royal authority therein; by assenting or dissenting to laws, and exercising an appellate jurisdiction. Yet, though no English writ, or process from the courts of Westminster, was of any authority in Man, an appeal lay from a decree of the lord of the island to the king of Great Britain in council<sup>y</sup>. But,

<sup>1</sup> [Process into Wales] Vaugh. 402.

<sup>a</sup> 4 Inst. 284. [Isle of Man case] 2 And. 116.

<sup>w</sup> Selden. tit. hon. 1. 3.

<sup>x</sup> Camden. Eliz. A.D. 1594.

<sup>y</sup> [Christian v Corren] 1 P. W. 329.

<sup>8</sup> The Isle of Man, subject to the kings of Norway (800–1266), through vassal-kings of the Isles, of whom Ragnald (1187–1229) at times also did homage to King John of England and his son Henry III.

<sup>9</sup> i.e. Elizabeth I’s.

<sup>10</sup> Stat. 7 Jac. I c. 29.

the distinct jurisdiction of this little subordinate royalty being found inconvenient for the purposes of public justice, and for the revenue, (it affording ⟨29⟩ a convenient asylum for debtors, outlaws, and smugglers) authority was given to the treasury by statute 12 Geo. I. c. 28. to purchase the interest of the then proprietors for the use of the crown: which purchase hath at length been ⟨30⟩ completed in this present year 1765, and confirmed by statutes 5 Geo. III. c. 26. & 39. whereby the whole island and all its dependencies, so granted as aforesaid, (except the landed property of the Atholl family, their manerial rights and emoluments, and the patronage of the bishoprick<sup>z</sup> and other ecclesiastical benefices) are unalienably vested in the crown, and subjected to the regulations of the British excise and customs. 104

THE islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Sark, Alderney, and their appendages, were parcel of the duchy of Normandy, and were united to the crown of England by the first princes of the Norman line. They are governed by their own laws, which are for the most part the ducal customs of Normandy, being collected in an antient book of very great authority, entituled, le grand coustumier [the great customary]. The king's writ, or process from the courts of Westminster, is there of no force; but his commission is. They are not bound by common acts of our parliaments, unless particularly named<sup>a</sup>. All causes are originally determined by their own officers, the bailiffs and jurats of the islands; but an appeal lies from them to the king in council, in the last resort.

BESIDES these adjacent islands, our more distant plantations in America, and elsewhere, are also in some respects subject to the English laws. Plantations, or colonies in distant countries, are either such where the lands are claimed by right of occupancy only, by finding them desert and uncultivated, and peopling them from the mother country; or where, when already cultivated, they have been either gained by conquest, or ceded to us by treaties. And both these rights are founded upon the law of nature, or at least upon that of nations. But there is a difference between these two species of colonies, with respect to the laws by which they are bound. ⟨31⟩ For it is held<sup>b</sup>, that if an uninhabited country be discovered and planted by English subjects, all the English laws are immediately there in force. For as the law is the birthright of every subject, so wherever they go they carry their laws with them<sup>c</sup>. But in conquered or ceded countries, that have already laws of their own, the king may indeed alter and change those laws; but, till he does actually change them, the antient laws of the country remain, unless such as are against the law of God, as in the case of an infidel country<sup>d</sup>. 105

OUR American plantations are principally of this latter sort, being obtained in the last century either by right of conquest and driving out the natives (with what natural justice I shall not at present enquire) or by treaties. And therefore the common law of England, as such, has no allowance or authority there; they being no part of the

<sup>z</sup> The bishoprick of Man, or Sodor, or Sodor and Man, was formerly within the province of Canterbury, but annexed to that of York by statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 31.

<sup>a</sup> 4 Inst. 286.

<sup>b</sup> [Blankard v Galdy] [1] Salk. 411. [Smith v Brown and Cooper] [2 Salk.] 666.

<sup>c</sup> [Anon. (1722)] 2 P. Wms. 75.

<sup>d</sup> 7 Rep. 17 b. Calvin's case. [Dutton v Howell] Show. Parl. C. 31.

mother country, but distinct (though dependent) dominions. They are subject however to the control of the parliament; though (like Ireland, Man, and the rest) not bound by any acts of parliament, unless particularly <32> named. The form of government in most of them is borrowed from that of England. They have a governor named by the king, (or in some proprietary colonies by the proprietor) who is his representative or deputy. They have courts of justice of their own, from whose decisions an appeal lies to the king in council here in England. Their general assemblies which are their house of commons, together with their council of state being their upper house, with the concurrence of the king or his representative the governor, make laws suited to their own emergencies. But it is particularly declared by statute 7 & 8 W. III. c. 22. That all laws, by-laws, usages, and customs, which shall be in practice in any of the plantations, repugnant to any law, made or to be made in this kingdom relative to the said plantations, shall be utterly void and of none <33> effect.

106 THESE are the several parts of the dominions of the crown of Great Britain, in which the municipal laws of England are not of force or authority, merely as the municipal laws of England. Most of them have probably copied the spirit of their own law from this original; but then it receives its obligation, and authoritative force, from being the law of the country.

As to any foreign dominions which may belong to the person of the king by hereditary descent, by purchase, or other acquisition, as the territory of Hanover,<sup>11</sup> and his majesty's other property in Germany;<sup>12</sup> as these do not in any wise appertain to the crown of these kingdoms, they are entirely unconnected with the laws of England, and do not communicate with this nation in any respect whatsoever. The English legislature had wisely remarked the inconveniences that had formerly resulted from dominions on the continent of Europe; from the Norman territory which William the conqueror brought with him, and held in conjunction with the English throne;<sup>13</sup> and from Anjou, and its appendages,<sup>14</sup> which fell to Henry the second by hereditary descent. They had seen the nation engaged for near four hundred years together in ruinous wars for defence of these foreign dominions; till, happily for this country, they were lost under the reign of Henry the sixth.<sup>15</sup> They observed that from that time the maritime interests of England were better understood and more closely pursued: that, in consequence of this attention, the nation, as soon as she had rested from her civil wars, began at this period to flourish all at once; and became much more considerable in Europe than when her princes were possessed of a larger territory, and her counsels distracted by foreign interests. This experience and these considerations gave birth to a conditional clause in the act<sup>e</sup> of settlement, which

<sup>e</sup> Stat. 12 & 13 W. III. c. 3.

<sup>11</sup> Hanover, formally the Electorate of Brunswick-Lüneburg, formed a dynastic union with Great Britain under the house of Hanover (1714–1837).

<sup>12</sup> The duchies of Bremen and Verden (1719), the duchy of Saxe-Lauenburg (1727), and the latter's territory of Land Hadeln (1731).

<sup>13</sup> Normandy, in association with the English crown, 1066–1204.

<sup>14</sup> Anjou, united with the English crown, 1151–99.

<sup>15</sup> Normandy in 1450, Guienne in 1453.

vested the crown in his present majesty's illustrious house, "That in case the crown and imperial dignity of this realm shall hereafter come to any person not being a native of this kingdom of England, this nation shall not be obliged to engage in any war for the defence of any dominions or territories which do not belong to the crown of England, without consent of parliament."

WE come now to consider the kingdom of England in particular, the direct and immediate subject of those laws, concerning which we are to treat in the ensuing commentaries. And this comprehends <34> not only Wales, of which enough has been already said, but also part of the sea. The main or high seas are part of the realm of England, for thereon our courts of admiralty have jurisdiction, as will be shewn hereafter; but they are not subject to the common law<sup>f</sup>. This main sea begins at the low-water-mark. But between the high-water-mark, and the low-water-mark, where the sea ebbs and flows, the common law and the admiralty have divisum imperium, an alternate jurisdiction; one upon the water, when it is full sea; the other upon the land, when it is an ebb<sup>g</sup>. 107

THE territory of England is liable to two divisions; the one ecclesiastical, the other civil.

1. THE ecclesiastical division is, primarily, into two provinces, those of Canterbury and York. A province is the circuit of an arch-bishop's jurisdiction. Each province contains divers dioceses, or sees of suffragan bishops; whereof Canterbury includes twenty one, and York three; besides the bishoprick of the isle of Man, which was annexed to the province of York by king Henry VIII. Every diocese is divided into archdeaconries, whereof there are sixty in all; each archdeaconry into rural deaneries, which are the circuit of the archdeacon's and rural dean's jurisdiction, of whom hereafter; and every deanry is divided into parishes<sup>h</sup>.

A PARISH is that circuit of ground in <35> which the souls under the care of one parson or vicar do inhabit. <36> These are computed to be near ten thousand in <37> number. How antient the division of parishes is, may at present be difficult to ascertain; for it seems to be agreed on all hands, that in the early ages of christianity in this island, parishes were unknown, or at least signified the same that a diocese does now. There was then no appropriation of ecclesiastical dues to any particular church; but every man was at liberty to contribute his tithes to whatever priest or church he pleased, provided only that he did it to some: or, if he made no special appointment or appropriation thereof, they were paid into the hands of the bishop, whose duty it was to distribute them among the clergy and for other pious purposes according to his own discretion<sup>i</sup>. 108

MR Camden<sup>k</sup> says England was divided into parishes by archbishop Honorius about the year 630. Sir Henry Hobart<sup>l</sup> lays it down that parishes were first erected by the council of Lateran, which was held A.D. 1179.<sup>16</sup> Each widely differing from the

<sup>f</sup> Co. Litt. 260.

<sup>g</sup> Finch. L. 78.

<sup>h</sup> Co. Litt. 94.

<sup>i</sup> Seld. of tith. 9. 4. 2 Inst. 646. [Slade v Drake] Hob. 296.

<sup>k</sup> in his Britannia.

<sup>l</sup> [Slade v Drake] Hob. 296.

<sup>16</sup> The 3rd Lateran Council of the Western Church was held at the Lateran Palace, Rome.

other, and both of them perhaps from the truth; which will probably be found in the medium between the two extremes. For Mr Selden has clearly shewn<sup>m</sup>, that the clergy lived in common without any division of parishes, long after the time mentioned by Camden. And it appears from the Saxon laws, that parishes were in being long before the date of that council of Lateran, to which they are ascribed by Hobart.

We find the distinction of parishes, nay even of mother-churches, so early as in the laws of king Edgar, about the year 970. Before that time the consecration of tithes was in general arbitrary; that is, every man paid his own (as was before observed) to what church or parish he pleased. But this being liable to be attended with either fraud, or at least caprice, in the persons paying; and with either jealousies or mean compliances in such as were competitors for receiving them; it was now ordered by the law of king Edgar<sup>n</sup>, that “dentur omnes decimae primariae ecclesiae ad quam parochia pertinet” [that all tithes be given to the principal church to which the parish belongs].”

109 However, if any thane, or great lord, had a church within his own demesnes, distinct from the mother-church, in the nature of a private chapel; then, provided such church had a coemitory or consecrated place of burial belonging to it, he might allot one third of his tithes for the maintenance of the officiating minister: but, if it had no coemitory, the thane must himself have maintained his chaplain by some other means; for in such case all his tithes were ordained to be paid to the primariae ecclesiae or mother-church<sup>o</sup>.

THIS proves that the kingdom was <38> then universally divided into parishes; which division happened probably not all at once, but by degrees. For it seems pretty clear and certain that the boundaries of parishes were originally ascertained by those of a manor or manors: since it very seldom happens that a manor extends itself over more parishes than one, though there are often many manors in one parish. The lords, as christianity spread itself, began to build churches upon their own demesnes or wastes, to accommodate their tenants in one or two adjoining lordships; and, in order to have divine service regularly performed therein, obliged all their tenants to appropriate their tithes to the maintenance of the one officiating minister, instead of leaving them at liberty to distribute them among the clergy of the diocese in general: and this tract of land, the tithes whereof were so appropriated, formed a distinct parish. Which will well enough account for the frequent intermixture of parishes one with another. For if a lord had a parcel of land detached from the main of his estate, but not sufficient to form a parish of itself, it was natural for him to endow his newly erected church with the tithes of those disjointed lands; especially if no church was then built in any lordship adjoining to those out-lying parcels.

110 THUS parishes were gradually formed, and parish churches endowed with the tithes that arose within the circuit assigned. But some lands, either because they were in the hands of irreligious and careless owners, or were situate in forests and desert places, or for other now unsearchable reasons, were never united to any parish, and therefore continue to this day extraparochial; and their tithes are now by immemorial custom payable to the king instead of the bishop, in trust and confidence that he will distribute them, for the general good of the <39> church<sup>p</sup>. And thus much for the ecclesiastical division of this kingdom.

<sup>m</sup> of tithes. c. 9.

<sup>n</sup> [Leges Eadgari (959–75)] c. 1 [in D. Wilkins, Leges Anglo-Saxonicae (1721), 76].

<sup>o</sup> Ibid. c. 2. See also the laws of king Canute, c. 11. about the year 1030.

2. THE civil division of the territory of England is into counties, of those counties into hundreds, of those hundreds into tithings or towns. Which division, as it now stands, seems to owe its original to king Alfred; who, to prevent the rapines and disorders which formerly prevailed in the realm, instituted tithings; so called, from the Saxon, because ten freeholders with their families composed one. These all dwelt together, and were sureties or free pledges to the king for the good behaviour of each other; and, if any offence were committed in their district, they were bound to have the offender forthcoming<sup>q</sup>. And therefore antiently no man was suffered to abide in England above forty days, unless he were enrolled in some tithing or decennary<sup>r</sup>. One of the principal inhabitants of the tithing is annually appointed to preside over the rest, being called the tithing-man, the head-borough, (words which speak their own etymology) and in some countries the borsholder, or borough's-ealder, being supposed the discreetest man in the borough, town, or tithing<sup>s</sup>.

TITHINGS, towns, or vills, are of the same signification in law; <40> and had, each of them, originally a church and celebration of divine service, sacraments, and burials; which to have, or have had, separate to itself, is the essential distinction of a town, according to sir Edward Coke<sup>t</sup>. The word town or vill is indeed, by the alteration of times and language, now become a generical term, comprehending under it the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. A city is a town incorporated, which is or hath been the see of a bishop; and though the bishoprick be dissolved, as at Westminster, yet still it remaineth a city<sup>u</sup>. A borough is now understood to be a town, either corporate or not, that sendeth burgesses to parliament<sup>w</sup>. Other towns there are, to the number sir Edward Coke says<sup>x</sup> of 8803, which are neither cities nor boroughs; some of which have the privileges of markets, and others not; but both are equally towns in law. To several of these towns there are small appendages belonging, called hamlets; which are taken notice of in the statute of Exeter<sup>y</sup>, which makes frequent mention of entire vills, demi-vills, and hamlets. Entire vills sir Henry Spelman<sup>z</sup> conjectures to have consisted of ten freemen, or frank-pledges, demi-vills of five, and hamlets of less than five. These little collections of houses are sometimes under the same administration as the town itself, sometimes governed by separate officers; in

111

<sup>p</sup> 2 Inst. 647. [Bishop of Winchester's case] 2 Rep. 44. [Wright v Wright] Cro. Eliz. 512.

<sup>q</sup> Flet. 1. 47. This the laws of king Edward the confessor, c. 20. very justly intitle "summa et maxima securitas, per quam omnes statu firmissimo sustinentur;—quae hoc modo fiebat, quod sub decennali fidejussione debebant esse universi, &c." [The best and greatest security by which all persons are kept in the safest state; which was effected in this manner, that every ten should be sureties for each other.]

<sup>r</sup> Mirr. c. 1. §. 3.

<sup>s</sup> Finch. L. 8.

<sup>t</sup> <41> 1 Inst. 115 b.

<sup>u</sup> <42> Co. Litt. 109 b.

<sup>w</sup> Litt. §. 164.

<sup>x</sup> 1 Inst. 116.

<sup>y</sup> 14 Edw. I.

<sup>z</sup> Gloss. 274.

which last case it is, to some purposes in law, looked upon as a distinct township. These towns, as was before hinted, contained each originally but one parish, and one tithing; though many of them now, by the encrease of inhabitants, are divided into several parishes and tithings: and sometimes, where there is but one parish there are two or more vills or tithings.

As ten families of freeholders made up a town or tithing, so ten tithings composed a superior division, called a hundred, as consisting of ten times ten families. The hundred is governed by an high constable or bailiff, and formerly there was regularly held in it the hundred court for the trial of causes, though now fallen into disuse. In some of the more northern counties these hundreds are called wapentakes<sup>a</sup>.

112 THE subdivision of hundreds into tithings seems to be most peculiarly the invention of Alfred: the institution of hundreds themselves he rather introduced than invented. For they seem to have obtained in Denmark<sup>b</sup>: and we find that in France a regulation of this sort was made above two hundred years before; set on foot by Clotharius and Childebert, with a view of obliging each district to answer for the robberies committed in its own division.<sup>17</sup> These divisions were, in that country, as well military as civil; and each contained a hundred freemen; who were subject to an officer called the centenarius [head of a hundred]; a number of which centenarii were themselves subject to a superior officer called the count or comes<sup>c</sup>. And <43> indeed this institution of hundreds may be traced back as far as the antient Germans, from whom were derived both the Franks who became masters of Gaul, and the Saxons who settled in <44> England. For we read in Tacitus<sup>d</sup>, that both the thing and the name were well known to that warlike people. “Centeni ex singulis pagis sunt, idque ipsum inter suos vocantur; et quod primo numerus fuit, jam nomen et honor est. [There are a hundred from each district and so they are called hundred-men; thus what was originally a number is now a title of distinction.]”

AN indefinite number of these hundreds make up a county or shire. Shire is a Saxon word signifying a division; but a county, comitatus, is plainly derived from comes, the count of the Franks; that is, the earl, or alderman (as the Saxons called him) of the shire, to whom the government of it was intrusted. This he usually exercised by his deputy, still called in Latin vice-comes, and in English the sheriff, shrieve, or shire-reeve, signifying the officer of the shire; upon whom by process of time the civil administration of it is now totally devolved. In some counties there is an intermediate division, between the shire and the hundreds, as lathes in Kent, and rapes in Sussex, each of them containing about three or four hundreds apiece. These had formerly their lathe-reeves and rape-reeves, acting in subordination to the shire-reeve. Where a county is divided into three of these intermediate jurisdictions, they are called trithings<sup>e</sup>, which were antiently governed by a trithing-reeve. These

<sup>a</sup> Seld. in Fortesc. c. 24.

<sup>b</sup> Seld. tit. of hon. 2. 5. 3.

<sup>c</sup> Montesq. Sp. L. 30. 17.

<sup>d</sup> <45> de morib. German. 6.

<sup>e</sup> LL. Edw. c. 34.

<sup>17</sup> Several kings of the Merovingian dynasty bore these names, including Childerbert and Clothar, two of Clovis I's sons, who ruled in the sixth century. According to Montesquieu their decree about hundreds was published in 595 (see note c).

trithings still subsist in the large county of York, where by an easy corruption they are 113 denominated ridings; the north, the east, and the west-riding. The number of counties in England and Wales have been different at different times: at present there are forty in England, and twelve in Wales.

THREE of these counties, Chester, Durham, and Lancaster, are called counties palatine. The two former are such by prescription, or immemorial custom; or, at least as old as the Norman conquest<sup>f</sup>: the latter was created by king Edward III, in favour of Henry Plantagenet, first earl <46> and then duke of Lancaster, <47> whose heiress<sup>18</sup> John of Gant the king's son had married; and afterwards confirmed in parliament, to honour John of Gant himself; whom, on the death of his father-in-law, he had also created duke of Lancaster<sup>g</sup>. Counties palatine are so called a palatio [from a royal palace]; because the owners thereof, the earl of Chester, the bishop of Durham, and the duke of Lancaster, had in those counties jura regalia [royal rights], as fully as the king hath in his palace; regalem potestatem in omnibus [royal power in all things], as Bracton expresses it<sup>h</sup>. They might pardon treasons, murders, and felonies; they appointed all judges and justices of the peace; all writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in the king's; and all offences were said to be done against their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regis [against the peace of the lord king]<sup>i</sup>. And indeed by the antient law, in all peculiar jurisdictions, offences were said to be done against his peace in whose court they were tried; in a court leet, contra pacem domini [against the peace of the lord]; in the court of a corporation, contra pacem ballivorum [against the peace of the bailiffs]; in the sheriff's court or tourn, contra pacem vice-comitis [against the peace of the sheriff]<sup>k</sup>. These palatine <48> privileges were in all probability originally granted to the counties of Chester and Durham, because they bordered <49> upon enemies countries, Wales and Scotland; in order that the owners, being encouraged by so large an authority, might be the more watchful in its defence; and that the inhabitants, having justice administered at home, might not be obliged to go out of the county, and leave it open 114 to the enemies incursions. And upon this account also there were formerly two other counties palatine, Pembrokeshire and Hexamshire,<sup>19</sup> the latter now united with Northumberland: but these were abolished by parliament, the former in 27 Hen.
VIII,<sup>20</sup> the latter in 14 Eliz.<sup>21</sup> And in 27 Hen. VIII likewise, the powers beforementioned of owners of counties palatine were abridged; the reason for their continuance in a manner ceasing: though still all writs are witnessed in their names, and all forfeitures for treason by the common law accrue to them<sup>l</sup>.

<sup>f</sup> Seld. tit. hon. 2. 5. 8.

<sup>g</sup> [Duchy of Lancaster case] Plowd. 215.

<sup>h</sup> l. 3. c. 8. §. 4.

<sup>i</sup> 4 Inst. 204.

<sup>k</sup> Seld. in Hengham magn. c. 2.

<sup>l</sup> 4 Inst. 205.

<sup>18</sup> Blanche, duchess of Lancaster.

<sup>19</sup> Hexhamshire was incorporated within the county of Northumberland in 1572.

<sup>20</sup> 27 Hen. VIII c. 26.

<sup>21</sup> 14 Eliz. c. 13.

OF these three, the county of Durham is now the only one remaining in the hands of a subject. For the earldom of Chester, as Camden testifies, was united to the crown by Henry III, and has ever since given title to the king's eldest son. And the county palatine, or duchy, of Lancaster was the property of Henry of Bolinbroke, the son of John of Gant, at the time when he wrested the crown from king Richard II, and <50> assumed the title of Henry IV. But he was too prudent to suffer this to be united to the crown, lest, if he lost one, he should lose the other also. For, as Plowden<sup>m</sup> and sir Edward Coke<sup>n</sup> observe, "he knew he had the duchy of Lancaster by sure and indefeasible title, but that his title to the crown was not so assured: for that after the decease of Richard II the right of the crown was in the heir of Lionel duke of Clarence, second son of Edward III; John of Gant, father to this Henry IV, being but the fourth son." And therefore he procured an act of parliament, <52> in the first year of his reign, to keep it distinct and separate from the crown, and so it descended to his son, and grandson, Henry V, and Henry VI. Henry VI being attainted in 1 Edw. IV, this duchy was declared in parliament to have become forfeited to the crown<sup>o</sup>, and at the same time <53> an act was made to keep it still distinct and separate from other inheritances of the crown. And in 1 Hen. VII<sup>21</sup> <54> another act was made to vest the inheritance thereof in Henry VII and his heirs; and in this state, say sir Edward Coke<sup>p</sup> and Lambard<sup>q</sup> viz. in the natural heirs or posterity of Henry VII, did the right of the duchy remain to their days; a separate and distinct inheritance from that of the crown of England<sup>r</sup>.

THE isle of Ely is not a county palatine, though sometimes erroneously called so; but only a royal franchise; the bishop having, by grant of king Henry the first, jura regalia within the isle of Ely, and thereby he exercises a jurisdiction over all causes, as well criminal, as civil<sup>s</sup>.

THERE are also counties corporate; which are certain cities and towns, some with more, some with less territory annexed to them; to which out of special grace and favour the kings of England <56> have granted to be counties of themselves, and not to be comprized in any other county; but to be governed by their own sheriffs and other magistrates, so that no officers of the county at large have any power to intermeddle therein. Such are London, York, Bristol, Norwich, Coventry, and many 116 others. And thus much of the countries subject to the laws of England.

<sup>m</sup> <51> [Case of the Duchy of Lancaster] [1 Plowd.] 215.

<sup>n</sup> 4 Inst. 205.

<sup>o</sup> [Fisher v Batten] 1 Ventr. 155.

<sup>p</sup> 4 Inst. 206.

<sup>q</sup> Archeion. 233.

<sup>r</sup> <55> If this notion of Lambard and Coke be well founded, it might have become a very curious question at the time of the revolution in 1688, in whom the right of the duchy remained after king James's abdication. The attainder indeed of the pretended prince of Wales (by statute 13 W. III. c. 3.) has now put the matter out of doubt. And yet, to give that attainder its full force in this respect, the object of it must have been supposed legitimate, else he had no interest to forfeit.

<sup>s</sup> 4 Inst. 220.

<sup>21</sup> 1 Hen. VII c. 1.

OF THE ABSOLUTE RIGHTS OF INDIVIDUALS.

THE objects of the laws of England are so very numerous and extensive, that, in order to consider them with any tolerable ease and perspicuity, it will be necessary to distribute them methodically, under proper and distinct heads; avoiding as much as possible divisions too large and comprehensive on the one hand, and too trifling and minute on the other; both of which are equally productive of confusion.

Now, as municipal law is a rule of civil conduct, commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong; or, as Cicero<sup>a</sup>, and after him our Bracton<sup>b</sup>, has expressed it, sanctio justa, iubens honesta et prohibens contraria [a just ordinance, commanding what is right and prohibiting the contrary]<sup>1</sup> it follows, that the primary and principal objects of the law are RIGHTS, and WRONGS. In the prosecution therefore of these commentaries, I shall follow this very simple and obvious division; and shall in the first place consider the rights that are commanded, and secondly the wrongs that are forbidden by the laws of England. 118

RIGHTS are however liable to another subdivision; being either, first, those which concern, and are annexed to the persons of men, and are then called jura personarum or the rights of persons; or they are, secondly, such as a man may acquire over external objects, or things unconnected with his person, which are stiled jura rerum or the rights of things. Wrongs also are divisible into, first, private wrongs, which, being an infringement merely of particular rights, concern individuals only, and are called civil injuries; and secondly, public wrongs, which, being a breach of general and public rights, affect the whole community, and are called crimes and misdemeanors.

THE objects of the laws of England falling into this fourfold division, the present commentaries will therefore consist of the four following parts: 1. The rights of persons; with the means whereby such rights may be either acquired or lost. 2. The rights of things; with the means also of acquiring and losing them. 3. Private wrongs, or civil injuries; with the means of redressing them by law. 4. Public wrongs, or crimes and misdemeanors; with the means of prevention and punishment.

WE are now, first, to consider the rights of persons; with the means of acquiring and losing them.

Now the rights of persons that are commanded to be observed by the municipal law are of two sorts; first, such as are due from every citizen, which are usually called civil duties; and, secondly, such as belong to him, which is the more popular acceptance of 119

<sup>a</sup> 11 Philipp. 12.

<sup>b</sup> l. 1. c. 3.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. S. Waddams, Dimensions of Private Law: Categories and Concepts in Anglo-American Legal Reasoning (Cambridge, 2003), 43, n. 3.

rights or jura. Both may indeed be comprized in this latter division; for, as all social duties are of a relative nature, at the same time that they are due from one man, or set of men, they must also be due to another. But I apprehend it will be more clear and easy, to consider many of them as duties required from, rather than as rights belonging to, particular persons. Thus, for instance, allegiance is usually, and therefore most easily, considered as the duty of the people, and protection as the duty of the magistrate; and yet they are, reciprocally, the rights as well as duties of each other. Allegiance is the right of the magistrate, and protection the right of the people.

PERSONS also are divided by the law into either natural persons, or artificial. Natural persons are such as the God of nature formed us: artificial are such as created and devised by human laws for the purposes of society and government; which are called corporations or bodies politic.

THE rights of persons considered in their natural capacities are also of two sorts, absolute, and relative. Absolute, which are such as appertain and belong to particular men, merely as individuals or single persons: relative, which are incident to them as members of society, and standing in various relations to each other. The first, that is, absolute rights, will be the subject of the present chapter.

120 BY the absolute rights of individuals we mean those which are so in their primary and strictest sense; such as would belong to their persons merely in a state of nature, and which every man is intitled to enjoy whether out of society or in it. But with regard to the absolute duties, which man is bound to perform considered as a mere individual, it is not to be expected that any human municipal laws should at all explain or enforce them. For the end and intent of such laws being only to regulate the behaviour of mankind, as they are members of society, and stand in various relations to each other, they have consequently no business or concern with any but social or relative duties. Let a man therefore be ever so abandoned in his principles, or vitious in his practice, provided he keeps his wickedness to himself, and does not offend against the rules of public decency, he is out of the reach of human laws. But if he makes his vices public, though they be such as seem principally to affect himself, (as drunkenness, or the like) they then become, by the bad example they set, of pernicious effects to society; and therefore it is then the business of human laws to correct them. Here the circumstance of publication is what alters the nature of the case. Public sobriety is a relative duty, and therefore enjoined by our laws: private sobriety is an absolute duty, which, whether it be performed or not, human tribunals can never know; and therefore they can never enforce it by any civil sanction. But, with respect to rights, the case is different. Human laws define and enforce as well those rights which belong to a man considered as an individual, as those which belong to him considered as related to others.

FOR the principal aim of society is to protect individuals in the enjoyment of those absolute rights, which were vested in them by the immutable laws of nature; but which could not be preserved in peace without that mutual assistance and intercourse, which is gained by the institution of friendly and social communities. Hence it follows, that the first and primary end of human laws is to maintain and regulate these absolute rights of individuals. Such rights as are social and relative result from, and are posterior to, the formation of states and societies: so that to maintain and regulate these, is clearly a subsequent consideration. And therefore the principal view of human laws is, or ought always to be, to explain, protect, and enforce such rights as are absolute, which in themselves are few and simple; and, then, such rights as are relative, which arising from a variety of connexions, will be far more numerous and more complicated. These will take up a greater space in any code of laws, and hence may appear to be more attended to, though in reality they are not, than the rights of the former kind. Let us therefore proceed to examine how far all laws ought, and how far the laws of England actually do, take notice of these absolute rights, and provide for their lasting security. 121

THE absolute rights of man, considered as a free agent, endowed with discernment to know good from evil, and with power of choosing those measures which appear to him to be most desirable, are usually summed up in one general appellation, and denominated the natural liberty of mankind. This natural liberty consists properly in a power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature: being a right inherent in us by birth, and one of the gifts of God to man at his creation, when he endued him with the faculty of free-will. But every man, when he enters into society, gives up a part of his natural liberty, as the price of so valuable a purchase; and, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce, obliges himself to conform to those laws, which the community has thought proper to establish. And this species of legal obedience and conformity is infinitely more desirable, than that wild and savage liberty which is sacrificed to obtain it. For no man, that considers a moment, would wish to retain the absolute and uncontrolled power of doing whatever he pleases; the consequence of which is, that every other man would also have the same power; and then there would be no security to individuals in any of the enjoyments of life. Political therefore, or civil, liberty, which is that of a member of society, is no other than natural liberty so far restrained by human laws (and no farther) as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the publick<sup>c</sup>. Hence we may collect that the law, which restrains a man from doing mischief to his fellow citizens, though it diminishes the natural, increases the civil liberty of mankind: but every wanton and causeless restraint of the will of the subject, whether practiced by a monarch, a nobility, or a popular assembly, is a degree of tyranny.<sup>2</sup> Nay, that even laws themselves, whether made with or without our consent, if they regulate and constrain our conduct in matters of mere indifference, without any good end in view, (1) are laws destructive of liberty: whereas if any public advantage can arise from observing such precepts, the control of our private inclinations, in one or two particular points, will conduce to preserve our general freedom in others of more importance; by supporting that state, of society, which alone can secure our independence. Thus the statute of king Edward IV<sup>d</sup>, which forbad the fine 122 gentlemen of those times (under the degree of a lord) to wear pikes upon their shoes or boots of more than two inches in length, was a law that savoured of oppression; because, however ridiculous the fashion then in use might appear, the restraining it by pecuniary penalties could serve no purpose of common utility. But the statute of king Charles II<sup>e</sup>, which prescribes a thing seemingly as (2) indifferent; viz. a dress for the dead, who are all ordered to be buried in woollen; is a law consistent with public liberty, for it encourages the staple trade, on which in great measure depends the universal good of the nation. So that laws, when prudently framed, are by no means subversive but rather introductive of liberty; for (as Mr Locke has well observed) where there is no law, there is no freedom. But then, on the other hand, that constitution or frame of government, that system of laws, is alone calculated to maintain civil liberty, which leaves the subject entire master of his own conduct, except in those points wherein the public good requires some direction or restraint.

<sup>c</sup> Facultas ejus, quod cuique facere libet, nisi quid jure prohibetur. [Its essence is the power of doing whatsoever we please, unless forbidden by law.] Inst. 1. 3. 1.

<sup>d</sup> 3 Edw. IV. c. 5.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. I. 11.

123 THE idea and practice of this political or civil liberty flourish in their highest vigour in these kingdoms, where it falls little short of perfection, and can only be lost or destroyed by the folly or demerits of its owner: the legislature, and of course the laws of England, being peculiarly adapted to the preservation of this inestimable blessing even in the meanest subject. Very different from the modern constitutions of other states, on the continent of Europe, and from the genius of the imperial law; which in general are calculated to vest an arbitrary and despotic power of controlling the actions of the subject in the prince, or in a few grandees. And this spirit of liberty is so deeply implanted in our constitution, and rooted even in our very soil, that a slave or a negro, the moment he lands in England, falls under the protection of the laws, (3) and with regard to all natural rights becomes eo instanti [from that instant] a freeman<sup>g</sup>.<sup>3</sup>

THE absolute rights of every Englishman (which, taken in a political and extensive sense, are usually called their liberties) as they are founded on nature and reason, so they are coeval with our form of government; though subject at times to fluctuate and change: their establishment (excellent as it is) being still human. At some times we have seen them depressed by over-bearing and tyrannical princes; at others so luxuriant as even to tend to anarchy, a worse state than tyranny itself, as any government is better than none at all. But the vigour of our free constitution has always delivered the nation from these embarrassments, and, as soon as the convulsions consequent on the struggle have been over, the ballance of our rights and liberties has settled to its proper level; and their fundamental articles have been from time to time asserted in parliament, as often as they were thought to be in danger.

FIRST, by the great charter of liberties, which was obtained, sword in hand, from king John; and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in parliament by king

<sup>e</sup> 30 Car. II. st. 1. c. 3.

<sup>f</sup> on Gov. p. 2. §. 57.

<sup>g</sup> [Smith v Brown and Cooper] (4) [2] Salk. 666.

<sup>3</sup> Blackstone seems to have become more cautious in his later discussions of slavery: see I. 272–4, II. 272; Letters, ed. Prest, 138–9; Prest, Blackstone, 250–3.

Henry the third, his son. Which charter contained very few new grants; but, as sir Edward Coke<sup>h</sup> observes, was for the most part declaratory of the principal grounds 124 of the fundamental laws of England. Afterwards by the statute called confirmatio cartarum [a confirmation of the charters]<sup>i</sup>, whereby the great charter is directed to be allowed as the common law; all judgments contrary to it are declared void; copies of it are ordered to be sent to all cathedral churches, and read twice a year to the people; and sentence of excommunication is directed to be as constantly denounced against all those that by word, deed, or counsel act contrary thereto, or in any degree infringe it. Next by a multitude of subsequent corroborating statutes, (sir Edward Coke, I think, reckons thirty two<sup>k</sup>,) from the first Edward to Henry the fourth. Then, after a long interval, by the petition of right; which was a parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by king Charles the first in the beginning of his reign. Which was closely followed by the still more ample concessions made by that unhappy prince to his parliament, before the fatal rupture between them; and by the many salutary laws, particularly the habeas corpus act,<sup>4</sup> passed under Charles the second. To these succeeded the bill of rights, or declaration delivered by the lords and commons to the prince and princess of Orange 13 February 1688; and afterwards enacted in parliament, when they became king and queen: which declaration concludes in these remarkable words; “and they do claim, demand, and insist upon all and singular the premises, as their undoubted rights and liberties.” And the act of parliament itself<sup>l</sup> recognizes “all and singular the rights and liberties asserted and claimed in the said declaration to be the true, antient, and indubitable rights of the people of this kingdom.” Lastly, these liberties were again asserted at the commencement of the present century, in the act of settlement<sup>m</sup>, whereby (5) the crown is limited to his present majesty’s illustrious house,<sup>5</sup> and some new provisions were added at the same fortunate aera for better securing our religion, laws, and liberties; which the statute declares to be “the birthright of the people of England;” according to the antient doctrine of the common law<sup>n</sup>.

THUS much for the declaration of our rights and liberties. The rights themselves 125 thus defined by these several statutes, consist in a number of private immunities; which will appear, from what has been premised, to be indeed no other, than either that residuum [remainder] of natural liberty, which is not required by the laws of society to be sacrificed to public convenience; or else those civil privileges, which society hath engaged to provide, in lieu of the natural liberties so given up by individuals. These therefore were formerly, either by inheritance or purchase, the rights of all mankind; but, in most other countries of the world being now more or

<sup>h</sup> 2 Inst. proem.

<sup>i</sup> 25 Edw. I.

<sup>k</sup> 2 Inst. proem.

<sup>l</sup> 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2.

<sup>m</sup> 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2.

<sup>n</sup> [Wimbish v Tailbois] [1] Plowd. 55.

<sup>4</sup> 31 Car. II c. 2.

<sup>5</sup> i.e. the house of Hanover.

less debased and destroyed, they at present may be said to remain, in a peculiar and emphatical manner, the rights of the people of England. And these may be reduced to three principal or primary articles; the right of personal security, the right of personal liberty; and the right of private property: because as there is no other known method of compulsion, or of abridging man's natural free will, but by an infringement or diminution of one or other of these important rights, the preservation of these, inviolate. may justly be said to include the preservation of our civil immunities in their largest and most extensive sense.

I. THE right of personal security consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation.

1. LIFE is the immediate gift of God, a right inherent by nature in every individual; and it begins in contemplation of law as soon as an infant is able to stir in the mother's womb. For if a woman is quick with child, and by a potion, or otherwise, killeth it in her womb; or if any one beat her, whereby the child dieth in her body, and she is delivered of a dead child; this, though not murder, was by the antient law homicide or manslaughter<sup>o</sup>. (6) But at present it is not looked upon in quite so atrocious a light, though it remains a very heinous misdemeanour<sup>p</sup>.

AN infant in ventre sa mere, or in the mother's womb, is supposed in law to be born for many purposes. It is capable of having a legacy, or a surrender of a copyhold estate made to it. It may have a guardian assigned to it<sup>q</sup>; and it is enabled to have an estate limited to its use, and to take afterwards by such limitation, as if it were then actually born<sup>r</sup>. And in this point the civil law agrees with ours<sup>s</sup>.

2. A MAN's limbs, (by which for the present we only understand those members which may be useful to him in fight, and (8) the loss of which only amounts to mayhem by the common law) are also the gift of the wise creator; to enable man to protect himself from external injuries in a state of nature. To these therefore he has a natural inherent right; and they cannot be wantonly destroyed or disabled without a manifest breach of civil liberty.

BOTH the life and limbs of a man are of such high value, in the estimation of the law of England, that it pardons even homicide if committed se defendendo [in self-defence], or in order to preserve them. For whatever is done by a man, to save either life or member, is looked upon as done upon the highest necessity and compulsion. Therefore if a man through fear of death or mayhem is prevailed upon to execute a deed, or do any other legal act; these, though accompanied with all other the requisite (9) solemnities, are totally void in law, if forced upon him by a well-grounded <sup>o</sup> Si aliquis mulierem praegnantem percusserit, vel ei venenum dederit, per quod fecerit abortivam; si puerperium jam formatum fuerit, et maxime si fuerit animatum, facit homicidium. [If any one strikes a pregnant woman, or administer poison to her by which abortion shall ensue, if the child should be already formed, and particularly if it be alive, that person is guilty of manslaughter.] Bracton. l. 3. c. 21.

<sup>p</sup> (7) 3 Inst. 90.

<sup>q</sup> Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24.

<sup>r</sup> Stat. 10 & 11 W. III. c. 16.

<sup>s</sup> Qui in utero sunt, in jure civili intelliguntur in rerum natura esse, cum de eorum commodo agatur. [Those who are in the womb, are considered by the civil law to be in the nature of things as they are capable of being benefited.] Ff. 1. 5. 26.

apprehension of losing his life, or even his limbs, in case of his non-compliance<sup>t</sup>. And the same is also a sufficient excuse for the commission of many misdemeanors, as will appear in the fourth book. The constraint a man is under in these circumstances is called in law duress, from the Latin durities [hardship], of which there are two sorts; duress of imprisonment, where a man actually loses his liberty, of which we shall presently speak; and duress per minas [by threats], where the hardship is only threatened and impending, which is that we are now discoursing of. Duress per minas is either for fear of loss of life, or else for fear of mayhem, or loss of limb. And this fear must be upon sufficient reason; “non,” as Bracton expresses it, “suspicio cujuslibet vani et meticulosi hominis, sed talis qui possit cadere in virum constantem; talis enim debet esse metus, qui in se contineat vitae periculum, aut corporis cruciatum”<sup>u</sup>.<sup>6</sup> A fear of battery, or being beaten, though never so well grounded, is no duress; neither is the fear of having one’s house burnt, or one’s goods taken away and destroyed; because in these cases, should the threat be performed, a man may have satisfaction by recovering equivalent damages<sup>w</sup>: but no suitable atonement can be made for the loss of life, or limb. And the indulgence shewn to a man under this, the principal, sort of duress, the fear of losing his life or limbs, agrees also with that maxim of the civil law; ignoscitur ei qui sanguinem suum qualiter qualiter redemptum voluit [he is forgiven who has acted in pure defence of his own life or limb]<sup>x</sup>.

THE law not only regards life and member, and protects every man in the enjoyment of them, but also furnishes him with every thing necessary for their support. For there is no man so indigent or wretched, but he may demand a supply sufficient for all the necessities of life, from the more opulent part of the community, by means of the several statutes enacted for the relief of the poor, of which in their proper places. A humane provision; yet, though dictated by the principles of society, discountenanced by the Roman laws. For the edicts of the emperor Constantine, commanding the public to maintain the children of those who were unable to provide for them, in order to prevent the murder and exposure of infants, an institution founded on the same principle as our foundling hospitals, though comprized in the Theodosian code<sup>y</sup>, were rejected in Justinian’s collection. 128

THESE rights, of life and member, can only be determined by the death of the person; (10) which is either a civil or natural death. (11) The civil death commences if any man be banished the realm<sup>z</sup> by the process of the common law, or enters into religion; that is, goes into a monastery, and becomes there a monk professed: in which cases he is absolutely dead in law, and his next heir shall have his estate. For, such banished (12) man is entirely cut off from society; and such a monk, upon his profession, renounces solemnly all secular concerns: and besides, as the popish

<sup>t</sup> 2 Inst. 483.

<sup>u</sup> l. 2. c. 5.

<sup>w</sup> 2 Inst. 483.

<sup>x</sup> Ff. 48. 21. 1.

<sup>y</sup> l. 11. t. 27.

<sup>z</sup> Co. Litt. 133.

<sup>6</sup> ‘It must not be the apprehension of a foolish and fearful man, but such as a courageous man may be susceptible of; it should be, for instance, such a fear as consists in an apprehension of bodily pain, or danger to life.’

clergy claimed an exemption from the duties of civil life, and the commands of the temporal magistrate, <13> the genius of the English law would not suffer those persons to enjoy the benefits of society, who secluded themselves from it, and refused to submit to its regulations<sup>a</sup>. <14> A monk is therefore accounted civiliter mortuus [dead in law], and when he enters into religion may, like other dying men, make his testament and executors; or, if he makes none, the ordinary may grant administration to his next of kin, as if he were actually dead intestate. And such executors and <15> administrators shall have the same power, and may bring the same actions for debts due to the religious, and are liable to the same actions for those due from him, as if he were naturally deceased<sup>b</sup>. Nay, so far has this principle been carried, that when one was bound in a bond to an abbot and his successors, and afterwards made his executors and professed himself a monk of the same abbey, and in process of time was himself made abbot thereof; here the law gave him, in the capacity of abbot, an action of debt against his own executors to recover the money due<sup>c</sup>. In short, <17> a monk or religious is so effectually dead in law, that a lease made even to a third person, during the life (generally) of one who afterwards becomes a monk, determines by such his entry into religion: for which reason leases, and <18> other conveyances, for life, are usually made to have and to hold for the term of <19> one's natural life<sup>d</sup>.

THIS natural life being, as was before observed, the immediate donation of the great creator, cannot legally be disposed of or destroyed by any individual, neither by the person himself nor by any other of his fellow creatures, merely upon their own authority. Yet nevertheless it may, by the divine permission, be frequently forfeited for the breach of those laws of society, which are enforced by the sanction of capital punishments; of the nature, restrictions, expedience, and legality of which, we may hereafter more conveniently enquire in the concluding book of these commentaries. At present, I shall only observe, that whenever the constitution of a state vests in any man, or body of men, a power of destroying at pleasure, without the direction of laws, the lives or members of the subject, such constitution is in the highest degree tyrannical: and that whenever any laws direct such destruction for light and trivial causes, such laws are likewise tyrannical, though in an inferior degree; because here the subject is aware of the danger he is exposed to, and may by prudent caution provide against it. The statute law of England does therefore very seldom, and the common law does never, inflict any punishment extending to life or limb, unless upon the highest necessity: and the constitution is an utter stranger to any arbitrary power of killing or maiming the subject without the express warrant of law. "Nullus liber homo, says the great charter<sup>e</sup>, aliquo modo destruatur, nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum aut per legem terrae [No freeman shall be in any way ruined but by

<sup>a</sup> This was also a rule in the feudal law, [Feud.] l. 2. t. 21. desiit esse miles seculi, qui factus est miles Christi, nec beneficium pertinent ad eum qui non debet gerere officium. [He who becomes a soldier of Christ hath ceased to be a soldier of the world, nor is he entitled to any reward who owes no service.]

<sup>b</sup> Litt. §. 200.

<sup>c</sup> <16> Co. Litt. 133 b. [See also II. 174.]

<sup>d</sup> [Green v Balser; or, the Archbishop of Canterbury's case] 2 Rep. 48. Co. Litt. 132.

<sup>e</sup> c. 29.

the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land].” Which words, “aliquo modo destruat,” according to sir Edward Coke<sup>f</sup>, include a prohibition not only of killing, and maiming, but also of torturing (to which our laws are strangers) and of every oppression by colour of an illegal authority. And it is enacted by the statute 5 Edw. III. c. 9. that no man shall be forejudged of life or limb, contrary to the great charter and the law of the land: and again, by statute 28 Edw. III. c. 3. that no man shall be put to death, without being brought to answer by due process of law. 130

3. BESIDES those limbs and members that may be necessary to man, in order to defend himself or annoy his enemy, the rest of his person or body is also entitled by the same natural right to security from the corporal insults of menaces, assaults, beating, and wounding; though such insults amount not to destruction of life or member.

4. THE preservation of a man’s health from such practices as may prejudice or annoy it, and

5. THE security of his reputation or good name from the arts of detraction and slander, are rights to which every man is intitled, by reason and natural justice; since without these it is impossible to have the perfect enjoyment of any other advantage or right. But these three last articles (being of much less importance than those which have gone before, and those which are yet to come) it will suffice to have barely mentioned among the rights of persons; referring the more minute discussion of their several branches, to those parts of our commentaries which treat of the infringement of these rights, under the head of personal wrongs.

II. NEXT to personal security, the law of England regards, asserts, and preserves the personal liberty of individuals. This personal liberty consists in the power of loco-motion, of changing situation, or removing one’s person to whatsoever place one’s own inclination may direct; without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. Concerning which we may make the same observations as upon the preceding article; that it is a right strictly natural; that the laws of England have never abridged it without sufficient cause; and, that in this kingdom it cannot ever be abridged at the mere discretion of the magistrate, without the explicit permission of the laws. Here again the language of the great charter<sup>g</sup> is, that no freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, but by the lawful judgment 131 of his equals, or by the law of the land. And many subsequent old statutes<sup>h</sup> expressly direct, that no man shall be taken or imprisoned by suggestion or petition to the king, or his council, unless it be by legal indictment, or the process of the common law. By the petition of right, 3 Car. I, it is enacted, that no freeman shall be imprisoned or detained without cause shewn, to which he may make answer according to law. By 16 Car. I. c. 10. if any person be restrained of his liberty by order or decree of any illegal court, or by command of the king’s majesty in person, or by warrant of the council board, or of any of the privy council; he shall, upon demand of his counsel, have a writ of habeas corpus, to bring his body before the court of king’s bench or common pleas; who shall determine whether the cause of his commitment be just, and thereupon do as to justice shall appertain. And by 31 Car. II. c. 2. commonly called the habeas corpus act, the methods of obtaining this writ are so plainly pointed out and enforced, that, so long as this statute remains unimpeached, no subject of England can be long detained in prison, except in those cases in which the law requires and justifies such detainer. And, lest this act should be evaded by demanding unreasonable bail, or sureties for the prisoner's appearance, it is declared by 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. that excessive bail ought not to be required.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Inst. 48.

<sup>g</sup> c. 29.

<sup>h</sup> 5 Edw. III. c. 9. 25 Edw. III. st. 5. c. 4. and 28 Edw. III. c. 3.

OF great importance to the public is the preservation of this personal liberty: for if once it were left in the power of any, the highest, magistrate to imprison arbitrarily whomever he or his officers thought proper, (as in France it is daily <20> practiced by the crown) there would soon be an end of all other rights and immunities. Some have thought, that unjust attacks, even upon life, or property, at the arbitrary will of the magistrate, are less dangerous to the commonwealth, than such as are made upon the personal liberty of the subject. To bereave a man of life, or by violence to confiscate his estate, without accusation or trial, would be so gross and notorious an act of despotism, as must at once convey the alarm of tyranny throughout the whole kingdom. But confinement of the person, by secretly hurrying him to gaol, where his sufferings are unknown or forgotten; is a less public, a less striking, and therefore a more dangerous engine of arbitrary government. And yet sometimes, when the state is in real danger, even this may be a necessary measure. But the happiness of our constitution is, that it is not left to the executive power to determine when the danger of the state is so great, as to render this measure expedient. <21> For the parliament only, or legislative power, whenever it sees proper, can authorize the crown, by suspending the habeas corpus act for a short and limited time, to imprison suspected persons without giving any reason for so doing. As the senate of Rome was wont to have recourse to a dictator, a magistrate of absolute authority, when they judged the republic in any imminent danger. The decree of the senate, which usually preceded the nomination of this magistrate, "dent operam consules, nequid respublica detrimenti capiat [let the consuls take care that the commonwealth receive no injury]," was called the senatus consultum ultimae necessitatis [the senate's decree of last resort]. In like manner this experiment ought only to be tried in cases of extreme emergency; and in these the nation parts with its liberty for a while, in order to preserve it for ever.

THE confinement of the person, in any wise, is an imprisonment. So that the keeping a man against his will in a private house, putting him in the stocks, arresting or forcibly detaining him in the street, is an imprisonment<sup>i</sup>. And the law so much discourages unlawful confinement, that if a man is under duress of imprisonment, which we before explained to mean a compulsion by an illegal restraint of liberty, until he seals a bond or the like; he may alledge this duress, and avoid the extorted bond. But if a man be lawfully imprisoned, and either to procure his discharge, or on any other fair account, seals a bond or a deed, this is not by duress of imprisonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it<sup>k</sup>. To make imprisonment lawful, it must either be, by process from the courts of judicature, or by warrant from some legal officer, having authority to commit to prison; which warrant must be in writing, under the hand and seal of the magistrate, and express the causes of the commitment, in order to be examined into (if necessary) upon a habeas corpus. If there be no cause expressed, the gaoler is not bound to detain the prisoner<sup>1</sup>. For the law judges in this respect, saith sir Edward Coke, like Festus the Roman governor; that it is unreasonable to send a prisoner, and not to signify withal the crimes alleged against him.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>i</sup> 2 Inst. 589.

<sup>k</sup> 2 Inst. 482.

A NATURAL and regular consequence of this personal liberty, is, that every Englishman may claim a right to abide in his own country so long as he pleases; and not to be driven from it unless by the sentence of the law. The king indeed, by his royal prerogative, may issue out his writ ne exeat regnum [let him not leave the kingdom], and prohibit any of his subjects from going into foreign parts without licence<sup>m</sup>. This may be necessary for the public service, and safeguard of the commonwealth. But no power on earth, except the authority of parliament, can send any subject of England out of the land against his will; no not even a criminal. (22) For exile, or transportation, is a punishment unknown to the common law; and, (23) wherever it is now inflicted, it is either by the choice of the criminal himself, to escape a capital punishment, or else by the express direction of some modern act of parliament. To this purpose the great charter<sup>n</sup> declares that no freeman shall be banished, unless by the judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. And by the habeas corpus act, 31 Car. II. c. 2. (that second magna carta, and stable bulwark of our liberties) it is enacted, that no subject of this realm, who is an inhabitant of England, Wales, or Berwick, shall be sent prisoner into Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, or places beyond the seas; (where they (24) cannot have the benefit and protection of the common law) but that all such imprisonments shall be illegal; that the person, who shall dare to commit another contrary to this law, shall be disabled from bearing any office, shall incur the penalty of a praemunire,<sup>8</sup> and be incapable of receiving the king's pardon: and the party suffering shall also have his private action against the person committing, and all his aiders, advisers and abettors, and shall recover treble costs; besides his damages, which no jury shall assess at less than five hundred pounds.

134

THE law is in this respect so benignly and liberally construed for the benefit of the subject, that, though within the realm the king may command the attendance and service of all his liege-men, yet he cannot send any man out of the realm, (25) even upon the public service: he cannot even constitute a man lord deputy or lieutenant of Ireland against his will, nor make him a foreign ambassador<sup>o</sup>. For this might in reality be no more than an honorable exile.

III. THE third absolute right, inherent in every Englishman, is that of property: which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, <sup>1</sup> 2 Inst. 52, 53.

<sup>m</sup> F. N. B. 85.

<sup>n</sup> cap. 29.

<sup>o</sup> (26) 2 Inst. 47.

<sup>7</sup> Porcius Festus, procurator of Judaea, addressing King Herod Agrippa: Acts 25:27.

<sup>8</sup> Praemunire: those convicted under the fourteenth-century statutes of praemunire, which forbade appeals to foreign courts in cases within the jurisdiction of royal courts, forfeited their lands to the crown; see IV, ch. 8.

without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. The original of private property is probably founded in nature, as will be more fully explained in the second book of the ensuing commentaries: but certainly the modifications under which we at present find it, the method of conserving it in the present owner, and of translating it from man to man, are entirely derived from society; and are some of those civil advantages, in exchange for which every individual has resigned a part of his natural liberty. The laws of England are therefore, in point of honor and justice, extremely watchful in ascertaining and protecting this right. Upon this principle the great charter<sup>p</sup> has declared that no freeman shall be disseised, or divested, of his freehold, or of his liberties, or free customs, but by the judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. And by a variety of antient statutes<sup>q</sup> it is enacted, that no man's lands or goods shall be seised into the king's hands, against the great charter, and the law of the land; and that no man shall be disinherited, nor put out 135 of his franchises or freehold, unless he be duly brought to answer, and be forejudged by course of law; and if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be redressed, and holden for none.

So great moreover is the regard of the law for private property, that it will not authorize the least violation of it; no, not even for the general good of the whole community. If a new road, for instance, were to be made through the grounds of a private person, it might perhaps be extensively beneficial to the public; but the law permits no man, or set of men, to do this without consent of the owner of the land. In vain may it be urged, that the good of the individual ought to yield to that of the community; for it would be dangerous to allow any private man, or even any public tribunal, to be the judge of this common good, and to decide whether it be expedient or no. Besides, the public good is in nothing more essentially interested, than in the protection of every individual's private rights, as modelled by the municipal law. In this, and similar cases the legislature alone can, and indeed frequently does, interpose, and compel the individual to acquiesce. But how does it interpose and compel? Not by absolutely stripping the subject of his property in an arbitrary manner; but by giving him a full indemnification and equivalent for the injury thereby sustained. The public is now considered as an individual, treating with an individual for an exchange. All that the legislature does is to oblige the owner to alienate his possessions for a reasonable price; and even this is an exertion of power, which the legislature indulges with caution, and which nothing but the legislature can perform.

NOR is this the only instance in which the law of the land has postponed even public necessity to the sacred and inviolable rights of private property. For no subject of England can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm or the support of government, but such as are imposed by his own consent, or that of his representatives in parliament. By the statute 25 Edw. I. c. 5 and 6. it is provided, that 136 the king shall not take any aids or tasks, but by the common assent of the realm. And what that common assent is, is more fully explained by 34 Edw. I. st. 4. cap. 1. which enacts, that no talliage or aid shall be taken without assent of the arch-bishops, bishops, earls, barons, knights, burgesses, and other freemen of the land<sup>r</sup>: and again by 14 Edw. III. st. 2. c. 1. the prelates, earls, barons, and commons, citizens, burgesses, and merchants shall not be charged to make any aid, if it be not by the common assent of the great men and commons in parliament. And as this fundamental law had been shamefully evaded under many succeeding princes, by compulsive loans, and benevolences extorted without a real and voluntary consent, it was made an article in the petition of right 3 Car. I. c. 1., that no man shall be compelled to yield any gift, loan, or benevolence, tax, or such like charge, without common consent by act of parliament. And, lastly, by the statute 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is declared, that levying money for or to the use of the crown, by pretence of prerogative, without grant of parliament; or for longer time, or in other manner, than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal.

<sup>p</sup> c. 29.

<sup>q</sup> 5 Edw. III. c. 9. 25 Edw. III. st. 5. c. 4. 28 Edw. III. c. 3.

IN the three preceding articles we have taken a short view of the principal absolute rights which appertain to every Englishman. But in vain would these rights be declared, ascertained, and protected by the dead letter of the laws, if the constitution had provided no other method to secure their actual enjoyment. It has therefore established certain other auxiliary subordinate rights of the subject, which serve (28) principally as barriers to protect and maintain inviolate the three great and primary rights, of personal security, personal liberty, and private property. These are,

1. THE constitution, powers, and privileges of parliament, of which I shall treat at large in the ensuing chapter.

2. THE limitation of the king's prerogative, by bounds so certain and notorious, 137 that (29) it is impossible he should exceed them without the consent of the people. Of this also I shall treat in its proper place. The former of these keeps the legislative power in due health and vigour, so as to make it improbable that laws should be enacted destructive of general liberty: the latter is a guard upon the executive power, by restraining it from acting either beyond or in contradiction to the laws, that are framed and established by the other.

3. A THIRD subordinate right of every Englishman is that of applying to the courts of justice for redress of injuries. Since the law is in England the supreme arbiter of every man's life, liberty, and property, courts of justice must at all times be open to the subject, and the law be duly administred therein. The emphatical words of magna carta<sup>s</sup>, spoken in the person of the king, who in judgment of law (says sir Edward Coke<sup>t</sup>) is ever present and repeating them in all his courts, are these; "nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum vel justitiam: [to none will we sell, to none deny, to none delay either right or justice] and therefore every subject," continues the same learned author, "for injury done to him in bonis, in terris, vel persona [either in his goods, lands, or person], by any other subject, be he ecclesiastical or temporal without any exception, may take his remedy by the course of the law, and have justice and right for the injury done to him, freely without sale, fully without any denial, and speedily without delay.” It were endless to enumerate all the affirmative acts of parliament wherein justice is directed to be done according to the law of the land: and what that law is, every subject knows; or may know if he pleases: for it depends not upon the arbitrary will of any judge; but is permanent, fixed, and unchangeable, unless by authority of parliament. I shall however just mention a few negative statutes, whereby abuses, perversions, or delays of justice, especially by the prerogative, are 138 restrained. It is ordained by magna carta<sup>u</sup>, that no freeman shall be outlawed, that is, put out of the protection and benefit of the laws, but according to the law of the land. By 2 Edw. III. c. 8. and 11 Ric. II. c. 10. it is enacted, that no commands or letters shall be sent under the great seal, or the little seal, the signet, or privy seal, in disturbance of the law; or to disturb or delay common right: and, though such commandments should come, the judges shall not cease (30) to do right. And by 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is declared, that the pretended power of suspending, or dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority without consent of parliament, is illegal.

<sup>r</sup> (27) See the historical introduction to the great charter [i.e. Blackstone's own edition, published Oxford 1759], &c., sub anno 1297; wherein it is shewn that this statute de talliagio non concedendo [of not granting tall[i]age], supposed to have been made in 34 Edw. I, is in reality nothing more than a sort of translation into Latin of the confirmatio cartarum [confirmation of the charters], 25 Edw. I. c. 1, which was originally published in the Norman language.

<sup>s</sup> c. 29.

<sup>t</sup> 2 Inst. 55.

Not only the substantial part, or judicial decisions, of the law, but also the formal part, or method of proceeding, cannot be altered but by parliament: for if once those outworks were demolished, there would be an inlet to all manner of innovation in the body of the law itself. The king, it is true, may erect new courts of justice; but then they must proceed according to the old established forms of the common law. For which reason it is declared in the statute 16 Car. I. c. 10. upon the dissolution of the court of starchamber, that neither his majesty, nor his privy council, have any jurisdiction, power, or authority by English bill, petition, articles, libel (which were the course of proceeding in the starchamber, borrowed from the civil law) or by any other arbitrary way whatsoever, to examine, or draw into question, determine or dispose of the lands or goods of any subjects of this kingdom; but that the same ought to be tried and determined in the ordinary courts of justice, and by course of law.

4. If there should happen any uncommon injury, or infringement of the rights beforementioned, which the ordinary course of law is too defective to reach, there still remains a fourth subordinate right appertaining to every individual, namely, the right 139 of petitioning the king, or either house of parliament, for the redress of grievances. In Russia we are told<sup>w</sup> that the czar Peter established a law, that no subject might petition the throne, till he had first petitioned two different ministers of state. In case he obtained justice from neither, he might then present a third petition to the prince; but upon pain of death, if found to be in the wrong. The consequence of which was, that no one dared to offer such third petition; and grievances seldom falling under the notice of the sovereign, he had little opportunity to redress them. The restrictions, for some there are, which are laid upon petitioning in England, are of a nature extremely different; and while they promote the spirit of peace, they are no check upon that of liberty. Care only must be taken, lest, under the pretence of petitioning, the subject be guilty of any riot or tumult; as happened in the opening of the memorable parliament in 1640: and, to prevent this, it is provided by the statute 13 Car. II. st. 1. c. 5. that no petition to the king, or either house of parliament, for any alterations in church or state, shall be signed by above twenty persons, unless the matter thereof be approved by three justices of the peace or the major part of the grand jury, in the country; and in London by the lord mayor, aldermen, and common council; nor shall any petition be presented by (31) more than two persons at a time. But under these regulations, it is declared by the statute 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. that the subject hath a right to petition; and that all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal.

<sup>u</sup> c. 29.

<sup>w</sup> Montesq. Sp. L. 12. 26.

5. THE fifth and last auxiliary right of the subject, that I shall at present mention, is that of having arms for their defence, suitable to their condition and degree, and such as are allowed by law. Which is also declared by the same statute 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. (32) and is indeed a public allowance, under due restrictions, of the natural right of resistance and self-preservation, when the sanctions of society and laws are found insufficient to restrain the violence of oppression.

IN these several articles consist the rights, or, as they are frequently termed, the liberties of Englishmen: liberties more generally talked of, than thoroughly understood; and yet highly necessary to be perfectly known and considered by every man of rank or property, lest his ignorance of the points (33) whereon it is founded should hurry him into faction and licentiousness on the one hand, or a pusillanimous indifference and criminal submission on the other. And we have seen that these rights consist, primarily, in the free enjoyment of personal security, of personal liberty, and of private property. So long as these remain inviolate, the subject is perfectly free; for every species of compulsive tyranny and oppression must act in opposition to one or other of these rights, having no other object upon which it can possibly be employed. To preserve these from violation, it is necessary that (34) the constitution of parliaments be supported in its full vigor; and limits certainly known, be set to the royal prerogative. And, lastly, to vindicate these rights, when actually violated or attacked, the subjects of England are entitled, in the first place, to the regular administration and free course of justice in the courts of law; next to the right of petitioning the king and parliament for redress of grievances; and lastly to the right of having and using arms for self-preservation and defence. And all these rights and liberties it is our birthright to enjoy entire; unless where the laws of our country have laid them under necessary restraints. Restraints in themselves so gentle and moderate, as will appear upon farther enquiry, that no man of sense or probity would wish to see them slackened. For all of us have it in our choice to do every thing that a good man would desire to do; and are restrained from nothing, but what would be pernicious either to ourselves or our fellow citizens. So that this review of our situation may fully justify the observation of a learned French author, who indeed generally both thought and wrote in the spirit of genuine freedom<sup>x</sup>; and who hath not scrupled to profess, even in the very bosom of his native country, that the English is the only nation in the world, where political or civil liberty is the direct end of its constitution. Recommending therefore to the student in our laws a farther and more accurate search into this extensive and important title, I shall close my remarks upon it with the expiring wish of the famous father Paul<sup>9</sup> to his country, “ESTO PERPETUA [May you endure forever]!”

<sup>x</sup> Montesq. Sp. L. 11. 5.

<sup>9</sup> Fra Paolo Sarpi (1552–1623), theologian and principal counsellor to the Doge of Venice in 1606, when that city successfully resisted a papal interdict.

OF THE PARLIAMENT.

WE are next to treat of the rights and duties of persons, as they are members of society, and stand in various relations to each other. These relations are either public or private: and we will first consider those that are public.

THE most universal public relation, by which men are connected together, is that of government; namely, as governors and governed, or, in other words, as magistrates and people. Of magistrates also some are supreme, in whom the sovereign power of the state resides; others are subordinate, deriving all their authority from the supreme magistrate, accountable to him for their conduct, and acting in an inferior secondary sphere.

In all tyrannical governments the supreme magistracy, or the right both of making and of enforcing the laws, is vested in one and the same man, or one and the same body of men; and wherever these two powers are united together, there can be no public liberty. The magistrate may enact tyrannical laws, and execute them in a tyrannical manner, since he is possessed, in quality of dispenser of justice, with all the power which he as legislator thinks proper to give himself. But, where the legislative and executive authority are in distinct hands, the former will take care not to entrust the latter with so large a power, as may tend to the subversion of its own independence, and therewith of the liberty of the subject. With us therefore in 143 England this supreme power is divided into two branches; the one legislative, to wit, the parliament, consisting of king, lords, and commons; the other executive, consisting of the king alone. It will be the business of this chapter to consider the British parliament; in which the legislative power, and (of course) the supreme and absolute authority of the state, is vested by our constitution.

THE original or first institution of parliaments is one of those matters that lie so far hidden in the dark ages of antiquity, that the tracing of it out is a thing equally difficult and uncertain. The word, parliament, ⟨1⟩ itself (or colloquium, as some of our historians translate it) is comparatively of modern date, derived from the French, and signifying the place where they met and conferred together. It was first applied to general assemblies of the states under Louis VII in France, about the middle of the twelfth century<sup>a</sup>. But it is certain that, long before the introduction of the Norman language into England, all matters of importance were debated and settled in the great councils of the realm. A practice, which seems to have been universal among the northern nations, particularly the Germans<sup>b</sup>; and carried by them into all the countries of Europe, which they overran at the dissolution of the Roman empire. Relics of which constitution, under various modifications and changes, are still to be met with in the diets of Poland, Germany, and Sweden, and the assembly of the <3> estates in France; for what is there now called the parliament is only the supreme court of <4> justice, composed of judges and advocates; which neither is in practice, nor is supposed to be in theory, a general council of the realm.

<sup>a</sup> ⟨2⟩ Mod. Un. Hist. xxiii. 307.

<sup>b</sup> De minoribus rebus principes consultant, de majoribus omnes. [On lesser matters the princes consult the great men, on greater matters all men] Tac. de mor. Germ. c. 11.

WITH us in England this general council hath been held immemorially, under the several names of michel-synoth, or great council, michel-gemote or great meeting, and more frequently wittena-gemote or the meeting of wise men. It was also stiled in Latin, commune concilium regni, magnum concilium regis, curia magna, conventus magnatum vel procerum, assisa generalis [the common council of the kingdom, the great council of the king, the great court, the assembly of the magnates or princes, and the general meeting], and sometimes communitas regni Angliae [the community of the kingdom of England]<sup>c</sup>. We have instances of its meeting to order the affairs of the kingdom, to make new laws, and to amend the old, or, as Fleta<sup>d</sup> expresses it, “novis injuriis emersis nova constituere remedia [new wrongs having arisen, to appoint new remedies for them],” so early as the reign of Ina king of the west Saxons, Offa king of the Mercians, and Ethelbert king of Kent, in the several realms of the heptarchy.<sup>1</sup> And, after their union, the mirrour<sup>e</sup> informs us, that king Alfred ordained for a perpetual usage, that these councils should meet twice in the year, or oftener, if need be, to treat of the government of God’s people; how they should keep themselves from sin, should live in quiet, and should receive right. Our succeeding Saxon and Danish monarchs held frequent councils of this sort, as appears from their respective codes of laws; the titles whereof usually speak them to be enacted, either by the king with the advice of his wittena-gemote, or wise men, as, “haec sunt instituta, quae Edgarus rex consilio sapientum suorum instituit [these are the laws which King Edgar has instituted on the advice of the wise men of his realm];” or to be enacted by those sages with the advice of the king, as, “haec sunt judicia, quae sapientes consilio regis Ethelstani instituerunt [these are the decrees which the wise men, with the advice of King Aethelstan, have instituted];” or lastly, to be enacted by them both together, as, “hae[c] sunt institutiones, quas rex Edmundus et episcopi sui cum sapientibus suis instituerunt [these are the institutions which King Edmund and his bishops and his wise men have decreed].”

144

THERE is also no doubt but these <5> great councils were held regularly under the first princes of the Norman line. Glanvil, who wrote in the reign of Henry the second, speaking of the particular amount of an amercement in the sheriff’s court, says, it had never yet been ascertained by the general assise, or assembly, but was left to the custom of particular counties<sup>f</sup>. Here the general assise is spoken of as a meeting well known, and its statutes or decisions are put in a manifest contradistinction to

<sup>c</sup> Glanvil. l. 13. c. 32. l. 9. c. 10.—Pref. 9 Rep.—2 Inst. 526.

<sup>d</sup> l. 2. c. 2.

<sup>e</sup> c. 1. §. 3.

<sup>f</sup> Quanta esse debeat per nullam assisam generalem determinatum est, sed pro consuetudine singulorum comitatuum debetur. l. 9. c. 10.

<sup>1</sup> Heptarchy, the traditional term for the seven kingdoms of Anglo-Saxon England between the sixth and ninth centuries.

145 customs, or the common law. And in Edward the third's time an act of parliament, made in the reign of William the conqueror, was pleaded in the case of the abbey of St Edmund's-bury, and judicially allowed by the court<sup>8</sup>.

HENCE it indisputably appears, that parliaments, or general councils, are coeval with the kingdom itself. How those parliaments were constituted and composed, is another question, which has been matter of great dispute among our <6> learned antiquarians; and, particularly, whether the commons were summoned at all; or, if summoned, at what period they began to form a distinct assembly. But it is not my intention here to enter into controversies of this sort. I hold it sufficient that it is generally agreed, that in the main the constitution of parliament, as it now stands, was marked out so long ago as the seventeenth year of king John, A.D. 1215, in the great charter granted by that prince; wherein he promises to summon all arch-bishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons, personally; and all other tenants in chief under the crown, by the sheriff and bailiffs; to meet at a certain place, with forty days notice, to assess aids and scutages<sup>2</sup> when necessary. And this constitution has subsisted in fact at least from the year 1266, 49 Hen. III: there being still extant writs of that date, to summon knights, citizens, and burgesses to parliament. I proceed therefore to enquire wherein consists this constitution of parliament, as it now stands, and has stood for <7> the space of five hundred years. And in the prosecution of this enquiry, I shall consider, first, the manner and time of its assembling; secondly, its constituent parts: thirdly, the laws and customs relating to parliament, considered as one aggregate body: fourthly and fifthly, the laws and customs relating to each house, separately and distinctly taken: sixthly, the methods of proceeding, and of making statutes, in both houses: and lastly, the manner of the parliament's adjournment, prorogation, and dissolution.

146 I. As to the manner and time of assembling. The parliament is regularly to be summoned by the king's writ or letter, issued out of chancery by advice of the privy council, at least forty days before it begins to sit. It is a branch of the royal prerogative, that no parliament can be convened by its own authority, or by the authority of any, except the king alone. And this prerogative is founded upon very good reason. For, supposing it had a right to meet spontaneously, without being called together, it is impossible to conceive that all the members, and each of the houses, would agree unanimously upon the proper time and place of meeting; and if half of the members met, and half absented themselves, who shall determine which is really the legislative body, the part assembled, or that which stays away? It is therefore necessary that the parliament should be called together at a determinate time and place; and highly becoming its dignity and independence, that it should be called together by none but one of its own constituent parts; and, of the three constituent parts, this office can only appertain to the king; as he is a single person, whose will may be uniform and steady; the first person in the nation, being superior to both houses in dignity; and the only branch of the legislature that has a separate existence, and is capable of performing any act at a time when no parliament is in being<sup>h</sup>. Nor is it an exception to this rule that, by some modern statutes, on the demise of a king or queen, if there be then no parliament in being, the last parliament revives, and is to sit again for six months, unless dissolved by the successor: for this revived parliament must have been originally summoned by the crown.

<sup>8</sup> Year book, 21 Edw. III. 60.

<sup>2</sup> Aids and scutages: feudal dues and taxes. For crown revenue generally, see I. ch. 8.

It is true, that by a statute, 16 Car. I. c. 1. it was enacted, that if the king neglected to call a parliament for three years, the peers might assemble and issue out writs for the choosing one; and, in case of neglect of the peers, the constituents might meet and elect one themselves. But this, if ever put in practice, would have been liable to all the inconveniences I have just now stated; and the act itself was esteemed so highly detrimental and injurious to the royal prerogative, that it was repealed by statute 16 Car. II. c. 1. From thence therefore no precedent can be drawn. 147

It is also true, that the convention-parliament, which restored king Charles the second, met above a month before his return; the lords by their own authority, and the commons in pursuance of writs issued in the name of the keepers of the liberty of England by authority of parliament: and that the said parliament sat till the twenty ninth of December, full seven months after the restoration; and enacted many laws, several of which are still in force. But this was for the necessity of the thing, which supersedes all law; for if they had not so met, it was morally impossible that the kingdom should have been settled in peace. And the first thing done after the king's return, was to pass an act declaring this to be a good parliament, notwithstanding the defect of the king's writs<sup>i</sup>. So that, as the royal prerogative was chiefly wounded by their so meeting, and as the king himself, who alone had a right to object, consented to wave the objection, this cannot be drawn into an example in prejudice of the rights of the crown. Besides we should also remember, that it was at that time a great doubt among the lawyers<sup>k</sup>, whether even this healing act made it a good parliament; and held by very many in the negative: though it seems to have been too nice a <8> scruple.

It is likewise true, that at the time of the revolution, A.D. 1688, the lords and commons by their own authority, and upon the summons of the prince of Orange, (afterwards king William) met in a convention and therein disposed of the crown and kingdom. But it must be remembered, that this assembling was upon a like principle of necessity as at the restoration; that is, <9> upon an apprehension that king James the second had abdicated the government, and that the throne was thereby vacant: which apprehension of theirs was confirmed by their concurrent resolution, when they actually came together. And in such a case as the palpable vacancy of a throne, it follows ex necessitate rei [from the urgency of the matter], that the form of the royal writs must be laid aside, otherwise no parliament can ever meet again. For, 148

<sup>h</sup> By motives somewhat similar to these the republic of Venice was actuated, when towards the end of the seventh century it abolished the tribunes of the people, who were annually chosen by the several districts of the Venetian territory, and constituted a doge in their stead; in whom the executive power of the state at present resides. For which their historians have assigned these, as the principal reasons. 1. The propriety of having the executive power a part of the legislative, or senate; to which the former annual magistrates were not admitted. 2. The necessity of having a single person to convoke the great council when separated. Mod. Un. Hist. xxvii. 15.

<sup>i</sup> Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 1.

<sup>k</sup> 1 Sid. 1. [See Stat. 13 Car. II. c. 7.]

let us put another possible case, and suppose, for the sake of argument, that the whole royal line should at any time fail, and become extinct, which would indisputably vacate the throne: in this situation it seems reasonable to presume, that the body of the nation, consisting of lords and commons, would have a right to meet and settle the government; otherwise there must be no government at all. And upon this and no other principle did the convention in 1688 assemble. The vacancy of the throne was precedent to their meeting without any royal summons, not a consequence of it. They did not assemble without writ, and then make the throne vacant; but the throne being previously vacant by the king's abdication, they assembled without writ, as they must do if they assembled at all. Had the throne been full, their meeting would not have been regular; but, as it was really empty, such meeting became absolutely necessary. And accordingly it is declared by statute 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 1. that this convention was really the two houses of parliament, notwithstanding the want of writs or other defects of form. So that, notwithstanding these two capital exceptions, which were justifiable only on a principle of necessity, (and each of which, by the way, induced a revolution in the government) the rule laid down is in general certain, that the king, only, can convoke a parliament.

149 AND this by the antient statutes of the realm<sup>1</sup>, he is bound to do every year, or oftener, if need be. Not that he is, or ever was, obliged by these statutes to call a new parliament every year; but only to permit a parliament to sit annually for the redress of grievances, and dispatch of business, if need be. These last words are so loose and vague, that such of our monarchs as were enclined to govern without parliaments, neglected the convoking them, sometimes for a very considerable period, under pretence that there was no need of them. But, to remedy this, by the statute 16 Car. II. c. 1. it is enacted, that the sitting and holding of parliaments shall not be intermitted above three years at the most. And by the statute 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is declared to be one of the rights of the people, that for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening, and preserving the laws, parliaments ought to be held frequently. And this indefinite frequency is again reduced to a certainty by statute 6 W. & M. c. 2. which enacts, as the statute of Charles the second had done before, that a new parliament shall be called within three years<sup>m</sup> after the determination of the former.

II. THE constituent parts of a parliament are the next objects of our enquiry. And these are, the king's majesty, sitting there in his royal political capacity, and the three estates of the realm; the lords spiritual, the lords temporal, (who sit, together with the king, in one house) and the commons, who sit by themselves in another<sup>n</sup>. And the king and these three estates, together, form the great corporation or body politic of the kingdom, of which the king is said to be caput, principium, et finis [the head, beginning, and end]. For upon their coming together the king meets them, either in person or by representation; without which there can be no beginning of a parliament<sup>o</sup>; and he also has alone the power of dissolving them.

<sup>1</sup> 4 Edw. III. c. 14. and 36 Edw. III. c. 10.

<sup>m</sup> This is the same period, that is allowed in Sweden for intermitting their general diets, or parliamentary assemblies. Mod. Un. Hist. xxxiii. 15.

<sup>n</sup> 4 Inst. 1.

It is highly necessary for preserving the balance of the constitution, that the executive power should be a branch, though not the whole, of the legislature. The total union of them, we have seen, would be productive of tyranny; the total disjunction of them for the present, would in the end produce the same effects, by causing that union, against which it seems to provide. The legislature would soon become tyrannical, by making continual encroachments, and gradually assuming to itself the rights of the executive power. Thus the long parliament of Charles the first, while it acted in a constitutional manner, with the royal concurrence, redressed many heavy grievances and established many salutary laws. But when the two houses assumed the power of legislation, in exclusion of the royal authority, they soon after assumed likewise the reins of administration; and, in consequence of these united powers, overturned both church and state, and established a worse oppression than any they pretended to remedy. To hinder therefore any such encroachments, the king is himself a part of the parliament; and, as this is the reason of his being so, very properly therefore the share of legislation, which the constitution has placed in the crown, consists in the power of rejecting, rather than resolving; this being sufficient to answer the end proposed. For we may apply to <11> the royal negative, in this instance, what Cicero observes of the negative of the Roman tribunes,<sup>3</sup> that the crown has not any power of doing wrong, but merely of preventing wrong from being done<sup>p</sup>. The crown cannot begin of itself any alterations in the present established law; but it may approve or disapprove of the alterations suggested and consented to by the two houses. The legislative therefore cannot abridge the executive power of any rights which it now has by law, without its own consent; since the law must perpetually stand as it now does, unless all the powers will agree to alter it. And herein indeed consists the true excellence of the English government, that all the parts of it form a mutual check upon each other. In the legislature, the people are a check upon the nobility, and the nobility a check upon the people; by the mutual privilege of rejecting what the other has resolved: while the king is a check upon both, which preserves the executive power from encroachments. And this very executive power is again checked, and kept within due bounds by the two houses, through the privilege they have of enquiring into, impeaching, and punishing the conduct (not indeed of the <12> king, which would destroy his constitutional independence; but, which is more beneficial to the public) of his evil and pernicious counsellors. Thus every branch of our civil polity supports and is supported, regulates and is regulated, by the rest; for the two houses naturally drawing in two directions of opposite interest, and the prerogative in another still different from them both, they mutually keep each other from exceeding their proper limits; while the whole is prevented from separation, and artificially connected together by the mixed nature of the crown, which is a part of the legislative, and the sole executive magistrate. Like three distinct powers in mechanics, they jointly impel the machine of government in a direction different from what either, <13> acting by themselves, would have done; but at the same time in a direction partaking of each, and formed out of all; a direction which constitutes the true line of the liberty and happiness of the community.

<sup>o</sup> <10> 4 Inst. 6.

<sup>p</sup> Sulla—tribunis plebis sua lege injuriae faciendae potestatem ademit, auxilii ferendi reliquit. [Sulla, by his law, deprived the tribunes of the people of the power of doing injury, but left them that of protection.] de LL. 3. 9.

<sup>3</sup> Tribunes, elected to protect the common people, could veto the senate's decrees.

LET us now consider these constituent parts of the sovereign power, or parliament, each in a separate view. The king's majesty will be the subject of the next, and many subsequent chapters, to which we must at present refer.

THE next in order are the spiritual lords. These consist of two arch-bishops, and twenty four bishops; and, at the dissolution of monasteries by Henry VIII, consisted likewise of twenty six mitred abbots, and two priors<sup>q</sup>: a very considerable body, and in those times equal in number to the temporal nobility<sup>r</sup>. All these hold, or are supposed to hold, certain antient baronies under the king: for William the conqueror thought proper to change the spiritual tenure, of frankalmoign or free alms, under which the bishops held their lands during the Saxon government, into the feudal or Norman tenure by barony; which subjected their estates to all civil charges and assessments, from which they were before exempt<sup>s</sup>: and, in right of succession to those <14> baronies, the bishops obtained their seat in the house of lords<sup>t</sup>. But though these lords spiritual are in the eye of the law a distinct estate from the lords temporal, and are so distinguished <15> in all our acts of parliament, yet in practice they are usually blended together under the one name of the lords; they intermix in their votes; and the majority of <16> such intermixture binds both <17> estates. For if a bill should pass their house, <18> there is no doubt of its being effectual, though every lord spiritual should vote against it; of which Selden<sup>u</sup>, and sir Edward Coke<sup>w</sup>, give many instances: as, on the other hand, I presume it would be equally good, if the lords temporal present were inferior to the bishops in number, and every one of those temporal lords gave his vote to reject the bill; <21> though this sir Edward Coke seems to doubt of<sup>x</sup>.

THE lords temporal consist of all the peers of the realm (the bishops not being in strictness held to be such, but merely lords of parliament<sup>y</sup>) by whatever title of nobility distinguished; dukes, marquisses, earls, viscounts, or barons; of which dignities we shall speak more hereafter. Some of these sit by descent, as do all antient peers; some by creation, as do all new-made ones; others, since the union with Scotland, by election, which is the case of the sixteen peers, who represent the body of the Scots nobility. Their number is indefinite, and may be encreased at will by the power of the crown: and once,<sup>4</sup> in the reign of queen Anne, there was an instance of

<sup>q</sup> Seld. tit. hon. 2. 5. 27.

<sup>r</sup> Co. Litt. 97.

<sup>s</sup> Gilb. Hist. Exch. 55. Spelm. W. I. 291.

<sup>t</sup> Glanv. 7. 1. Co. Litt. 97. Seld. tit. hon. 2. 5. 19.

<sup>u</sup> <19> Baronage. p. 1. c. 6.

<sup>w</sup> <20> 2 Inst. 585, 6, 7.

<sup>x</sup> 4 Inst. 25.

<sup>y</sup> Staunford. P. C. 153.

<sup>4</sup> In 1711 Queen Anne agreed to create twelve Tory peers to ensure the passage of peace preliminaries through the Lords.

creating no less than twelve together; in contemplation of which, in the reign of king George the first, a bill<sup>5</sup> passed the house of lords, and was countenanced by the then ministry, for limiting the number of the peerage. This was thought by some to promise a great acquisition to the constitution, by restraining the prerogative from gaining the ascendant in that august assembly, by pouring in at pleasure an unlimited number of new created lords. But the bill was ill-relished and miscarried in the house of commons, whose leading members were then desirous to keep the avenues to the other house as open and easy as possible. 153

THE distinction of rank and honours is necessary in every well-governed state; in order to reward such as are eminent for their services to the public, in a manner the most desirable to individuals, and yet without burthen to the community; exciting thereby an ambitious yet laudable ardor, and generous emulation in others. And emulation, or virtuous ambition, is a spring of action which, however dangerous or invidious in a mere republic or under a despotic sway, will certainly be attended with good effects under a free monarchy; where, without destroying its existence, its excesses may be continually restrained by that superior power, from which all honour is derived. Such a spirit, when nationally diffused, gives life and vigour to the community; it sets all the wheels of government in motion, which under a wise regulator, may be directed to any beneficial purpose; and thereby every individual may be made subservient to the public good, while he principally means to promote his own particular views. A body of nobility is also more peculiarly necessary in our mixed and compounded constitution, in order to support the rights of both the crown and the people, by forming a barrier to withstand the encroachments of both. It creates and preserves that gradual scale of dignity, which proceeds from the peasant to the prince; rising like a pyramid from a broad foundation, and diminishing to a point as it rises. It is this ascending and contracting proportion that adds stability to any government; for when the departure is sudden from one extreme to another, we may pronounce that state to be precarious. The nobility therefore are the pillars, which are reared from among the people, more immediately to support the throne; and if that falls, they must also be buried under its ruins. Accordingly, when in the last century the commons had determined to extirpate monarchy, they also voted the house of lords to be useless and dangerous. And since titles of nobility are thus expedient in the state, it is also expedient that their owners should form an independent and separate branch of the legislature. If they were confounded with the mass of the people, and like them had only a vote in electing representatives, their privileges would soon be borne down and overwhelmed by the popular torrent, which would effectually level all distinctions. It is therefore highly necessary that the body of nobles should have a distinct assembly, distinct deliberations, and distinct powers from the commons. 154

THE commons consist of all such <22> men of any property in the kingdom as have not seats in the house of lords; every one of which has a voice in parliament, either personally, or by his representatives. In a free state, every man, who is supposed a free agent, ought to be, in some measure, his own governor; and therefore a branch at least of the legislative power should reside in the whole body of the people. And this power, when the territories of the state are small and its citizens easily known, should be exercised by the people in their aggregate or collective capacity, as was wisely ordained in the petty republics of Greece, and the first rudiments of the Roman state. But this will be highly inconvenient, when the public territory is extended to any considerable degree, and the number of citizens is encreased. Thus when, after the social war,<sup>6</sup> all the burghers of Italy were admitted free citizens of Rome, and each had a vote in the public assemblies, it became impossible to distinguish the spurious from the real voter, and from that time all elections and popular deliberations grew tumultuous and disorderly; which paved the way for Marius and Sylla, Pompey and Caesar, to trample on the liberties of their country, and at last to dissolve the commonwealth. In so large a state as ours it is therefore very wisely contrived, that the people should do that by their representatives, which it is impracticable to perform in person: representatives, chosen by a number of minute and separate districts, wherein all the voters are, or easily may be, distinguished.

<sup>5</sup> The Peerage Bill of 1719 was an attempt to secure the Whig government of Lords Sunderland and Stanhope against its enemies by limiting the power of the opposition associated with the Prince of Wales in the event of his accession to the throne.

155 The counties are therefore represented by knights, elected by the proprietors of lands; the cities and boroughs are represented by citizens and burgesses, chosen by the mercantile part or supposed trading interest of the nation; much in the same manner as the burghers in the diet of Sweden are chosen by the corporate towns, Stockholm sending four, as London does with us, other cities two, and some only one<sup>z</sup>. The number of English representatives is 513, and of Scots 45; in all 558. And every member, though chosen by one particular district, when elected and returned serves for the whole realm. For the end of his coming thither is not particular, but general; not barely to advantage his constituents, but the common wealth; to advise his majesty (as appears from the writ of summons<sup>a</sup>) “de communi consilio super negotiis quibusdam arduis et urgentibus, regem, statum et defensionem regni Angliae et ecclesiae Anglicanae concernentibus.”<sup>7</sup> And therefore he is not bound, like a deputy in the united provinces, to consult with, or take the advice, of his constituents upon any particular point, unless he himself thinks it proper or prudent so to do.

THESE are the constituent parts of a parliament, the king, the lords spiritual and temporal, and the commons. Parts, of which each is so necessary, that the consent of all three is required to make any new law that shall bind the subject. Whatever is enacted for law by one, or by two only, of the three is no statute; and to it no regard is due, unless in matters relating to their own privileges. For though, in the times of madness and anarchy, the commons once passed a vote<sup>b</sup>, “that whatever is enacted or

<sup>z</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xxxiii. 18.

<sup>a</sup> 4 Inst. 14.

<sup>b</sup> 4 Jan. 1648.

<sup>6</sup> The Social War (91–87 BC): an uprising by Rome’s Italian allies, or socii, placated by the extension of Roman citizenship.

<sup>7</sup> ‘by the common council upon certain difficult and urgent affairs relating to the king, the state, and defence of the kingdom of England and of the English church’.

declared for law by the commons in parliament assembled hath the force of law; and all the people of this nation are concluded thereby, although the consent and concurrence of the king or house of peers be not had thereto;" yet, when the constitution was restored in all its forms, it was particularly enacted by statute 13 Car. II. c. 1. that if any person shall maliciously or advisedly affirm, that both or either of the houses of parliament have any legislative authority without the king, such person shall incur all the penalties of a praemunire.

III. WE are next to examine the laws and customs relating to parliament, thus united together and considered as one aggregate body. 156

THE power and jurisdiction of parliament, says sir Edward Coke<sup>c</sup>, is so transcendent and absolute, that it cannot be confined, either for causes or persons, within any bounds. And of this high court he adds, it may be truly said "si antiquitatem spectes, est vetustissima; si dignitatem, est honoratissima; si (23) jurisdictionem, est capacissima [if you consider its antiquity, it is most ancient; if its dignity, it is most honourable; if its jurisdiction, it is most extensive]." It hath sovereign and uncontrollable authority in making, confirming, enlarging, restraining, abrogating, repealing, reviving, and expounding of laws, concerning matters of all possible denominations, ecclesiastical, or temporal, civil, military, maritime, or criminal: this being the place where that absolute despotic power, which must in all governments reside somewhere, is entrusted by the constitution of these kingdoms. All mischiefs and grievances, operations and remedies, that transcend the ordinary course of the laws, are within the reach of this extraordinary tribunal. It can regulate or new model the succession to the crown; as was done in the reign of Henry VIII and William III. It can alter the established religion of the land; as was done in a variety of instances, in the reigns of king Henry VIII and his three children. It can change and create afresh even the constitution of the kingdom and of parliaments themselves; as was done by the act of union, and the several statutes for triennial and septennial elections. It can, in short, do every thing that is not naturally impossible; and therefore some have not scrupled to call its power, by a figure rather too bold, the omnipotence of parliament. True it is, that (24) what they do, no authority upon earth can undo. So that it is a matter most essential to the liberties of this kingdom, that such members be delegated to this important trust, as are most eminent for their probity, their fortitude, and their knowlege; for it was a known apothegm of the great lord treasurer Burleigh, "that England could never be ruined but by a parliament:" and, as sir Matthew Hale observes<sup>d</sup>, this being the highest and greatest court, over which none other can have jurisdiction in the kingdom, if by any means a misgovernment should any way fall upon it, the subjects of this kingdom are left without all manner of remedy. To the same purpose the president Montesquieu, though I trust too hastily, presages<sup>e</sup>; that as Rome, Sparta, and Carthage have lost their liberty and perished, so the constitution of England will in time lose its liberty, will perish: it will perish, whenever the legislative power shall become more corrupt than the executive. 157

<sup>c</sup> 4 Inst. 36

<sup>d</sup> of parliaments, 49.

<sup>e</sup> Sp. L. 11. 6.

It must be owned that Mr Locke<sup>f</sup>, and other theoretical writers, have held, that “there remains still inherent in the people a supreme power to remove or alter the legislative, when they find the legislative act contrary to the trust reposed in them: for when such trust is abused, it is thereby forfeited, and devolves to those who gave it.”<sup>8</sup> But however just this conclusion may be in theory, ⟨25⟩ we cannot adopt it, nor argue from it, under any dispensation of government at present actually existing. For this devolution of power, to the people at large, includes in it a dissolution of the whole form of government established by that people, reduces all the members to their original state of equality, and by annihilating the sovereign power repeals all positive laws whatsoever before enacted. No human laws will therefore suppose a case, which at once must destroy all law, and compel men to build afresh upon a new foundation; nor will they make provision for so desperate an event, as must render all legal provisions ⟨26⟩ ineffectual. So long therefore as the English constitution lasts, we may venture to affirm, that the power of parliament is absolute and without control.

158 IN order to prevent the mischiefs that might arise, by placing this extensive authority in hands that are either incapable, or else improper, to manage it, it is ⟨27⟩ provided that no one shall sit or vote in either house of parliament, unless he be twenty one years of age. ⟨28⟩ This is expressly declared by statute 7 & 8 W. III. c. 25. with regard to the house of commons; though a minor was incapacitated before from sitting in either house, by the law and custom of parliament<sup>g</sup>. ⟨30⟩ To prevent crude innovations in religion and government, it is enacted by statute 30 Car. II. st. 2. and 1 Geo. I. c. 13. that no member shall vote or sit in either house, till he hath in the presence of the house taken the oaths of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration, and subscribed and repeated the declaration against transubstantiation, and invocation of saints, and the sacrifice of the ⟨31⟩ mass. To prevent dangers that may arise to the kingdom from foreign attachments, connexions, or dependencies, it is enacted by the 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2. that no alien, born out of the dominions of the crown of Great Britain, even though he be naturalized, shall be capable of being a member of either house of ⟨32⟩ parliament.

FARTHER: as every court of justice hath laws and customs for its direction, some the civil and canon, some the common law, others their own peculiar laws and customs, so the high court of parliament hath also its own peculiar law, called the lex et consuetudo parliamenti [the law and custom of parliament]; a law which sir Edward Coke<sup>h</sup> observes, is “ab omnibus quaerenda, a multis ignorata, a paucis cognita [to be sought by all, unknown to many, known by few].” It will not therefore be expected that we should enter into the examination of this law, with any degree of minuteness; since, as the same learned author assures us<sup>i</sup>, it is much better to be learned out of the rolls of parliament, and other records, and by precedents, and continual experience, <sup>f</sup> on Gov. p. 2. §. 149, 227.

<sup>g</sup> ⟨29⟩ 4 Inst. 47.

<sup>h</sup> 1 Inst. 11.

<sup>i</sup> 4 Inst. 50.

<sup>8</sup> Blackstone was concerned to constrain radical interpretation of the revolutionary crisis in 1688 (see the editorial Introduction to this volume, pp. xxix–xxx).

than can be expressed by any one man. It will be sufficient to observe, that the whole of the law and custom of parliament has its original from this one maxim; “that whatever matter arises concerning either house of parliament, ought to be examined, discussed, and adjudged in that house to which it relates, <33> and not elsewhere.” 159 Hence, for instance, the lords will not suffer the commons to interfere in <34> settling a claim of peerage; the commons will not allow the lords to judge of the election of a burgess; nor will either house permit <35> the courts of law to examine the merits of either case. But the maxims upon which they proceed, <36> together with their method of proceeding, rest entirely in the breast of the parliament itself; and are not defined and ascertained by any particular stated laws.

<37> THE privileges of parliament are likewise very large and indefinite; which has occasioned an observation, that the principal privilege of parliament consisted in this, that its privileges were not certainly known to any but the parliament itself. And therefore when in 31 Hen. VI the house of lords propounded a question to the <38> judges touching the privilege of parliament, the chief justice,<sup>9</sup> in the name of his brethren, declared, “that they ought not to make answer to that question; for it hath not been used aforetime that the justices should in any wise determine the privileges of the high court of parliament; for it is so high and mighty in his nature, that it may make law; and that which is law, it may make no law; and the determination and knowlege of that privilege belongs to the lords of parliament, and not to the justices<sup>k</sup>.” Privilege of parliament was principally established, in order to protect its members not only from being molested by their fellow-subjects, but also more especially from being oppressed by the power of the crown. If therefore all the privileges of parliament were once to be set down and ascertained, and no privilege to be allowed but what was so defined and determined, it were easy for the executive power to devise some new case, not within the line of privilege, and under pretence thereof to harass any refractory member and violate the freedom of parliament. The dignity and independence of the two houses are therefore in great measure preserved by keeping their privileges indefinite. Some however of the more notorious privileges of the members of either house are, privilege of speech, of person, of their domestics, and of their lands and goods. As to the first, privilege of speech, it is declared by the statute 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. as one of the liberties of the people, “that the freedom of speech, and debates, and proceedings in parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament.” And this freedom of speech is particularly demanded of the king in person, by the speaker of the house of commons, at the opening of every new parliament. So likewise are the other privileges, of person, servants, lands and goods; which are immunities as antient as Edward the confessor, in whose laws<sup>l</sup> we find this precept. “Ad synodos venientibus, sive summoniti sint, sive per se quid agendum habuerint, sit summa pax [Let there be the highest peace to those coming to the synods; whether summoned or coming on their own business].” and so too, in the old 160

<sup>k</sup> Seld. Baronage. part. 1. c. 4.

<sup>l</sup> [LL. Edw.] cap. 3.

<sup>9</sup> Sir John Fortescue, chief justice of King's Bench.

Gothic<sup>10</sup> constitutions, “extenditur haec pax et securitas ad quatuordecim dies, convocato regni senatu [this peace and security is extended to fourteen days from the assembling of the senate of the kingdom]<sup>m</sup>.” (39) This includes not only privilege from illegal violence, but also from legal arrests, and seizures by process from the courts of law. (40) To assault by violence a member of either house, or his menial servants, is a high contempt of parliament, and there punished with the utmost severity. It has likewise peculiar penalties annexed to it in the courts of law, by the statutes 5 Hen. IV. c. 6. and 11 Hen. VI. c. 11. Neither can any member of either house be arrested and taken into (41) custody, nor served with any process of the courts of law; nor can his menial servants be arrested; nor can any entry be made on his lands; nor can his goods be distrained or seised; without a breach of the privilege of parliament. (42) These privileges however, which derogate from the common law, being only indulged to prevent the member’s being diverted from the public business, endure no longer than the session of parliament, save only as to the freedom of his person: which in a peer is for ever sacred and inviolable; and in a commoner for forty days after every prorogation, and forty days before the next appointed meeting<sup>n</sup>; which is now in effect as long as the parliament subsists, it seldom being prorogued for more than fourscore days at a (43) time. But this privilege of person does not hold in crimes of such public malignity as treason, felony, or breach of the peace<sup>o</sup>; or rather perhaps in such crimes for which surety of the peace may be required. As to all other (44) privileges which obstruct the ordinary course of justice, they cease by the statutes 12 W. III. c. 3. and 11 Geo. II. c. 24. immediately after the dissolution or prorogation of the parliament, or adjournment of the houses for above a fortnight; and during these recesses a peer, or member of the house of commons, may be sued like an ordinary subject, and in consequence of such suits may be dispossessed of his lands and goods. In these cases the king has also his prerogative: he may sue for his debts, though not arrest the person of a member, during the sitting of parliament; and by statute 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18. a member may be sued during the sitting of parliament for any misdemeanour or breach of trust in a public office. Likewise, for the benefit of commerce, it is provided by statute 4 Geo. III. c. 33, that any trader, having privilege of parliament, may be served with legal process for any just debt, (to the amount of 100*l.*) and unless he makes satisfaction within two months, it shall be deemed an act of bankruptcy; and that commissions of bankrupt may be issued against such privileged traders, in like manner as against (45) any other.

THESE are the general heads of the laws and customs relating to parliament, considered as one aggregate body. We will next proceed to

IV. THE laws and customs relating to the house of lords in particular. These, if we exclude their judicial capacity, which will be more properly treated of in the third and fourth books of these commentaries, will take up but little of our time.

<sup>m</sup> Stiernh. de jure Goth. l. 3. c. 3.

<sup>n</sup> [Earl of Athol v Earl of Derby] 2 Lev. 72.

<sup>o</sup> 4 Inst. 25.

<sup>10</sup> Blackstone uses ‘Gothic’ as a synonym for ‘Germanic’, including Anglo-Saxon. For the broader context of medieval precedents in British political thought after 1688 see R. J. Smith, The Gothic Bequest: Medieval Institutions in British Thought, 1688–1863 (Cambridge, 1987).

ONE very antient privilege is that declared by the charter of the forest<sup>p</sup>, confirmed in parliament 9 Hen. III;<sup>11</sup> viz. that every lord spiritual or temporal summoned to parliament, and passing through the king's forests, may, both in going and returning, kill one or two of the king's deer without warrant; in view of the forester, if he be present; or on blowing a horn if he be absent, that he may not seem to take the king's venison by stealth. 162

IN the next place they have a right to be attended, and constantly are, by the judges of the court of king's bench and commonpleas, and such of the barons of the exchequer as are of the degree of the coif, or have been made serjeants at law; as <46> likewise by the masters of the court of chancery; for their advice in point of law, and for the greater dignity of their proceedings. <47> The secretaries of state, the attorney and solicitor general, and the rest of the king's learned counsel being serjeants, were also used to attend the house of peers, and have to this day their regular writs of summons issued out at the beginning of every parliament<sup>q</sup>: but, as many of them have of late years been members of the house of <48> commons, their <49> attendance is fallen into disuse.

ANOTHER privilege is, that every peer, by licence obtained from the king, may make another lord of parliament his proxy, to vote for him in his absence<sup>r</sup>. A privilege which a member of the other house can by no means have, as he is himself but a proxy for a multitude of other people<sup>s</sup>.

EACH peer has also a right, by leave of the house, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the journals of the house, with the reasons for such dissent; which is usually stiled his protest.

ALL bills likewise, that may in their consequences any way affect the rights of the peerage, are by the custom of parliament to have their first rise and beginning in the house of peers, and to suffer no changes or amendments in the house of commons.

THERE is also one statute peculiarly relative to the house of lords; 6 Ann. c. 23 which regulates the election of the sixteen representative peers of North Britain,<sup>12</sup> in consequence of the twenty second and twenty third articles of the union: and for that purpose prescribes the oaths, &c, to be taken by the electors; directs the mode of balloting; prohibits the peers electing from being attended in an unusual manner; and expressly provides, that no other matter shall be treated of in that assembly, save only the election, on pain of incurring a praemunire. 163

V. THE peculiar laws and customs of the house of commons relate principally to the raising of taxes, and the elections of members to serve in parliament.

FIRST, with regard to taxes: it is the antient indisputable privilege and right of the house of commons, that all grants of subsidies or parliamentary aids do begin in

<sup>p</sup> cap. 11.

<sup>q</sup> Stat. 31 Hen. VIII. c. 10. Smith's commonw. b. 2. c. 3. [Egerton's case] Moor. 551. 4 Inst. 4. Hale of parl. 140.

<sup>r</sup> Seld. baronage. p. 1. c. 1.

<sup>s</sup> 4 Inst. 12.

<sup>11</sup> Charter of the Forest (reissue), 1225.

<sup>12</sup> From the Union of 1707 until the Peerage Act of 1963, the peers of Scotland—or 'North Britain'—elected sixteen of their number to represent their interests in the House of Lords.

their house, and are first bestowed by them<sup>t</sup>; although their grants are not effectual to all intents and purposes, until they have the assent of the other two branches of the legislature. The general reason, given for this exclusive privilege of the house of commons, is, that the supplies are raised upon the body of the people, and therefore it is proper that they alone should have the right of taxing themselves. This reason would be unanswerable, if the commons taxed none but themselves: but it is notorious, that a very large share of property is in the possession of the house of lords; that this property is equally taxable, and taxed, as the property of the commons; and therefore the commons not being the sole persons taxed, this cannot be the reason of their having the sole right of raising and modelling the supply. The true reason, arising from the spirit of our constitution, seems to be this. The lords being a permanent hereditary body, created at pleasure by the king, are supposed more liable to be influenced by the crown, and when once influenced to continue so, than the commons, who are a temporary elective body, freely nominated by the people. It would therefore be extremely dangerous, (50) to give them any power of framing new taxes for the subject: it is sufficient, that they have a power of rejecting, if they think the commons too lavish or improvident in their grants. But so reasonably jealous are the commons of this valuable privilege, that herein they will not suffer the other house to exert any power but that of rejecting; they will not permit the least alteration or amendment to be made by the lords to the mode of taxing the people by a money bill; under which appellation are included all bills, by which money is directed to be raised upon the subject, for any purpose or in any shape whatsoever; either for the exigencies of government, and collected from the kingdom in general, as the land tax; or for private benefit, and collected in any particular district; as by turnpikes, parish rates, and the like. Yet sir Matthew Hale<sup>u</sup> mentions one case, founded on the practice of parliament in the reign of Henry VI<sup>w</sup>, wherein he thinks the lords may alter a money bill; and that is, if the commons grant a tax, as that of tonnage and poundage, for four years; and the lords alter it to a less time, as for two years; here, he says, the bill need not be sent back to the commons for their concurrence, but may receive the royal assent without farther ceremony; for the alteration of the lords is consistent with the grant of the commons. But such an experiment will hardly be repeated by the lords, under the present improved idea of the privilege of the house of commons: and, in any case where a money bill is remanded to the commons, all amendments in the mode of taxation are sure to be rejected.

NEXT, with regard to the elections of knights, citizens, and burgesses; we may observe that herein consists the exercise of the democratical part of our constitution: for in a democracy there can be no exercise of sovereignty but by suffrage, which is the declaration of the people's will. In all democracies therefore it is of the utmost importance to regulate by whom, and in what manner, the suffrages are to be given.

165 And the Athenians were so justly jealous of this prerogative, that a stranger, who interfered in the assemblies of the people, was punished by their laws with death: because such a man was esteemed guilty of high treason, by usurping those rights of sovereignty, to which he had no title. In England, where the people do not debate in a collective body but by representation, the exercise of this sovereignty consists in the choice of representatives. The laws have therefore very strictly guarded against usurpation or abuse of this power, by many salutary provisions; which may be reduced to these three points, 1. The qualifications of the electors. 2. The qualifications of the elected. 3. The proceedings at elections.

<sup>t</sup> 4 Inst. 29.

<sup>u</sup> on parliaments, 65, 66.

<sup>w</sup> (51) Year book, 33 Hen. VI. 17.

1. As to the qualifications of the electors. The true reason of requiring any qualification, with regard to property, in voters, is to exclude such persons as are in so mean a situation that they are esteemed to have no will of their own. If these persons had votes, they would be tempted to dispose of them under some undue influence or other. This would give a great, an artful, or a wealthy man, a larger share in elections than is consistent with general liberty. If it were probable that every man would give his vote freely, and without influence of any kind, then, upon the true theory and genuine principles of liberty, every member of the community, however poor, should have a vote in electing those delegates, to whose charge is committed the disposal of his property, his liberty, and his life. But, since that can hardly be expected in persons of indigent fortunes, or such as are under the immediate dominion of others, all popular states have been obliged to establish certain qualifications; whereby some, who are suspected to have no will of their own, are excluded from voting, in order to set other individuals, whose wills may be supposed independent, more thoroughly upon a level with each other.

AND this constitution of suffrages is framed upon  $\langle 52 \rangle$  a wiser principle than either of the methods of voting, by centuries, or by tribes, among the Romans. In the method by centuries, instituted by Servius Tullius, it was principally property, and not numbers that turned the scale: in the method by tribes, gradually introduced 166 by the tribunes of the people, numbers only were regarded and property entirely overlooked. Hence the laws passed by the former method had usually too great a tendency to aggrandize the patricians or rich nobles; and those by the latter had too much of a levelling principle. Our constitution steers between the two extremes.  $\langle 53 \rangle$  Only such as are entirely excluded, as can have no will of their own: there is hardly a free agent to be found,  $\langle 54 \rangle$  but what is entitled to a vote in some place or other in the kingdom. Nor is comparative wealth, or property, entirely disregarded in elections; for though the richest man has only one vote at one place, yet if his property be at all diffused, he has probably a right to vote at more places than one, and therefore has many representatives. This is the spirit of our constitution: not that I assert it is in fact  $\langle 55 \rangle$  quite so perfect as I have here endeavoured to describe it; for, if any alteration might be wished or suggested in the present frame of parliaments, it should be in favour of a more complete representation of the people.

BUT to return to our qualifications; and first those of electors for knights of the shire. 1. By statute 8 Hen. VI. c. 7. and  $\langle 56 \rangle$  10 Hen. VI. c. 2. the knights of the shires shall be chosen of people dwelling in the same counties; whereof every man shall have freehold to the value of forty shillings by the year within the county; which by subsequent statutes is to be clear of all charges and deductions, except parliamentary and parochial taxes. The knights of shires are the representatives of the landholders, or landed interest, of the kingdom: their electors must therefore have estates in lands or tenements, within the county represented: these estates must be freehold, that is, for term of life at least; because beneficial leases for long terms of years were not in use at the making of these statutes, and copyholders were then little better than villeins, absolutely dependent upon their lord: this freehold must be of forty shillings annual value; because that sum would then, with proper industry, furnish all the necessities of life, and render the freeholder, if he pleased, an independent man. For 167 bishop Fleetwood, in his chronicon pretiosum (57) written about sixty years since, has fully proved forty shillings in the reign of Henry VI to have been equal to twelve pounds per annum in the reign of queen Anne; and, as the value of money is very considerably lowered since the bishop wrote, I think we may fairly conclude, from this and other circumstances, that what was equivalent to twelve pounds in his days is equivalent to twenty at present. The other less important qualifications of the electors for counties in England and Wales may be collected from the statutes cited in the margin<sup>x</sup>; which direct, 2. That no person under twenty one years of age shall be capable of voting for any member. This extends to all sorts of members, as well for boroughs as counties; as does also the next, viz. 3. That no person convicted of perjury, or subornation of perjury, shall be capable of voting in any election. 4. That no person shall vote in right of any freehold, granted to him fraudulently to qualify him to vote. Fraudulent grants are such as contain an agreement to reconvey, or to defeat the estate granted; which agreements are made void, and the estate is absolutely vested in the person to whom it is so granted. And, to guard the better against such frauds, it is farther provided, 5. That every voter shall have been in the actual possession, or receipt of the profits, of his freehold to his own use for twelve calendar months before; except it came to him by descent, marriage, marriage settlement, will, or promotion to a benefice or office. 6. That no person shall vote in respect of an annuity or rentcharge, unless registered with the clerk of the peace twelve calendar months before. 7. That in mortgaged or trust-estates, the person in possession, under the abovementioned restrictions, shall have the vote. 8. That only one person shall be admitted to vote for any one house or tenement, to prevent the splitting of freeholds. 9. That no estate shall qualify a voter, unless the estate has been assessed to some land 168 tax aid, at least twelve months before the election. 10. That no tenant by copy of court roll shall be permitted to (58) vote as a freeholder. Thus much for the electors in counties.

As for the electors of citizens and burgesses, these are supposed to be the mercantile part or trading interest of this kingdom. But as trade is of a fluctuating nature, and seldom long fixed in a place, it was formerly left to the crown to summon, pro re nata [according to circumstances], the most flourishing towns to send representatives to parliament. So that as towns encreased in trade, and grew populous, they were admitted to a share in the legislature. But the misfortune is, that the deserted boroughs continued to be summoned, as well as those to whom their trade and inhabitants were transferred; except a few which petitioned to be eased of the expence, then usual, of maintaining their members: four shillings a day being allowed for a knight of the shire, and two shillings for a citizen or burgess; which was the rate of wages established in the reign of Edward III<sup>y</sup>. Hence the members for boroughs now bear above a quadruple proportion to those for counties, and the number of parliament men is increased since Fortescue's time, in the reign of Henry the sixth, from 300 to upwards of 500, exclusive of those for Scotland. The universities were in general not empowered to send burgesses to parliament; though once, in 28 Edw. I. when a parliament was summoned to consider of the king's right to Scotland, there were issued writs, which required the university of Oxford to send up four or five, and that of Cambridge two or three, of their most discreet and learned lawyers for the purpose<sup>z</sup>. But it was king James the first, who indulged them with the permanent privilege to send constantly two of their own body; to serve for those students who, though useful members of the community, were neither concerned in the landed nor the trading interest; and to protect in the legislature the rights of the republic of letters. The right of election in boroughs is various, depending intirely on the several charters, customs, and constitutions of the respective places, which has occasioned infinite disputes; though now by statute 2 Geo. II. c. 24. the right of voting for the future shall be allowed according to the last determination of the house of commons concerning it. And by statute 3 Geo. III. c. 15. no freeman of any city or borough (other than such as claim by birth, marriage, or servitude) shall be intitled to vote therein unless he hath been admitted to his freedom twelve calendar months before.

<sup>x</sup> 7 & 8 W. III. c. 25. 10 Ann. c. 23. 2 Geo. II. c. 21. 18 Geo. II. c. 18. 31 Geo. II. c. 14. 3 Geo. III. c. 24.

169

(59) 2. OUR second point is the qualification of persons to be elected members of the house of commons. (60) This depends upon the law and custom of parliaments<sup>a</sup>, and the statutes referred to in the margin<sup>b</sup>. And from these it appears, 1. That they must not be (62) aliens born, or minors. 2. That they must not be any of (63) the twelve judges, because they sit in the lords' house; (64) nor of the clergy, for they sit in the convocation; nor persons (65) attainted of treason or felony, for they are unfit to sit any where<sup>c</sup>. 3. That sheriffs of counties, and mayors and bailiffs of boroughs, are not eligible in their respective jurisdictions, as being returning officers<sup>d</sup>; but that sheriffs of one county are eligible to be knights of another<sup>e</sup>. 4. That, in strictness, all members (68) ought to be inhabitants of the places for which they are chosen: but this is intirely disregarded. 5. That no persons concerned in the management of any duties or taxes created since 1692, except the (69) commissioners of the treasury, nor any of the (70) officers following, (viz. commissioners of prizes, transports, sick and wounded, wine licences, navy, and victualling; secretaries or receivers of prizes; comptrollers of the army accounts; agents for regiments; governors of plantations

<sup>y</sup> 4 Inst. 16.

<sup>z</sup> Prynne parl. writs. I. 345.

<sup>a</sup> (61) 4 Inst. 47.

<sup>b</sup> 1 Hen. V. c. 1. 23 Hen. VI. c. 15. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 7. 11 & 12 W. III. c. 2. 12 & 13 W. III. c. 10. 6 Ann. c. 7. 9 Ann. c. 5. 1 Geo. I. c. 56. 15 Geo. II. c. 22. 33 Geo. II. c. 20.

<sup>c</sup> 4 Inst. 47.

<sup>d</sup> (66) Hale of parl. 114.

<sup>e</sup> (67) 4 Inst. 48.

and their deputies; officers of Minorca or Gibraltar;<sup>13</sup> officers of the excise and customs; clerks or deputies in the several offices of the treasury, exchequer, navy, victualling, admiralty, pay of the army or navy, secretaries of state, salt, stamps, appeals, wine licences, hackney coaches, hawkers and pedlars) nor any persons that hold any new office under the crown <71> created since 1705, are capable of <72> being elected members. 6. That no person having a pension under the crown during pleasure, or for any term of years, is capable of <73> being elected. 7. That if any member accepts an office under the crown, except an officer in the army or navy accepting a new commission, his seat is void; but such member is capable of <74> being re-elected. 8. That all knights of the shire shall be actual knights, or such notable esquires and gentlemen, as have estates sufficient to be knights, and by no means of the <75> degree of yeomen. This is reduced to a still greater certainty, by ordaining, 9. That every knight of a shire shall have a clear estate of freehold or copyhold to the value of six hundred pounds per annum, and every citizen and burgess to the value of three hundred pounds; except the eldest sons of peers, and of persons qualified to be knights of shires, and except the members for <76> the two universities: which somewhat ballances the ascendant which the boroughs have gained over the counties, by obliging the trading interest to make choice of landed men: and of this qualification the member must make oath, and give in the particulars in writing, at the time of his <77> taking his seat. But, subject to <78> these restrictions and disqualifications, every subject of the realm is eligible of common right. <79> It was therefore an unconstitutional prohibition, which was inserted in the king's writs, for the parliament holden at Coventry, 6 Hen. IV, that no apprentice or other man of the law should be elected a knight of the shire therein<sup>f</sup>: in return for which, our law books and historians<sup>g</sup> have branded this parliament with the name of parliamentum indoctum, or the lack-learning parliament; and sir Edward Coke observes with some spleen<sup>h</sup>, that there was never a good law made thereat.

3. THE third point regarding elections, is the method of proceeding therein. This is also regulated by the law of parliament, and the several statutes referred to in the margin<sup>i</sup>; all <82> which I shall endeavour to blend together, and extract out of them a summary account of the method of proceeding to elections.

As soon as the parliament is summoned, <83> the lord chancellor, (or if a vacancy happens during parliament, the speaker, by order of the house) sends his warrant to the clerk of the crown in chancery; who thereupon issues out writs to the sheriff of every county, for the election of all the members to serve for that county, and every city and borough therein. Within three days after the receipt of this writ, the sheriff is to send his precept, under his seal, to the proper returning officers of the cities and

<sup>f</sup> Pryn. on 4 Inst. 13.

<sup>g</sup> Walsingh. A.D. 1405.

<sup>h</sup> 4 Inst. 48.

<sup>i</sup> 7 Hen. IV. c. 15. 8 Hen. VI. c. 7. <80> 23 Hen. VI. c. 15. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 2. 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 7. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 20. 7 W. III. c. 4. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 7. and c. 25. 10 & 11 W. III. c. 7. 12 & 13 W. III. c. 10. 6 Ann. c. 23. 9 Ann. c. 5. 10 Ann. c. 19. and c. 23. 2 Geo. II. c. 24. 8 Geo. II. c. 30. 18 Geo. II. c. 18. <81> 19 Geo. II. c. 28.

<sup>13</sup> The Mediterranean island of Minorca was under British rule for most of the eighteenth century (1713–56, 1763–82, 1798–1802); so too, the peninsula of Gibraltar (from 1704).

boroughs, commanding them to elect their members; and the said returning officers are to proceed to election within eight days from the receipt of the precept, giving four days (84) notice of the same; and to return the persons chosen, together with the precept, to the sheriff.

BUT elections of knights of the shire must be proceeded to by the sheriffs themselves in person, at the next county court that shall happen after the delivery of the writ. The county court is a court held every month or oftener by the sheriff, intended to try little causes not exceeding the value of forty shillings, in what part of the county he pleases to appoint for that purpose: but for the election of knights of the shire, it must be held at the most usual place. If the county court falls upon the day of delivering the writ, or within six days after, the sheriff may adjourn the court and election to some other convenient time, not longer than sixteen days, nor shorter than ten; but he cannot alter the place, without the consent of all the candidates; and in all such cases ten days public notice must be given of the time and place of the election.

AND, as it is essential to the very being of parliament that elections should be absolutely free, therefore all undue influences upon the electors are illegal, and strongly prohibited. For Mr Locke<sup>k</sup> ranks it among those breaches of trust in the executive magistrate, which according to his notions amount to a dissolution of the government, “if he employs the force, treasure, and offices of the society to corrupt the representatives, or openly to preingage the electors, and prescribe what manner of persons shall be chosen. For thus to regulate candidates and electors, and new model the ways of election, what is it, says he, but to cut up the government by the roots, and poison the very fountain of public security?” As soon therefore as the time and place of election, either in counties or boroughs, are fixed, all soldiers quartered in the place are to remove, at least one day before the election, to the distance of two miles or more; and not return till one day after the poll is ended. Riots likewise have been frequently determined to make an election void. By vote also of the house of commons, to whom alone belongs the power of determining contested elections, no lord of parliament, or lord lieutenant of a country, hath any right to interfere in the election of commoners; and, by statute, the lord warden of the cinque ports shall not recommend any members there. If any officer of the excise, customs, stamps, or certain other branches of the revenue, presumes to intermeddle in elections, by persuading any voter or dissuading him, he forfeits 100*l.*, and is disabled to hold any office. 172

THUS are the electors of one branch of the legislature secured from any undue influence from either of the other two, and from all external violence and compulsion. But the greatest danger is that in which themselves co-operate, by the infamous practice of bribery and corruption. To prevent which it is enacted that no candidate shall, after the date (usually called the teste) of the writs, or after the vacancy, give any money or entertainment to his electors, or promise to give any, either to particular persons, or to the place in general, in order to his being elected; on pain of being incapable to serve for that place in parliament. And if any money, gift, office, 173

<sup>k</sup> on Gov. part. 2. §. 222.

employment, or reward be given or promised to be given to any voter, at any time, in order to influence him to give or withhold his vote, both he that takes and he that offers such bribe forfeits 500*l.*, and is for ever disabled from voting and holding any office in any corporation; unless, before conviction, he will discover some other offender of the same kind, and then he is indemnified for his own offence.<sup>1</sup> The first instance that occurs of election bribery, was so early as 13 Eliz. when one Thomas Longe (being a simple man and of small capacity to serve in parliament) acknowledged that he had given the returning officer and others of (85) the borough of Westbury four pounds to be returned member, and was for that premium elected. But for this offence the borough was amerced, the member was removed, and the officer fined and imprisoned<sup>m</sup>. But, as this practice hath since taken much deeper and more universal root, it hath occasioned the making of these wholesome statutes; to complete the efficacy of which, there is nothing wanting but resolution and integrity to put them in strict execution.<sup>14</sup>

UNDUE influence being thus (I wish the depravity of mankind would permit me to say, effectually) guarded against, the election is to be proceeded to on the day appointed; the sheriff or other returning officer first taking an oath against bribery, and for the due execution of his office. The candidates likewise, if required, must swear to their qualification; and the electors in counties to theirs; and the electors both in counties and boroughs are also compellable to take the oath of abjuration and that against bribery and corruption. And it might not be amiss, if the members 174 elected were bound to take the latter oath, as well as the former; which in all probability would be much more effectual, than administering it only to the electors.

THE election being closed, the returning officer in boroughs returns his precept to the sheriff, with the persons elected by the majority; and the sheriff returns the whole, together with the writ for the county and the knights elected thereupon, to the clerk of the crown in chancery; before the day of meeting, if it be a new parliament, or within fourteen days after the election, if it be an occasional vacancy; and this under penalty of 500*l.* If the sheriff does not return such knights only as are duly elected, he forfeits, by the old statutes of Henry VI, 100*l.*; and the returning officer in boroughs for a like false return 40*l.*; and they are besides liable to an action, in which double damages shall be recovered, by the later statutes of king William: and any person bribing the returning officer shall also forfeit 300*l.* But the members returned by him are the sitting members, until the house of commons, upon petition, shall adjudge the return to be (86) false and illegal. And this abstract of the proceedings at elections of knights, citizens, and burgesses, concludes our enquiries into the laws and customs more peculiarly relative to the house of commons.

<sup>1</sup> In like manner the Julian law de ambitu [of bribery] inflicts fines and infamy upon all who were guilty of corruption at elections; but, if the person guilty convicted another offender, he was restored to his credit again. Ff. 48. 14. 1.

<sup>m</sup> 4 Inst. 23. Hale of parl. 112. Com. Journ. 10 & 11 May 1571.

<sup>14</sup> Blackstone himself was MP for Westbury 1768–70; he managed the earl of Abingdon's electoral interest in the borough by recommending strategic purchases and manipulating the electoral process; see Prest, Blackstone, 224–5.

VI. I PROCEED now, sixthly, to the method of making laws; which is much the same in both houses: and I shall touch it very briefly, beginning in the house of commons. But first I must premise, that for dispatch of business each house of parliament has its speaker. (87) The speaker of the house of lords is the lord chancellor, or keeper of the king's great seal; whose office it is to preside there, and manage the formality of business. The speaker of the house of commons is chosen by the house; but must be approved by the king. And herein the usage of the two houses differs, that the speaker of the house of commons cannot give his opinion or argue any question in the house; but (88) the speaker of the house of lords may. In each house the act of the majority binds the whole; and this majority is declared by votes openly and publicly given: not as at Venice, and many other senatorial assemblies, privately or by ballot. This latter method may be serviceable, to prevent intrigues and unconstitutional combinations: but is impossible to be practiced with us; at least in the house of commons, where every member's conduct is subject to the future censure of his constituents, and therefore should be openly submitted to their inspection. 175

To bring a bill into the house, if the relief sought by it is of a private nature, it is first necessary to prefer a petition; which must be presented by a member, and usually sets forth the grievance desired to be remedied. This petition (when founded on facts that may be in their nature disputed) is referred to a committee of members, who examine the matter alleged, and accordingly report it to the house; and then (or, otherwise, upon the mere petition) leave is given to bring in the bill. In public matters the bill is brought in upon motion made to the house, without any petition at all. Formerly, all bills were drawn in the form of petitions, which were entered upon the parliament rolls, with the king's answer thereunto subjoined; not in any settled form of words, but as the circumstances of the case required<sup>n</sup>: and at the end of each parliament the judges drew them into the form of a statute, which was entered on the statute-rolls. In the reign of Henry V, to prevent mistakes and abuses, the statutes were drawn up by the judges before the end of the parliament; and, in the reign of Henry VI, bills in the form of acts, according to the modern custom, were first introduced.

THE persons, directed to bring in the bill, present it in a competent time to the house, drawn out on paper, with a multitude of blanks, or void spaces, where any thing occurs that is dubious, or necessary to be settled by the parliament itself; (such, especially, as the precise date of times, the nature and quantity of penalties, or of any sums of money to be raised) being indeed only the skeleton of the bill. In the house of lords, if the bill begins there, it is (when of a private (89) nature) perused by two of the judges, who settle all points of legal propriety. This is read a first time, and at a convenient distance a second time; and after each reading the speaker opens to the house the substance of the bill, and puts the question, whether it shall proceed any farther. The introduction of the bill may be originally opposed, as the bill itself may at either of the readings; and, if the opposition succeeds, the bill must be dropt for (90) that sessions; as it must also, if opposed with success in any of the subsequent stages. 176

<sup>n</sup> See, among numberless other instances, the articuli cleri, 9 Edw. II. st. 1.

AFTER the second reading it is committed, that is, referred to a committee; which is either selected by the house in matters of small importance, or else, upon a bill of consequence, the house resolves itself into a committee of the whole house. A committee of the whole house is composed of every member; and, to form it, the speaker quits the chair, (another member being appointed chairman) and may sit and debate as a private member. In these committees the bill is debated clause by clause, amendments made, the blanks filled up, and sometimes the bill entirely new modelled. After it has gone through the committee, the chairman reports it to the house with such amendments as the committee have made; and then the house reconsider the whole bill again, and the question is repeatedly put upon every clause and amendment. When the house have agreed or disagreed to the amendments of the committee, and sometimes added new amendments of their own, the bill is then ordered to be engrossed, or written in a strong gross hand,<sup>15</sup> on one or more (91) long rolls of parchment sewed together. When this is finished, it is read a third time, and amendments are sometimes then made to it; and, if a new clause be added, it is done by tacking a separate piece of parchment on the bill, which is (92) called a ryder. The speaker then again opens the contents; and, holding it up in his hands, puts the question, whether the bill shall pass. If this is (93) agreed to, one of the members is directed to carry it to the lords, and desire their concurrence; who, attended by 177 several more, carries it to the bar of the house of peers, and there delivers it to their speaker, who comes down from his woosack to receive it.

It there passes through the same forms as in the other house, (except engrossing, which is already done) and, if rejected, no more notice is taken, but it passes sub silentio [tacitly], to prevent unbecoming altercations. But if it is agreed to, the lords send a message by two masters in chancery (94) (or sometimes two of the judges) that they have agreed to the same: and the bill remains with the lords, if they have made no amendment to it. But if any amendments are made, such amendments are sent down with the bill to receive the concurrence of the commons. If the commons disagree to the amendments, a conference usually follows between members deputed from each house; who for the most part settle and adjust the difference: but, if both houses remain inflexible, the bill is dropped. If the commons agree to the amendments, the bill is sent back to the lords by one of the members, with a message to acquaint them therewith. The same forms are observed, mutatis mutandis [with the necessary changes], when (95) the bill begins in the house of lords. And when both houses have done (96) with the bill, it always is deposited in the house of peers, to wait the royal assent.

(97) THIS may be given two ways: 1. In person; when the king comes to the house of peers, in his crown and royal robes, and sending for the commons to the bar, the titles of all the bills that have passed both houses are read; and the king's answer is declared by the clerk of the parliament in Norman-French: a badge, it must be owned, (now the only one remaining) of conquest; and which one could wish to see fall into total oblivion; unless it be reserved as a solemn memento to remind us that our liberties are mortal, having once been destroyed by a foreign force. If the king consents to a public bill, the clerk usually declares, “le roy le veut, the king wills it so to be;” if to a private bill, “soit fait come il est desirè, be it as it is desired.” If the king refuses his assent, it is in the gentle language of “le roy s’avisera, the king will (98) advise upon it.” 2. By statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 21. the king may give his assent by letters patent under his great seal, signed with his hand, and notified, in his absence, to both houses assembled together in the high house. And, when the bill has received the royal assent in either of these ways, it is then, and not before, a statute or act of parliament. 178

<sup>15</sup> Engross: to draw up a document in a formal or legal hand.

THIS statute or act is placed among the records of the kingdom; there needing no formal promulgation to give it the force of a law, as was necessary by the civil law with regard to the emperors edicts: because every man in England is, in judgment of law, party to the making of an act of parliament, being present thereat by his representatives. However, a copy thereof is usually printed at the king’s press, for the information of the whole land. And formerly, before the invention of printing, it was used to be published by the sheriff of every county; the king’s writ being sent to him at the end of every session, together with a transcript of all the acts made at that session, commanding him “ut statuta illa, et omnes articulos in eisdem contentos, in singulis locis ubi expedire viderit, publice proclamari, et firmiter teneri et observari faciat.”<sup>16</sup> And the usage was to proclaim them at his county court, and there to keep them, that whoever would might read or take copies thereof; which custom continued till the reign of Henry the seventh<sup>o</sup>.

AN act of parliament, thus made, is the exercise of the highest authority that this kingdom acknowledges upon earth. It hath power to bind every subject in the land, and the dominions thereunto belonging; nay, even the king himself, if particularly named therein. And it cannot be altered, amended, dispensed with, suspended, or repealed, but in the same forms and by the same authority of parliament: for it is a maxim in law, that it requires the same strength to dissolve, as to create an obligation. It is true it was formerly held, that the king might in many cases dispense with penal statutes<sup>p</sup>: but now by statute 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. it is declared, that the suspending or dispensing with laws by regal authority, without consent of parliament, is illegal. 179

VII. THERE remains only, in the seventh and last place, to add a word or two concerning the manner in which parliaments may be adjourned, prorogued, or dissolved.

AN adjournment is no more than a continuance of the session from one day to another, as the word itself signifies: and this is done by the authority of each house separately every day; and sometimes for a fortnight or a month together, as at Christmas or Easter, or upon other particular occasions. But the adjournment of one house is no adjournment of the other<sup>q</sup>. It hath also been usual, when his majesty hath signified his pleasure that both or either of the houses should adjourn themselves to

<sup>o</sup> 3 Inst. 41. 4 Inst. 26.

<sup>p</sup> (99) Finch. L. 81. 234.

<sup>q</sup> 4 Inst. 28.

<sup>16</sup> ‘that he cause those statutes, and all articles therein contained, to be publicly proclaimed in every place where it shall seem expedient, and strictly observed and kept.’

a certain day, to obey the king's pleasure so signified, and to adjourn accordingly<sup>r</sup>. Otherwise, besides the indecorum of a refusal, a prorogation would assuredly follow; which would often be very inconvenient to both public and private business. For prorogation puts an end to the session; and then such bills, as are only begun and not perfected, must be resumed de novo [afresh] (if at all) in a subsequent session: whereas, after an adjournment, all things continue in the same state as at the time of the adjournment made, and may be proceeded on without any fresh commencement.

180 A PROROGATION is the continuance of the parliament from one session to another, as an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day. This is done by the royal authority, expressed either by the lord chancellor in his majesty's presence, or by commission from the crown, or frequently by proclamation. Both houses are necessarily prorogued at the same time; it not being a prorogation of the house of lords, or commons, but of the parliament. The session is never understood to be at an end, until a prorogation: though, unless some act be passed or some judgment given in parliament, it is in truth no session at all<sup>s</sup>. And formerly the usage was, for the king to give the royal assent to all such bills as he approved, at the end of every session, and then to prorogue the parliament; though sometimes only for a day or two<sup>t</sup>: after which all business then depending in the houses was to be begun again. Which custom obtained so strongly, that it once became a question<sup>u</sup>, whether giving the royal assent to a single bill did not of course put an end to the session. And, though it was then resolved in the negative, yet the notion was so deeply rooted, that the statute 1 Car. I. c. 7. was passed to declare, that the king's assent to that and some other acts should not put an end to the session; and, even so late as (102) the restoration of Charles II, we find a proviso tacked to the first bill then enacted<sup>w</sup>, that his majesty's assent thereto should not determine the session of parliament. But it now seems to be allowed, that a prorogation must be expressly made, in order to determine the session. And, if at the time of an actual rebellion, or imminent danger of invasion, the parliament shall be separated by adjournment or prorogation, the king is empowered<sup>x</sup> to call them together by proclamation, with fourteen days notice of the time appointed for their reassembling.

A DISSOLUTION is the civil death of the parliament; and this may be effected three ways: 1. By the king's will, expressed either in person or by representation. For, as the king has the sole right of convening the parliament, so also it is a branch of the royal prerogative, that he may (whenever he pleases) prorogue the parliament for a time, or put a final period to its existence. If nothing had a right to prorogue or dissolve a parliament but itself, it might happen to become perpetual. And this would be extremely dangerous, if at any time it should attempt to encroach upon the executive <sup>s</sup> (101) 4 Inst. 28. Hale of parl. 38.

<sup>r</sup> Com. Journ. passim: e.g. 11 Jun. 1572. 5 Apr. 1604. 4 Jun. 14 Nov. 18 Dec. 1621. 11 Jul. 1625. 13 Sept. 1660. 25 Jul. 1667. 4 Aug. 1685. 24 Febr. 1691. 21 Jun. 1712. 16 Apr. 1717. 3 Feb. 1741. (100) 10 Dec. 1745.

<sup>t</sup> Com. Journ. 21 Oct. 1553.

<sup>u</sup> Ibid. 21 Nov. 1554.

<sup>w</sup> (103) Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 1.

<sup>x</sup> Stat. 30 Geo. II. c. 25.

power: as was fatally experienced by the unfortunate king Charles the first; who, 181 having unadvisedly passed an act to continue the parliament then in being till such time as it should please to dissolve itself, at last fell a sacrifice to that inordinate power, which he himself had consented to give them. It is therefore extremely necessary that the crown should be empowered to regulate the duration of these assemblies, under the limitations which the English constitution has prescribed: so that, on the one hand, they may frequently and regularly come together, for the dispatch of business and redress of grievances; and may not, on the other, even with the consent of the crown, be continued to an inconvenient or unconstitutional length.

2. A PARLIAMENT may be dissolved by the demise of the crown. This dissolution formerly happened immediately upon the death of the reigning sovereign, for he being considered in law as the head of the parliament, (caput, principium, et finis [the head, origin and end]) that failing, the whole body was held to be extinct. But, the calling a new parliament immediately on the inauguration of the successor being found inconvenient, and dangers being apprehended from having no parliament in being in case of a disputed succession, it was enacted by the statutes 7 & 8 W. III. c. 15. and 6 Ann. c. 7. that the parliament in being shall continue for six months after the death of any king or queen, unless sooner prorogued or dissolved by the successor: that, if the parliament be, at the time of the king's death, separated by adjournment or prorogation, it shall notwithstanding assemble immediately: and that, if no parliament is then in being, the members of the last parliament shall assemble, and be again a parliament.

3. LASTLY, a parliament may be dissolved or expire by length of time. For if either the legislative body were perpetual; or might last for the life of the prince who convened them, as formerly; and were so to be supplied, by occasionally filling the vacancies with new representatives; in these cases, if it were once corrupted, the evil would be past all remedy: but when different bodies succeed each other, if the people see cause 182 to disapprove of the present, they may rectify its faults in the next. A legislative assembly also, which is sure to be separated again, (whereby its members will themselves become private men, and subject to the full extent of the laws which they have enacted for others) will think themselves bound, in interest as well as duty, to make only such laws as are good. The utmost extent of time that the same parliament was allowed to sit, by the statute 6 W. & M. c. 2. was three years; after the expiration of which, reckoning from the return of the first summons, the parliament was to have no longer continuance. But by the statute 1 Geo. I. st. 2. c. 38. (in order, professedly, to prevent the great and continued expenses of frequent elections, and the violent heats and animosities consequent thereupon, and for the peace and security of the government then just recovering from the late rebellion) this term was prolonged to seven years;
 and, what alone is an instance of the vast authority of parliament, the very same house, that was chosen for three years, enacted its own continuance for seven.<sup>17</sup> So that, as our constitution now stands, the parliament must expire, or die a natural death, at the end of every seventh year; if not sooner dissolved by the royal prerogative.

<sup>17</sup> The Septennial Act (passed in 1716) increased the maximum length of a parliament from three years to seven (Stat. 1 Geo. I. st. 2. c. 38). Blackstone's reference to excessive expenses and disorder as 'professedly' the rationale for the act represents Tory opposition to a measure which consolidated the Whig government's hold on power.

OF THE KING, AND HIS TITLE.

THE supreme executive power of these kingdoms is vested by our laws in a single person, the king or queen: for it matters not to which sex the crown descends; but the person entitled to it, whether male or female, is immediately invested with all the ensigns, rights, and prerogatives of sovereign power; as is declared by statute 1 Mar. st. 3. c. 1.

IN discoursing of the royal rights and authority, I shall consider the king under six distinct views: 1. With regard to his title. 2. His royal family. 3. His councils. 4. His duties. 5. His prerogative. 6. His revenue. And, first, with regard to his title.

THE executive power of the English nation being vested in a single person, by the general consent of the people, the evidence of which general consent is long and immemorial usage, it became necessary to the freedom and peace of the state, that a rule should be laid down, uniform, universal, and permanent; in order to mark out with precision, who is that single person, to whom are committed (in subservience to the law of the land) the care and protection of the community; and to whom, in return, the duty and allegiance of every individual are due. It is of the highest 184 importance to the public tranquillity, and to the consciences of private men, that this rule should be clear and indisputable: and our constitution has not left us in the dark upon this material occasion. It will therefore be the endeavour of this chapter to trace out the constitutional doctrine of the royal succession, with that freedom and regard to truth, yet mixed with that reverence and respect, which the principles of liberty and the dignity of the subject require.

THE grand fundamental maxim upon which the jus coronae, or right of succession to the throne of these kingdoms, depends, I take to be this: "that the crown is, by common law and constitutional custom, hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself: but that the right of inheritance may from time to time be changed or limited by act of parliament; under which limitations the crown still continues hereditary." And this proposition it will be the business of this chapter to prove, in all its branches: first, that the crown is hereditary; secondly, that it is hereditary in a manner peculiar to itself; thirdly, that this inheritance is subject to limitation by parliament; lastly, that when it is so limited, it is hereditary in the new proprietor.

1. FIRST, it is in general hereditary, or descendible to the next heir, on the death or demise of the last proprietor. All regal governments must be either hereditary or elective: and, as I believe there is no instance wherein the crown of England has ever been asserted to be elective, except by the regicides at the infamous and unparalleled trial of king Charles I, it must of consequence be hereditary. Yet while I assert an hereditary, I by no means intend a jure divino [divine right], title to the throne. Such a title may be allowed to have subsisted under the theocratic establishments of the children of Israel in Palestine: but it never yet subsisted in any other country; save only so far as kingdoms, like other human fabrics, are subject to the general and ordinary dispensations of providence. Nor indeed have a jure divino and an hereditary right any necessary connexion with each other; as some have very weakly imagined. The titles of David and Jehu were equally jure divino, as those of either Solomon or Ahab; and yet David slew the sons of his predecessor, and Jehu his predecessor himself.<sup>1</sup> And when our kings have the same warrant as they had, whether it be to sit upon the throne of their fathers, or to destroy the house of the preceding sovereign, they will then, and not before, possess the crown of England by a right like theirs, immediately derived from heaven. The hereditary right, which the laws of England acknowledge, owes its origin to the founders of our constitution, and to them only. It has no relation to, nor depends upon, the civil laws of the Jews, the Greeks, the Romans, or any other nation upon earth: the municipal laws of one society having no connexion with, or influence upon, the fundamental polity of another. The founders of our English monarchy might perhaps, if they had thought proper, have made it an elective monarchy: but they rather chose, and upon good reason, to establish originally a succession by inheritance. This has been acquiesced in by general consent; and ripened by degrees into common law: the very same title that every private man has to his own estate. Lands are not naturally descendible any more than thrones: but the law has thought proper, for the benefit and peace of the public, to establish hereditary succession in one as well as the other. 185

It must be owned, an elective monarchy seems to be the most obvious, and best suited of any to the rational principles of government, and the freedom of human nature: and accordingly we find from history that, in the infancy and first rudiments of almost every state, the leader, chief magistrate, or prince, hath usually been elective. And, if the individuals who compose that state could always continue true to first principles, uninfluenced by passion or prejudice, unassailed by corruption, and unawed by violence, elective succession were as much to be desired in a kingdom, as in other inferior communities. The best, the wisest, and the bravest man would then be sure of receiving that crown, which his endowments have merited; and the sense of an unbiassed majority would be dutifully acquiesced in by the few who were of different opinions. But history and observation will inform us, that elections of every kind (in the present state of human nature) are too frequently brought about by influence, partiality, and artifice: and, even where the case is otherwise, these practices will be often suspected, and as constantly charged upon the successful, by a splenetic disappointed minority. This is an evil, to which all societies are liable; as well those of a private and domestic kind, as the great community of the public, which regulates and includes the rest. But in the former there is this advantage; that such suspicions, if false, proceed no farther than jealousies and murmurs, which time will effectually suppress; and, if true, the injustice may be remedied by legal means, by an appeal to those tribunals to which every member of society has (by 186 becoming such) virtually engaged to submit. Whereas, in the great and independent society, which every nation composes, there is no superior to resort to but the law of nature; no method to redress the infringements of that law, but the actual exertion of private force. As therefore between two nations, complaining of mutual injuries, the quarrel can only be decided by the law of arms; so in one and the same nation, when the fundamental principles of their common union are supposed to be invaded, and more especially when the appointment of their chief magistrate is alleged to be unduly made, the only tribunal to which the complainants can appeal is that of the God of battels, the only process by which the appeal can be carried on is that of a civil and intestine war. An hereditary succession to the crown is therefore now established, in this and most other countries, in order to prevent that periodical bloodshed and misery, which the history of antient imperial Rome, and the more modern experience of Poland and Germany, may shew us are the consequences of elective kingdoms.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> David was allied with the Philistines at the battle of Mount Gilboa, where King Saul and his sons were killed (1 Sam. 27–31); Jehu (843–816 BC) seized the throne of Israel by force (see 2 Kgs 9–10); Solomon, son of David, was king of Israel c. 962–922 BC (see 1 Kgs 1–11); Ahab was king of Israel, c. 873–851 BC (see 1 Kgs).

187 2. BUT, secondly, as to the particular mode of inheritance, it in general corresponds with the feudal path of descents, chalked out by the common law in the succession to landed estates; yet with one or two material exceptions. (1) Like them, the crown will descend lineally to the issue of the reigning monarch; as it did from king John to Richard II, through a regular pedigree of six lineal descents. (2) As in them, the preference of males to females, and the right of primogeniture among the males, are strictly adhered to. Thus Edward V succeeded to the crown, in preference to Richard his younger brother and Elizabeth his elder sister.<sup>3</sup> (3) Like them, on failure of the male line, it descends to the issue female; according to the antient British custom remarked by Tacitus<sup>a</sup>, “solent foeminarum ductu bellare, et sexum in imperiis non discernere [they are accustomed to wage war under the leadership of women, and not to consider sex in the government of their empire].” Thus Mary I succeeded to Edward VI; and the line of Margaret queen of Scots, the daughter of Henry VII, succeeded on failure of the line of Henry VIII, his son. But, among the females, the crown descends by right of primogeniture to the eldest daughter only and her issue; and not, as in common inheritances, to all the daughters at once; the evident necessity of a sole succession to the throne having occasioned the royal law of descents to depart from the common law in this respect: and therefore queen Mary on the death of her brother succeeded to the crown alone, and not in partnership with her sister Elizabeth. Again: the doctrine of representation prevails in the descent of the crown, as it does in other inheritances; whereby the lineal descendants of any person deceased stand in the same place as their ancestor, if living, would have done. Thus Richard II succeeded his grandfather Edward III, in right of his father the black prince; to the exclusion of all his uncles, his grandfather’s younger children. Lastly, on failure of lineal descendants, the crown goes to the next collateral relations of the late king; provided they are lineally descended from the blood royal, that is, from that royal stock which originally acquired the crown. Thus Henry I succeeded to William II, John to Richard I, and James I to Elizabeth; being all derived from the conqueror, who was then the only regal stock. But herein there is no objection (as in the case of common descents) to the succession of a brother, an uncle, or other collateral relation, of the half blood; that is, where the relationship proceeds not from the same couple of ancestors (which constitutes a kinsman of the whole blood) but from a single ancestor only; as when two persons are derived from the same father, and not from the same mother, or vice versa: provided only, that the one ancestor, from whom both are descended, be he from whose veins the blood royal is communicated to each. Thus Mary I inherited to Edward VI, and Elizabeth inherited to Mary; <4> all born of the same father, king Henry VIII, but all by different mothers. The reason of which diversity, between royal and common descents, will be better understood hereafter, when we examine the nature of inheritances in general.<sup>4</sup> 188

<sup>a</sup> in vit. Agricola.

<sup>2</sup> The Thirty Years’ War (1618–48) devastated many parts of Germany; Silesia was fought over in the War of Austrian Succession (1740–48), and the Seven Years War (1756–63).

<sup>3</sup> Edward V, eldest son of Edward IV, acceded to the throne on his father’s death in 1483. He was presumed murdered in the Tower with his brother Richard duke of York, next in line of succession. Their sister Elizabeth of York became Queen consort on her marriage to Henry VII in 1486.

3. THE doctrine of hereditary right does by no means imply an indefeasible<sup>5</sup> right to the throne. No man will, I think, assert this, that has considered our laws, constitution, and history, without prejudice, and with any degree of attention. It is unquestionably in the breast of the supreme legislative authority of this kingdom, the king and both houses of parliament, to defeat this hereditary right; and, by particular entails, limitations, and provisions, to exclude the immediate heir, and vest the inheritance in any one else. This is strictly consonant to our laws and constitution; as may be gathered from the expression so frequently used in our statute book, of “the king’s majesty, his heirs, and successors.” In which we may observe, that as the word, “heirs,” necessarily implies an inheritance or hereditary right, generally subsisting in the royal person; so the word, “successors,” distinctly taken, must imply that this inheritance <5> may sometimes be broke through; or, that there may be a successor, without being the heir, of the king. And this is so extremely reasonable, that without such a power, lodged somewhere, our polity would be very defective. For, let us barely suppose so melancholy a case, as that the heir apparent should be a lunatic, an idiot, or otherwise incapable of reigning: how miserable would the condition of the nation be, if he were also incapable of being set aside!—It is therefore necessary that this power should be lodged somewhere: and yet the inheritance, and regal dignity, would be very precarious indeed, if this power were expressly and avowedly lodged in the hands of the subject only, to be exerted whenever prejudice, caprice, or discontent should happen to take the lead. Consequently it can no where be so properly lodged as in the two houses of parliament, by and with the consent of the reigning king; who, it is not to be supposed, will agree to any thing improperly prejudicial to the rights of his own descendants. And therefore in the king, lords, and commons, in parliament assembled, our laws have expressly lodged it. 189

4. BUT, fourthly; however the crown may be limited or transferred, it still retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the wearer of it: and hence in our law the king is said never to die, in his political capacity; though, in common with other men, he is subject to mortality in his natural: because immediately upon the natural death of Henry, William, or Edward, the king survives in his successor; and the right of the crown vests, eo instanti [from that instant], upon his heir; either the haeres natus [heir born], if the course of descent remains unimpeached, or the haeres factus [heir appointed], if the inheritance be under any particular settlement. So that there can be no interregnum; but as sir Matthew Hale<sup>b</sup> observes, the right of sovereignty is fully invested in the successor by the very descent of the crown. And therefore, however acquired, it becomes in him absolutely hereditary, unless by the rules of the limitation it is otherwise ordered and determined. In the same manner as landed estates, to continue our former comparison, are by the law hereditary, or descendible to the heirs of the owner; but still there exists a power, by which the property of those lands may be transferred to another person. If this transfer be made simply and absolutely, the lands will be hereditary in the new owner, and descend to his heirs at law: but if the transfer be clogged with any limitations, conditions, or entails, the lands must descend in that chanel, so limited and prescribed, and no other.

<sup>4</sup> See II, chs. 7, 14.

<sup>5</sup> Indefeasible: cannot be defeated or forfeited.

190 In these four points consists, as I take it, the constitutional notion of hereditary right to the throne: which will be still farther elucidated, and made clear beyond all dispute, from a short historical view of the successions to the crown of England, the doctrines of our antient lawyers, and the several acts of parliament that have from time to time been made, to create, to declare, to confirm, to limit, or to bar, the hereditary title to the throne. And in the pursuit of this enquiry we shall find, that from the days of Egbert, the first sole monarch of this kingdom, even to the present, the four cardinal maxims above mentioned have ever been held the constitutional canons of succession. It is true, this succession, through fraud, or force, or sometimes through necessity, when in hostile times the crown descended on a minor or the like, has been very frequently suspended; <6> but has always at last returned back into the old hereditary chanel, though sometimes a very considerable period has intervened. And, even in those instances where the succession has been violated, the crown has ever been looked upon as hereditary in the wearer of it. Of which the usurpers themselves were so sensible, that they for the most part endeavoured to vamp up some feeble shew of a title by descent, in order to amuse the people, while they gained the possession of the kingdom. And, when possession was once gained, they considered it as the purchase or acquisition of a new estate of inheritance, and transmitted or endeavoured to transmit it to their own posterity, by a kind of hereditary right of usurpation.

KING Egbert about the year 800, found himself in possession of the throne of the west Saxons, by a long and undisturbed descent from his ancestors of above three hundred years. How his ancestors acquired their title, whether by force, by fraud, by contract, or by election, it matters not much to enquire; and is indeed a point of such high antiquity, as must render all enquiries at best but plausible guesses. His right must be supposed indisputably good, because we know no better. The other kingdoms of the heptarchy he acquired, some by consent, but most by a voluntary submission. And it is an established maxim in civil polity, and the law of nations, that when one country is united to another in such a manner, as that one keeps its government and states, and the other loses them; the latter entirely assimilates or is melted down in the former, and must adopt its laws and customs<sup>c</sup>. And in pursuance of this maxim there hath ever been, since the union of the heptarchy in king Egbert, a general acquiescence under the hereditary monarchy of the west Saxons, through all the united kingdoms. 191

<sup>b</sup> 1 Hist. P. C. 61.

FROM Egbert to the death of Edmund Ironside, a period of above two hundred years, the crown descended regularly, through a succession of fifteen princes, without any deviation or interruption; (>) save only that king Edred, the uncle of Edwy, mounted the throne for about nine years, in the right of his nephew a minor, the times being very troublesome and dangerous. But this was with a view to preserve, and not to destroy, the succession; and accordingly Edwy succeeded him.

KING Edmund Ironside was obliged, by the hostile irruption of the Danes, at first to divide his kingdom with Canute, king of Denmark; and Canute, after his death, seized the whole of it, Edmund's sons being driven into foreign countries. Here the succession was suspended by actual force, and a new family introduced upon the throne: in whom however this new acquired throne continued hereditary for three reigns; when, upon the death of Hardiknute, the antient Saxon line was restored in the person of Edward the confessor.

HE was not indeed the true heir to the crown, being the younger brother of king Edmund Ironside, who had a son Edward, surnamed (from his exile) the outlaw, still living. But this son was then in Hungary; and, the English having just shaken off the Danish yoke, it was necessary that somebody on the spot should mount the throne; and the confessor was the next of the royal line then in England. On his decease without issue, Harold II usurped the throne, and almost at the same instant came on the Norman invasion: the right to the crown being all the time in Edgar, surnamed Atheling, (which signifies (>)) in the Saxon language the first of the blood royal) who was the son of Edward the outlaw, and grandson of Edmund Ironside; or, as Matthew Paris<sup>d</sup> well expresses the sense of our old constitution, "Edmundus autem latusferreum, rex naturalis de stirpe regum, genuit Edwardum; et Edwardus genuit Edgarum, cui de jure debebatur regnum Anglorum."<sup>e</sup> 192

WILLIAM the Norman claimed the crown by virtue of a pretended grant from king Edward the confessor; a grant which, if real, was in itself utterly invalid: because it was made, as Harold well observed in his reply to William's demand<sup>e</sup>, "absque generali senatus et populi conventu et edicto [without the general agreement and edict of the senate and people];" which also very plainly implies, that it then was generally understood that the king, with consent of the general council, might dispose of the crown and change the line

<sup>c</sup> Puff. L. of N. and N. b. 8. c. 12. §. 6.

<sup>d</sup> [M. Paris, Chronica Majora] A.D. 1066.

<sup>e</sup> William of Malsb. l. 3.

<sup>6</sup> 'Edmund Ironside, however, who was natural king by descent from the line of kings, begat Edward, and Edward begat Edgar, to whom of right the kingdom of the English belonged.'

of succession. William's title however was altogether as good as Harold's, he being a mere private subject, and an utter stranger to the royal blood. Edgar Atheling's undoubted right was overwhelmed by the violence of the times; though frequently asserted by the English nobility after the conquest, till such time as he died without issue: but all their attempts proved unsuccessful, and only served the more firmly to establish the crown in the family which had newly acquired it.

THIS conquest then by William of Normandy was, like that of Canute before, a forcible transfer of the crown of England into a new family: but, the crown being so transferred, all the inherent properties of the crown were with it transferred also. For, the victory obtained at Hastings not being<sup>f</sup> a victory over the nation collectively, but only over the person of Harold, the only right that the conqueror could pretend to acquire thereby, was the right to possess the crown of England, not to alter the nature of the government. And therefore, as the English laws still remained in force, he must necessarily take the crown subject to those laws, and with all its inherent properties; the first and principal of which was its descendibility. Here then we must drop our race of Saxon kings, at least for a while, and derive our descents from William the conqueror as from a new stock, who acquired by right of war (such as it is, yet still the dernier resort [last resource] of kings) a strong and undisputed title to the inheritable crown of England.

ACCORDINGLY it descended from him to his sons William II and Henry I. Robert, it must be owned, his eldest son, was kept out of possession by the arts and violence of his brethren; <9> who proceeded upon a notion, which prevailed for some time in the law of descents, that when the eldest son was already provided for (as Robert was constituted duke of Normandy by his father's will) in such a case the next brother was entitled to enjoy the rest of their father's inheritance. But, as he died without issue, Henry at last had a good title to the throne, whatever he might have at first.

STEPHEN of Blois, who succeeded him, was indeed the grandson of the conqueror, by Adelicia his daughter, and claimed the throne by a feeble kind of hereditary right; not as being the nearest of the male line, but as the nearest male <10> of the blood royal. The real right was in the empress Matilda or Maud, the daughter of Henry I; the rule of succession being (where women are admitted at all) that the daughter of a son shall be preferred to the son of a daughter. So that Stephen was little better than <11> a mere usurper; and the empress Maud did not fail to assert her right by the sword: which dispute was attended with various success, and <12> ended at last in a compromise, that Stephen should keep the crown, but that Henry the son of Maud should succeed him; as he afterwards accordingly did.

HENRY, the second of that name, <13> was the undoubted heir of William the conqueror; but he had also another connexion in blood, which endeared him still farther to the English. He was lineally descended from Edmund Ironside, the last of the Saxon race of hereditary kings. For Edward the outlaw, the son of Edmund Ironside, had (besides Edgar Atheling, who died without issue) a daughter Margaret, who was married to Malcolm king of Scotland; and in her the Saxon hereditary right resided. By Malcolm she had several children, and among the rest Matilda the wife of Henry I, who by him had the empress Maud, the mother of Henry II. Upon which account the Saxon line is in our histories frequently said to have been restored in his person: though in reality that right subsisted in the sons of Malcolm by queen Margaret; king Henry's best title being as heir to the conqueror.

<sup>f</sup> Hale, Hist. C. L. c. 5. Seld. review of tithes, c. 8.

FROM Henry II the crown descended to his eldest son Richard I, who dying childless, the right vested in his nephew Arthur, the son of Geoffrey his next brother; but John, the youngest son of king Henry, seised the throne; claiming, as appears from his charters, the crown by hereditary right<sup>g</sup>; that is to say, he was next of kin to the deceased king, being his surviving brother; whereas Arthur was removed one degree farther, being his brother's son, though by right of representation he stood in the place of his father Geoffrey. And however flimsy this title, and those of William Rufus and Stephen of Blois, may appear at this distance to us, after the law of descents hath now been settled for so many centuries, they were sufficient to puzzle the understandings of our brave, but unlettered, ancestors. Nor indeed can we wonder at the number of partizans, who espoused the pretensions of king John in particular; since even in the reign of his father, king Henry II, it was a point undetermined<sup>h</sup>, whether, even in common inheritances, the child of an elder brother should succeed to the land in right of representation, or the younger surviving brother in right of proximity of blood. Nor is it to this day decided in the collateral succession to the fiefs of the empire,<sup>7</sup> whether the order of the stocks, or the proximity of degree shall take place<sup>i</sup>. However, on the death of Arthur and his sister Eleanor without issue, a clear and indisputable title vested in Henry III the son of John: and from him to Richard the second, a succession of six generations, the crown descended in the true hereditary line. Under one of which race of princes<sup>k</sup>, we find it declared in parliament, "that the law of the crown of England is, and always hath been, that the children of the king of England, whether born in England, or elsewhere, ought to bear the inheritance after the death of their ancestors. Which law, our sovereign lord the king, the prelates, earls, and barons, and other great men, together with all the commons, in parliament assembled, do approve and affirm for ever."

195

UPON Richard the second's resignation of the crown, he having no children, the right resulted to the issue of his grandfather Edward III. That king had many children, besides his eldest, Edward the black prince of Wales, the father of Richard II: but to avoid confusion I shall only mention three; William his second son, who died without issue; Lionel duke of Clarence, his third son; and John of Gant duke of Lancaster, his fourth. By the rules of succession therefore the posterity of Lionel duke of Clarence were entitled to the throne, upon the resignation of king Richard; and had accordingly been declared by the king, many years before, the presumptive heirs of the crown;

<sup>g</sup> "Regni Angliae; quod nobis jure competit haereditario." [Of the kingdom of England; which falls to us by hereditary right.] Spelm. Hist. R. Joh. apud Wilkins. 354.

<sup>h</sup> Glanv. l. 7. c. 3.

<sup>i</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xxx. 512.

<sup>k</sup> Stat. 25 Edw. III. st. 2.

<sup>7</sup> Blackstone is referring to the vassals of the Holy Roman Empire, who had no lord but the Emperor.

which declaration was also confirmed in parliament<sup>l</sup>. But Henry duke of Lancaster, the son of John of Gant, having then a large army in the kingdom, the pretence of raising which was to recover his patrimony from the king, and to redress the grievances of the subject, it was impossible for any other title to be asserted with any safety; and he became king under the title of Henry IV. But, as sir Matthew Hale remarks<sup>m</sup>, though the people unjustly assisted Henry IV in his usurpation of the crown, yet he was not admitted thereto, until he had declared that he claimed, not as a conqueror, (which he very much inclined to do<sup>n</sup>) but as a successor, descended by right line of the blood royal; as appears from the rolls of parliament in those times. And in order to this he set up a shew of two titles: the one upon the pretence of being the first of the blood royal in the intire male line, whereas the duke of Clarence left only one daughter Philippa; from which female branch, by a marriage with Edmond Mortimer earl of March, the house of York descended: the other, by reviving an exploded rumour, first propagated by John of Gant, that Edmond earl of Lancaster (to whom Henry's mother was heiress) was in reality the elder brother of king Edward I; though his parents, on account of his personal deformity, had imposed him on the world for the younger: and therefore Henry would be intitled to the crown, either as successor to Richard II, in case the intire male line was allowed a preference to the female; or, even prior to that unfortunate prince, if the crown could descend through a female, while an intire male line was existing.

196 HOWEVER, as in Edward the third's time we find the parliament approving and affirming (14) the right of the crown, as before stated, so in the reign of Henry IV they actually exerted their right of new-settling the succession to the crown. And this was done by the statute 7 Hen. IV. c. 2. whereby it is enacted, "that the inheritance of the crown and realms of England and France, and all other the king's dominions, shall be set and remain<sup>o</sup> in the person of our sovereign lord the king, and in the heirs of his body issuing;" and prince Henry is declared heir apparent to the crown, to hold to him and the heirs of his body issuing, with remainder to lord Thomas, lord John, and lord Humphry, the king's sons, and the heirs of their bodies respectively. Which is indeed nothing more than the law would have done before, provided Henry the fourth had been a rightful king. It however serves to shew that it was then generally understood, 197 that the king and parliament had a right to new-model and regulate the succession to the crown. And we may observe, with what caution and delicacy the parliament then avoided declaring any sentiment of Henry's original title. However sir Edward Coke more than once expressly declares<sup>p</sup>, that at the time of passing this act the right of the crown was in the descent from Philippa, daughter and heir of Lionel duke of Clarence.

NEVERTHELESS the crown descended regularly from Henry IV to his son and grandson Henry V and VI; in the latter of whose reigns the house of York asserted their dormant title; and, after imbruing the kingdom in blood and confusion for <sup>l</sup> Sandford's geneal. hist. 246.

<sup>m</sup> Hist. C. L. c. 5.

<sup>n</sup> Seld. tit. hon. 1. 3.

<sup>o</sup> soit mys et demoerge.

<sup>p</sup> 4. Inst. 37, 205.

seven years together, at last established it in the person of Edward IV. At his accession to the throne, after a breach of the succession that continued for three descents, and above threescore years, the distinction of a king de jure [by right], and a king de facto [in fact] began to be first taken; in order to indemnify such as had submitted to the late establishment, and to provide for the peace of the kingdom by confirming all honors conferred, and all acts done, by those who were now called the usurpers, not tending to the disherison<sup>8</sup> of the rightful heir. In statute 1 Edw. IV. c. 1. the three Henrys are stiled, “late kings of England successively in dede, and not of ryght.” And, in all the charters which I have met with of king Edward, wherever he has occasion to speak of any of the line of Lancaster, he calls them “nuper de facto, et non de jure, reges Angliae [late kings of England in fact and not of right].”

EDWARD IV left two sons and a daughter; the eldest of which sons, king Edward V, enjoyed the regal dignity for a very short time, and was then deposed by Richard his unnatural uncle; who immediately usurped the royal dignity, having previously insinuated to the populace a suspicion of bastardy in the children of Edward IV, to make a shew of some hereditary title: after which he is generally believed to have murdered his two nephews; upon whose death the right of the crown devolved to their sister Elizabeth.

THE tyrannical reign of king Richard III gave occasion to Henry earl of Richmond 198 to assert his title to the crown. A title the most remote and unaccountable that was ever set up, and which nothing could have given success to, but the universal detestation of the then usurper Richard. For, besides that he claimed under a descent from John of Gant, whose title was now exploded, the claim (such as it was) was through John earl of Somerset, a bastard son, begotten by John of Gant upon Catherine Swinford. It is true, that, by an act of parliament 20 Ric. II, this son was, with others, legitimated and made inheritable to all lands, offices, and dignities, as if he had been born in wedlock: but still, with an express reservation of the crown, “excepta dignitate regali [except for the royal dignity]<sup>9</sup>.”

NOTWITHSTANDING all this, immediately after the battle of Bosworth field, he assumed the regal dignity; the right of the crown then being, as sir Edward Coke expressly declares<sup>r</sup>, in Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edward IV: and his possession was established by parliament, held the first year of his reign. In the act for which purpose, the parliament seems to have copied the caution of their predecessors in the reign of Henry IV; and therefore (as lord Bacon the historian of this reign observes) carefully avoided any recognition of Henry VII's right, which indeed was none at all; and the king would not have it by way of new law or ordinance, whereby a right might seem to be created and conferred upon him; and therefore a middle way was rather chosen, by way (as the noble historian expresses it) of establishment, and that under covert and indifferent words, “that the inheritance of the crown should rest, remain, and abide in king Henry VII and the heirs of his body:” thereby providing for the future, and at the same time acknowledging his present possession; but not determining either way, whether that possession was de jure or de facto merely. However he soon after married Elizabeth of York, the undoubted heiress of the conqueror, and thereby gained (as sir Edward Coke<sup>s</sup> declares) by much his best title 199 to the crown. Whereupon the act made in his favour was so much disregarded, that it never was printed in our statute books.

<sup>9</sup> 4 Inst. 36.

<sup>r</sup> 4 Inst. 37.

<sup>8</sup> Disherson: disinheritance, cutting from an inheritance.

HENRY the eighth, the issue of this marriage, succeeded to the crown by clear indisputable hereditary right, and transmitted it to his three children in successive order. But in his reign we at several times find the parliament busy in regulating the succession to the kingdom. And, first, by statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 12. which recites the mischiefs, which have and may ensue by disputed titles, because no perfect and substantial provision hath been made by law concerning the succession; and then enacts, that the crown shall be entailed to his majesty, and the sons or heirs males of his body; and in default of such sons to the lady Elizabeth (who is declared to be the king's eldest issue female, in exclusion of the lady Mary, on account of her supposed illegitimacy by the divorce of her mother queen Catherine) and to the lady Elizabeth's heirs of her body; and so on from issue female to issue female, and the heirs of their bodies, by course of inheritance according to their ages, as the crown of England hath been accustomed and ought to go, in case where there be heirs female of the same: and in default of issue female, then to the king's right heirs for ever. This single statute is an ample proof of all the four positions we at first set out with.

BUT, upon the king's divorce from Ann Boleyn, this statute was, with regard to the settlement of the crown, repealed by statute 28 Hen. VIII. c. 7. wherein the lady Elizabeth is also, as well as the lady Mary, bastardized, and the crown settled on the king's children by queen Jane Seymour, and his future wives; and, in defect of such children, then with this remarkable remainder, to such persons as the king by letters patent, or last will and testament, should limit and appoint the same. A vast power; but, notwithstanding, as it was regularly vested in him by the supreme legislative authority, it was therefore indisputably valid. But this power was never carried into execution; for by statute 35 Hen. VIII. c. 1. the king's two daughters are legitimated 200 again, and the crown is limited to prince Edward by name, after that to the lady Mary, and then to the lady Elizabeth, and the heirs of their respective bodies; which succession took effect accordingly, being indeed no other than the usual course of the law, with regard to the descent of the crown.

BUT lest there should remain any doubt in the minds of the people, through this jumble of acts for limiting the succession, by statute 1 Mar. p. 2. c. 1. queen Mary's hereditary right to the throne is acknowledged and recognized in these words: "the crown of these realms is most lawfully, justly, and rightly descended and come to the queen's highness that now is, being the very, true, and undoubted heir and inheritrix thereof." And again, upon the queen's marriage with Philip of Spain, in the statute which settles the preliminaries of that match<sup>t</sup>, the hereditary right to the crown is thus asserted and declared: “as touching the right of the queen’s inheritance in the realm and dominions of England, the children, whether male or female, shall succeed in them, according to the known laws, statutes, and customs of the same.” Which determination of the parliament, that the succession shall continue in the usual course, seems tacitly to imply a power of new-modelling and altering it, in case the legislature had thought proper.

<sup>s</sup> (15) Ibid.

<sup>t</sup> 1 Mar. p. 2 c. 2.

ON queen Elizabeth’s accession, her right is recognized in still stronger terms than her sister’s; the parliament acknowledging<sup>u</sup>, “that the queen’s highness is, and in very deed and of most mere right ought to be, by the laws of God, and the laws and statutes of this realm, our most lawful and rightful sovereign liege lady and queen; and that her highness is rightly, lineally, and lawfully descended and come of the blood royal of this realm of England; in and to whose princely person, and to the heirs of her body lawfully to be begotten, after her, the imperial crown and dignity of this realm doth belong.” And in the same reign, by statute 13 Eliz. c. 1. we find the right of parliament to direct the succession of the crown asserted in the most explicit words. “If any person shall hold, affirm, or maintain that the common laws of this realm, not altered by parliament, ought not to direct the right of the crown of England; or that the queen’s majesty, with and by the authority of parliament, is not able to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity, to limit and bind the crown of this realm, and the descent, limitation, inheritance, and government thereof;—such person, so holding, affirming, or maintaining, shall during the life of the queen be guilty of high treason; and after her decease shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and forfeit his goods and chattels.”

201

ON the death of queen Elizabeth, without issue, the line of Henry VIII became extinct. It therefore became necessary to recur to the other issue of Henry VII, by Elizabeth of York his queen: whose eldest daughter Margaret having married James IV king of Scotland, king James the sixth of Scotland, and of England the first, was the lineal descendant from that alliance. So that in his person, as clearly as in Henry VIII, centered all the claims of different competitors from the conquest downwards, he being indisputably the lineal heir of the conqueror. And, what is still more remarkable, in his person also centered the right of the Saxon monarchs, which had been suspended from the conquest till his accession. For, as was formerly observed, Margaret the sister of Edgar Atheling, the daughter of Edward the outlaw, and granddaughter of king Edmund Ironside, was the person in whom the hereditary right of the Saxon kings, supposing it not abolished by the conquest, resided. She married Malcolm king of Scotland; and Henry II, by a descent from Matilda their daughter, is generally called the restorer of the Saxon line. But it must be remembered, that Malcolm by his Saxon queen had sons as well as daughters; and that the royal family of Scotland from that time downwards were the offspring of Malcolm and Margaret. Of this royal family king James the first was the direct lineal heir, and therefore united in his person every possible claim by hereditary right to the English, as well as Scottish throne, being the heir both of Egbert and William the conqueror.

202

<sup>u</sup> Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 3.

AND it is no wonder that a prince of more learning than wisdom, who could deduce an hereditary title for more than eight hundred years, should easily be taught by the flatterers of the times to believe there was something divine in this right, and that the finger of providence was visible in its preservation. Whereas, though a wise institution, it was clearly a human institution; and the right inherent in him no natural, but a positive right. And in this and no other light was it taken by the English parliament; who by statute 1 Jac. I. c. 1. did “recognize and acknowlege, that immediately upon the dissolution and decease of Elizabeth late queen of England, the imperial crown thereof did by inherent birthright, and lawful and undoubted succession, descend and come to his most excellent majesty, as being lineally, justly, and lawfully, next and sole heir of the blood royal of this realm.” Not a word here of any right immediately derived from heaven: which, if it existed any where, must be sought for among the aborigines of the island, the antient Britons; among whose princes indeed some have gone to search it for him<sup>w</sup>.

203 BUT, wild and absurd as the doctrine of divine right most undoubtedly is, it is still more astonishing, that when so many human hereditary rights had centered in this king, his son and heir king Charles the first should be told by those infamous judges, who pronounced his unparalleled sentence, that he was an elective prince; elected by his people, and therefore accountable to them, in his own proper person, for his conduct. The confusion, instability, and madness, which followed the fatal catastrophe of that pious and unfortunate prince, will be a standing argument in favour of hereditary monarchy to all future ages; as they proved at last to the then deluded people: who, in order to recover that peace and happiness which for twenty years together they had lost, in a solemn parliamentary convention of the states restored the right heir of the crown. And in the proclamation for that purpose, which was drawn up and attended by both houses<sup>x</sup>, they declared, “that, according to their duty and allegiance, they did heartily, joyfully, and unanimously acknowlege and proclaim, that immediately upon the decease of our late sovereign lord king Charles, the imperial crown of these realms did by inherent birthright and lawful and undoubted succession descend and come to his most excellent majesty Charles the second, as being lineally, justly, and lawfully, next heir of the blood royal of this realm: and thereunto they most humbly and faithfully did submit and oblige themselves, their heirs and posterity for ever.”

THUS I think it clearly appears, from the highest authority this nation is acquainted with, that the crown of England hath been ever an hereditary crown; though subject to limitations by parliament. The remainder of this chapter will consist principally of those instances, wherein the parliament has asserted or exercised this right of altering and limiting the succession; a right which, we have seen, was before exercised and asserted in the reigns of Henry IV, Henry VII, Henry VIII, queen Mary, and queen Elizabeth.

<sup>w</sup> Elizabeth of York, the mother of queen Margaret of Scotland, was heiress of the house of Mortimer. And Mr Carte observes, that the house of Mortimer, in virtue of its descent from Gladys only sister to Lewellin ap Iorweth the great, had the true right to the principality of (16) Wales. iii. 705.

<sup>x</sup> Com. Journ. 8 May 1660.

THE first instance, in point of time, is the famous bill of exclusion, which raised such a ferment in the latter end of the reign of king Charles the second. It is well known, that the purport of this bill was to have set aside the king's brother and presumptive heir, the duke of York,<sup>9</sup> from the succession, on the score of his being a papist; that it passed the house of commons, but was rejected by the lords; the king having also declared beforehand, that he never would be brought to consent to it. And from this transaction we may collect two things: 1. That the crown was universally acknowledged to be hereditary; and the inheritance indefeasible unless by parliament: else it had been needless to prefer such a bill. 2. That the parliament had a power to have defeated the inheritance: else such a bill had been ineffectual. The commons acknowledged the hereditary right then subsisting; and the lords did not dispute the power, but merely the propriety, of an exclusion. However, as the bill took no effect, king James the second succeeded to the throne of his ancestors; and might have enjoyed it during the remainder of his life, but for his own infatuated conduct, which (with other concurring circumstances) brought on the revolution in 1688.

204

THE true ground and principle, upon which that memorable event proceeded, was an entirely new case in politics, which had never before happened in our history; the abdication of the reigning monarch, and the vacancy of the throne thereupon. It was not a defeazance of the right of succession, and a new limitation of the crown, by the king and both houses of parliament: it was the act of the nation alone, (17) upon an apprehension that there was no king in being. For in a full assembly of the lords and commons, met in convention<sup>10</sup> upon this apprehended vacancy, both houses<sup>y</sup> came to this resolution; "that king James the second, having endeavoured to subvert the constitution of the kingdom, by breaking the original contract between king and people; and, by the advice of jesuits and other wicked persons, having violated the fundamental laws; and having withdrawn himself out of this kingdom; has abdicated the government, and that the throne is thereby vacant." Thus ended at once, by this sudden and unexpected vacancy of the throne, the old line of succession; which from the conquest had lasted above six hundred years, and from the union of the heptarchy in king Egbert almost nine hundred. The facts themselves thus appealed to, the king's endeavours to subvert the constitution by breaking the original contract, his violation of the fundamental laws, and his withdrawing himself out of the kingdom, were evident and notorious: and the consequences drawn from these facts (namely, that they amounted to an abdication of the government; which abdication did not affect only the person of the king himself, but also all his heirs, and rendered the throne absolutely and completely vacant) it belonged to our ancestors to determine. For, whenever a question arises between the society at large and any magistrate vested with powers originally delegated by that society, it must be decided by the voice of the society itself: there is not upon earth any other tribunal to resort to. And that these consequences were fairly deduced from these facts, our ancestors have solemnly determined, in a full parliamentary convention representing the whole society. The

205

<sup>y</sup> Com. Journ. 7 Feb. 1688.

<sup>9</sup> The future James II.

<sup>10</sup> The convention parliament (1689), so called because it was not summoned by the king. See below, I. 148.

reasons upon which they decided may be found at large in the parliamentary proceedings of the times; and may be matter of instructive amusement for us to contemplate, as a speculative point of history. But care must be taken not to carry this enquiry farther, than merely for instruction or amusement. The idea, that the consciences of posterity were concerned in the rectitude of their ancestors' decisions, gave birth to those dangerous political heresies, which so long distracted the state, but at length are all happily extinguished. I therefore rather chuse to consider this great political measure, upon the solid footing of authority, than to reason in its favour from its justice, moderation, and expedience: because that might imply a right of dissenting or revolting from it, in case we should think it unjust, oppressive, or inexpedient. Whereas, our ancestors having most indisputably a competent jurisdiction to decide this great and important question, and having in fact decided it, it is now become our duty at this distance of time to acquiesce in their determination; being born under that establishment which was built upon this foundation, and obliged by every tie, religious as well as civil, to maintain it.

206 BUT, while we rest this fundamental transaction, in point of authority, upon grounds the least liable to cavil, we are bound both in justice and gratitude to add, that it was conducted with a temper and moderation which naturally arose from its equity; that, however it might in some respects go beyond the letter of our antient laws, (the reason of which will more fully appear hereafter<sup>z</sup>) it was agreeable to the spirit of our constitution, and the rights of human nature; and that though in other points (owing to the peculiar circumstances of things and persons) it was not altogether so perfect as might have been wished, yet from thence a new aera commenced, in which the bounds of prerogative and liberty have been better defined, the principles of government more thoroughly examined and understood, and the rights of the subject more explicitly guarded by legal provisions, than in any other period of the English history. In particular, it is worthy observation that the convention, in this their judgment, avoided with great wisdom the wild extremes into which the visionary theories of some zealous republicans would have led them. They held that this misconduct of king James amounted to an endeavour to subvert the constitution, and not to an actual subversion, or total dissolution of the government, according to the principles of Mr Locke<sup>a</sup>: which would have reduced the society almost to a state of nature; would have levelled all distinctions of honour, rank, offices, and property; would have annihilated the sovereign power, and in consequence have repealed all positive laws; and would have left the people at liberty to have erected a new system of state upon a new foundation of polity. They therefore very prudently voted it to amount to no more than an abdication of the government, and a consequent vacancy of the throne; whereby the government was allowed to subsist, though the executive magistrate was gone, and the kingly office to remain, though king James was no longer king. And thus the constitution was kept intire; which upon every sound principle of government must otherwise have fallen to pieces, had so principal and constituent a part as the royal authority been abolished, or even suspended.

<sup>z</sup> See chapter 7.

<sup>a</sup> on Gov. p. 2. c. 19.

THIS single postulatum, the vacancy of the throne, being once established, the rest that was then done followed almost of course. For, if the throne be at any time vacant (which may happen by other means besides that of abdication; as if all the bloodroyal should fail, without any successor appointed by parliament;) if, I say, a vacancy by any means whatsoever should happen, the right of disposing of this vacancy seems naturally to result to the lords and commons, the trustees and representatives of the nation. For there are no other hands in which it can so properly be intrusted; and there is a necessity of its being intrusted somewhere, else the whole frame of government must be dissolved and perish. The lords and commons having therefore determined this main fundamental article, that there was a vacancy of the throne, they proceeded to fill up that vacancy in such manner as they judged the most proper. And this was done by their declaration of 12 February 1688<sup>b</sup>, in the following manner: “that William and Mary, prince and princess of Orange, be, and be declared king and queen, to hold the crown and royal dignity during their lives, and the life of the survivor of them; and that the sole and full exercise of the regal power be only in, and executed by, the said prince of Orange, in the names of the said prince and princess, during their joint lives; and after their deceases the said crown and royal dignity to be to the heirs of the body of the said princess; and for default of such issue to the princess Anne of Denmark<sup>11</sup> and the heirs of her body; and for default of such issue to the heirs of the body of the said prince of Orange.”

PERHAPS, upon the principles before established, the convention might (if they pleased) have vested the regal dignity in a family intirely new, and strangers to the royal blood: but they were too well acquainted with the benefits of hereditary succession, and the influence which it has by custom over the minds of the people, to depart any farther from the antient line than temporary necessity and self-preservation required. They therefore settled the crown, first on king William and queen Mary, king James’s eldest daughter, for their joint lives; then on the survivor of them; and then on the issue of queen Mary: upon failure of such issue, it was limited to the princess Anne, king James’s second daughter, and her issue; and lastly, on failure of that, to the issue of king William, who was the grandson of Charles the first, and nephew as well as son in law of king James the second, being the son of Mary <20> his only sister. This settlement included all the protestant posterity of king Charles I, except such other issue as king James might at any time have, which was totally omitted through fear of a popish succession. And this order of succession took effect accordingly.

THESE three princes therefore, king William, queen Mary, and queen Anne, did not take the crown by hereditary right or descent, but by way of donation or purchase, as the lawyers call it; by which they mean any method of acquiring an estate otherwise than by descent. The new settlement did not merely consist in excluding king James, and the person pretended to be prince of Wales, and then suffering the crown to descend in the old hereditary chanel: for the usual course of descent was in some instances broken through; and yet the convention still kept it in their eye, and paid a great, though not total, regard to it. Let us see how the succession would have stood, if no abdication had happened, and king James had left no other issue than his two daughters queen Mary and queen Anne. It would have stood thus: queen Mary and her issue; queen Anne and her issue; king William and his issue. But we may remember, that queen Mary was only nominally queen, jointly with her husband king William, who alone had the regal power; and king William (21) was absolutely preferred to queen Anne, though his issue was postponed to hers. Clearly therefore these princes were successively in possession of the crown by a title different from the usual course of descent.

<sup>b</sup> Com. Journ. 12 Feb. 1688.

<sup>11</sup> The future Queen Anne was so styled after her marriage to Prince George of Denmark in 1683 and before her accession in 1702.

209 It was towards the end of king William's reign, when all hopes of any surviving issue from any of these princes died with the duke of Gloucester, that the king and parliament thought it necessary again to exert their power of limiting and appointing the succession, in order to prevent another vacancy of the throne; which must have ensued upon their deaths, as no farther provision was made at the revolution, than for (22) the issue of king William, queen Mary, and queen Anne. The parliament had previously by the statute of 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2. enacted, that every person who should be reconciled to, or hold communion with, the see of Rome, should profess the popish religion, or should marry a papist, should be excluded and for ever incapable to inherit, possess, or enjoy, the crown; and that in such case the people should be absolved from their allegiance, and the crown should descend to such persons, being protestants, as would have inherited the same, in case the person so reconciled, holding communion, professing, or marrying, were naturally dead. To act therefore consistently with themselves, and at the same time pay as much regard to the old hereditary line as their former resolutions would admit, they turned their eyes on the princess Sophia, electress and duchess dowager of Hanover, the most accomplished princess of her age<sup>c</sup>. For, upon the impending extinction of the protestant posterity of Charles the first, the old law of regal descent directed them to recur to the descendants of James the first; and the princess Sophia, (23) being the daughter of Elizabeth queen of Bohemia, who was the youngest daughter of James the first, was the nearest of the antient blood royal, who was not incapacitated by professing the popish religion. On her therefore, and the heirs of her body, being protestants, the remainder of the crown, expectant on the death of king William and queen Anne without issue, was settled by statute 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2. And at the same time it was enacted, that whosoever should hereafter come to the possession of the crown, should join in the communion of the church of England as by law established.

210 THIS is the last limitation of the crown that has been made by parliament: and these several actual limitations, from the time of Henry IV to the present, do clearly prove the power of the king and parliament to new-model or alter the succession. And indeed it is now again made highly penal to dispute it: for by the statute 6 Ann. c. 7. it is enacted, that if any person maliciously, advisedly, and directly, shall maintain by writing or printing, that the kings of this realm with the authority of parliament are not able to make laws to bind the crown and the descent thereof, he shall be guilty of high treason; or if he maintains the same by only preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, he shall incur the penalties of a praemunire.

<sup>c</sup> Sandford, in his genealogical history, published A.D. 1677, speaking (page 535) of the princesses Elizabeth, Louisa, and Sophia, daughters of the queen of Bohemia, says, the first was reputed the most learned, the second the greatest artist, and the last one of the most accomplished ladies in Europe. [Elisabeth of the Palatine (1618–80) was princess-abbess of Herford abbey in Saxony. A catholic convert, Louise Hollandine of the Palatine (1622–1709) became abbess of Maubuisson in France in 1664.]

THE princess Sophia dying before queen Anne, the inheritance thus limited descended on her son and heir king George the first; and, having on the death of the queen taken effect in his person, from him it descended to his late majesty king George the second; and from him to his grandson and heir, our present gracious sovereign, king George the third.

HENCE it is easy to collect, that the title to the crown is at present hereditary, though not quite so absolutely hereditary as formerly; and the common stock or ancestor, from whom the descent must be derived, is also different. Formerly the common stock was king Egbert; then William the conqueror; afterwards in James the first's time the two common stocks united, and so continued till the vacancy of the throne in 1688: now it is the princess Sophia, in whom the inheritance was vested by the new king and parliament. Formerly the descent was absolute, and the crown went to the next heir without any restriction: but now, upon the new settlement, the inheritance is conditional, being limited to such heirs only, of the body of the princess Sophia, as are protestant members of the church of England, and are married to none but protestants.

AND in this due medium consists, I apprehend, the true constitutional notion of the right of succession to the imperial crown of these kingdoms. The extremes, between which it steers, are each of them equally destructive of those ends for which societies were formed and are kept on foot. Where the magistrate, upon every succession, is elected by the people, and may by the express provision of the laws be deposed (if not punished) by his subjects, this may sound like the perfection of liberty, and look well enough when delineated on paper; but in practice will be ever productive of tumult, contention, and anarchy. And, on the other hand, divine indefeasible hereditary right, when coupled with the doctrine of unlimited passive obedience, is surely of all constitutions the most thoroughly slavish and dreadful. But when such an hereditary right, as our laws have created and vested in the royal stock, is closely interwoven with those liberties, which, we have seen in a former chapter, are equally the inheritance of the subject; this union will form a constitution, in theory the most beautiful of any, in practice the most approved, and, I trust, in duration the most permanent. It was the duty of an expounder of our laws to lay this constitution before the student in its true and genuine light: it is the duty of every good Englishman to understand, to revere, to defend it. 211

OF THE KING'S ROYAL FAMILY.

THE first and most considerable branch of the king's royal family, regarded by the laws of England, is the queen.

THE queen of England is either queen regent, queen consort, or queen dowager. The queen regent, regnant, or sovereign, is she who holds the crown in her own right; as the first (and perhaps the second) queen Mary, queen Elizabeth, and queen Anne; and such a one has the same powers, prerogatives, rights, dignities, and duties, as if she had been a king. This was observed in the entrance of the last chapter, and is expressly declared by statute 1 Mar. I st. 3. c. 1. But the queen consort is the wife of the reigning king; and she by virtue of her marriage is participant of divers prerogatives above other women<sup>a</sup>.

AND, first, she is a public person, exempt and distinct from the king; and not, like other married women, so closely connected as to have lost all legal or separate existence so long as the marriage continues. For the queen is of ability to purchase lands, and to convey them, to make leases, to grant copyholds, and do other acts of ownership, without the concurrence of her lord; which no other married woman can do<sup>b</sup>: a privilege as old as the Saxon æra<sup>c</sup>. She is also capable of taking a grant from the king, which no other wife is from her husband; and in this particular she agrees with the augusta [imperial majesty], or piissima regina conjux divi imperatoris [the most pious queen consort of the sacred emperor] of the Roman laws; who, according to Justinian<sup>d</sup>, was equally capable of making a grant to, and receiving one from, the emperor. The queen of England hath separate courts and officers distinct from the king's, not only in matters of ceremony, but even of law; and her attorney and solicitor general<sup>1</sup> are intitled to a place within the bar of his majesty's courts, together with the king's counsel<sup>e</sup>. (1) She may also sue and be sued alone, without joining her husband. She may also have a separate property in goods as well as lands, and has a right to dispose of them by will. In short, she is in all legal proceedings looked upon as a feme sole, and not as a feme covert; as a single, not as a married woman<sup>f</sup>. For which the reason given by sir Edward Coke is this: because the wisdom of the common law would not have the king (whose continual care and study is for the public, and circa ardua regni [concerning the arduous affairs of the kingdom]) to be troubled and disquieted on account of his wife's domestic affairs; and therefore it vests in the queen

<sup>a</sup> Finch. L. 86.

<sup>b</sup> [Bullock v Dibley] 4 Rep. 23.

<sup>c</sup> Seld. Jan. Angl. 1. 42.

<sup>d</sup> Cod. 5. 16. 26.

<sup>e</sup> Selden tit. hon. 1. 6. 7.

<sup>f</sup> Finch. L. 86. Co. Litt. 133.

<sup>1</sup> Blackstone himself served as solicitor-general to Queen Charlotte, George III's consort, from 1763 to 1770.

a power of transacting her own concerns, without the intervention of the king, as if she was an unmarried woman.

THE queen hath also many exemptions, and minute prerogatives. For instance: she pays no toll<sup>g</sup>; nor is she liable to any amercement in any court<sup>h</sup>. But in general, unless where the law has expressly declared her exempted, she is upon the same footing with other subjects; being to all intents and purposes the king's subject, and not his equal: in like manner as, in the imperial law, "augusta legibus soluta non est [the queen is not exempt from the laws]<sup>i</sup>."

THE queen hath also some pecuniary advantages, which form her a distinct revenue: as, in the first place, she is intitled to an antient perquisite called queen-gold or aurum reginae; which is a royal revenue, belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and due from every person who hath made a voluntary offering or fine to the king, amounting to ten marks or upwards, for and in consideration of any privileges, grants, licences, pardons, or other matter of royal favour conferred upon him by the king: and it is due in the proportion of one tenth part more, over and above the intire offering or fine made to the king; and becomes an actual debt of record to the queen's majesty by the mere recording the fine<sup>k</sup>. As, if an hundred marks of silver be given to the king for liberty to take in mortmain, or to have a fair, market, park, chase, or free warren; there the queen is intitled to ten marks in silver, or (what was formerly an equivalent denomination) to one mark in gold, by the name of queen-gold, or aurum reginae<sup>l</sup>. But no such payment is due for any aids or subsidies granted to the king in parliament or convocation; nor for fines imposed by courts on offenders, against their will; nor for voluntary presents to the king, without any consideration moving from him to the subject; nor for any sale or contract whereby the present revenues or possessions of the crown are granted away or diminished<sup>m</sup>.

214

⟨2⟩ THE revenue of our antient queens, before and soon after the conquest, seems to have consisted in certain reservations or rents out of the demesne lands of the crown, which were expressly appropriated to her majesty, distinct from the king. It is frequent in domesday-book, after specifying the rent due to the crown, to add likewise the quantity of gold or other renders reserved to the queen<sup>n</sup>. These were frequently appropriated to particular purposes; to buy wool for her majesty's use<sup>o</sup>, to

<sup>g</sup> Co. Litt. 133.

<sup>h</sup> Finch L. 185.

<sup>i</sup> Ff. 1. 3. 31.

<sup>k</sup> Pryn. Aur. Reg. 2.

<sup>l</sup> 12 Rep. 21. 4 Inst. 358.

<sup>m</sup> Ibid. Pryn. 6. Madox. hist. exch. 242.

<sup>n</sup> Bedefordscire. Maner. Lestone redd. per annum xxii lib. &c: ad opus reginae ii uncias auri.—Herefordscire. In Lene, &c, consuetud. ut praepositus manerii veniente domina sua (regina) in maner. praesentaret ei xviii oras denar. ut effret ipsa laeto animo. [Bedfordshire: The manor of Leighton [Buzzard] pays twenty-two pounds per annum, &c.; two ounces of gold for the Queen's use. Herefordshire: In Lene [i.e. Eardisland, nr Leominster], &c. it is the custom for the steward of the manor, on the arrival of his lady (the Queen) at the manor to congratulate her with a present of eighteen ounces of silver pennies.] Pryn. Append. to Aur. Reg. 2, 3.

<sup>o</sup> causa coadunandi lanam reginae. Domesd. ibid.

215 purchase oyl for her lamps<sup>p</sup>, or to furnish her attire from head to foot<sup>q</sup>, which was frequently very costly, as one single robe in the fifth year of Henry II stood the city of London in upwards of fourscore pounds<sup>r</sup>. A practice somewhat similar to that of the eastern countries, where whole cities and provinces were specifically assigned to purchase particular parts of the queen's apparel<sup>s</sup>. And, for a farther addition to her income, this duty of queen-gold is supposed to have been originally granted; those matters of grace and favour, out of which it arose, being frequently obtained from the crown by the powerful intercession of the queen. There are traces of its payment, though obscure ones, in the book of domesday and in the great pipe-roll of Henry the first<sup>t</sup>. In the reign of Henry the second the manner of collecting it appears to have been well understood, and it forms a distinct head in the antient dialogue of the exchequer<sup>u</sup> written in the time of that prince, and usually attributed to Gervase of Tilbury. From that time downwards it was regularly claimed and enjoyed by all the queen consorts of England till the death of Henry VIII; though after the accession of the Tudor family the collecting of it seems to have been much neglected: and, there being no queen consort afterwards till the accession of James I, a period of near sixty years, its very nature and quantity became then a matter of doubt: and, being referred by the king to <3> his then chief justices and chief baron, their report of it was so very unfavorable<sup>w</sup>, <4> that queen Anne (though she claimed it) yet never thought proper to exact it. In 1635, 11 Car. I, a time fertile of expedients for raising money upon 216 dormant precedents in our old records (of which ship-money was a fatal instance) the king, at the petition of his queen Henrietta Maria, issued out his writ for levying it; but afterwards purchased it of his consort at the price of ten thousand pounds; finding it, perhaps, too trifling and troublesome to levy. And when afterwards, at the restoration, by the abolition of the military tenures, and the fines that were consequent upon them, the little that legally remained of this revenue was reduced to almost nothing at all, in vain did Mr Prynne, by a treatise which does honour to his abilities as a painful and <5> judicious antiquarian, endeavour to excite queen Catherine to revive this antiquated claim.

ANOTHER antient perquisite belonging to the queen consort, mentioned by all our old writers<sup>x</sup>, and, therefore only, worthy notice, is this: that on the taking of a whale on the coasts, which is a royal fish, it shall be divided between the king and queen;

<sup>p</sup> Civitas London. Pro oleo ad lampad. reginae. Mag[ni]. Rot[uli]. Pip[ae]. Temp[ore]. Hen. II. ibid. [Great Roll of the Pipe during Henry II's reign.]

<sup>q</sup> Viccomes Berkeschire, xvi l. pro cappa reginae. [Sheriff of Berkshire, 16 li for the queen's headwear.] (Mag. Rot. Pip. 19–22 Hen. II ibid.) Civitas Lund. cordubanario reginae xxs. Mag. Rot. 2 Hen. II. Madox hist. exch. 419.

<sup>r</sup> Pro roba ad opus reginae, quater xx l. & vi s. & viii d. Mag. Rot. 5 Hen. II. ibid. 250.

<sup>s</sup> Solere aiunt barbaros reges Persarum ac Syrorum—uxoribus civitates attribuere, hoc modo; haec civitas mulieri redimiculum praebeat, haec in collum, haec in crines, & c. [They say that the barbarian kings of Persia and Syria were accustomed to assess cities for their wives in this manner: one city was to provide her head-dress, another the ornaments for her neck, and the third those for her hair, & c.] Cic. in Verrem. lib. 3. c. 33.

<sup>t</sup> See Madox Discepiat. epistolar. 74. Pryn. Aur. Regin. Append. 5.

<sup>u</sup> [Dialogus de Scaccario (c. 1177) in Madox,] lib. 2. c. 26.

<sup>w</sup> Mr Prynne, with some appearance of reason, insinuates, that their researches were very superficial. Aur. Reg. 125.

<sup>x</sup> Bracton, l. 3. c. 3. Britton, c. 17. Fleta, l. 1. c. 45 & 46.

the head only being the king's property, and the tail of it the queen's. "De sturgione observetur, quod rex illum habebit integrum: de balena vero sufficit, si rex habeat caput, et regina caudam [Of the sturgeon be it known that the king shall have the whole: but with respect to a whale it is sufficient if the king have the head and the queen the tail]." The reason of this whimsical division, as assigned by our antient records<sup>y</sup>, was, to furnish the queen's wardrobe with whalebone.

BUT farther: though the queen is in all respects a subject, yet, in point of the security of her life and person, she is put on the same footing with the king. It is equally treason (by the statute 25 Edw. III.) to compass or imagine the death of our lady the king's companion, as of the king himself: and to violate, or defile, the queen consort, amounts to the same high crime; as well in the person committing the fact, as in the queen herself, if consenting. A law of Henry the eighth<sup>z</sup> made it treason also for any woman, who was not a virgin, to marry the king without informing him thereof. But this law was soon after repealed; it trespassing too strongly, as well on natural justice, as female modesty. If however the queen be accused of any species of treason, she shall (whether consort or dowager) be <6> tried by the house of peers, as queen Ann Boleyn was in 28 Hen. VIII. 217

THE husband of a queen regnant, as prince George of Denmark was to queen Anne, is her subject; and may be guilty of high treason against her: but, in the instance of conjugal fidelity, he is not subjected to the same penal restrictions. For which the reason seems to be, that, if a queen consort is unfaithful to the royal bed, this may debase or bastardize the heirs to the crown; but no such danger can be consequent on the infidelity of the husband to a queen regnant.

A QUEEN dowager is the widow of the king, and as such enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort. But it is not high treason to conspire her death; or to violate her chastity, for the same reason as was before alleged, because the succession to the crown is not thereby endangered. Yet still, pro dignitate regali [for the royal dignity], no man can marry a queen dowager without special licence from the king, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. This sir Edward Coke<sup>a</sup> tells us was enacted in parliament in 6 Hen. VI, though the statute be not in print. But she, though an alien born, shall still be intitled to dower after the king's demise, which no other alien is<sup>b</sup>. A queen dowager, when married again to a subject, doth not lose her regal dignity, as peeresses dowager do their peerage when they marry commoners. For Katherine, queen dowager of Henry V, though she married a private gentleman, Owen ap Meredith ap Theodore, commonly called Owen Tudor; yet, by the name of Katherine queen of England, maintained an action against the bishop of Carlisle. And so <8> the queen of Navarre<sup>2</sup> marrying with Edmond, brother to king Edward the first, maintained an action of dower by the name of queen of Navarre<sup>c</sup>.

<sup>y</sup> Pryn. Aur. Reg. 127.

<sup>z</sup> Stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 21.

<sup>a</sup> <7> 2 Inst. 18.

<sup>b</sup> Co. Litt. 31 b.

<sup>c</sup> 2 Inst. 50.

<sup>2</sup> Blanche of Artois (c. 1248–1302), married Edmund, earl of Lancaster, c. 1275.

218 THE prince of Wales, or heir apparent to the crown, and also his royal consort, and the princess royal, or eldest daughter of the king, are likewise peculiarly regarded by the laws. For, by statute 25 Edw. III, to compass or conspire the death of the former, or to violate the chastity of either of the latter, are as much high treason, as to conspire the death of the king, or violate the chastity of the queen. And this upon the same reason, as was before given; because the prince of Wales is next in succession to the crown, and to violate his wife might taint the blood royal with bastardy: and the eldest daughter of the king is also alone inheritable to the crown, in failure of issue male, and therefore more respected by the laws than any of her younger sisters; insomuch that upon this, united with other (feodal) principles, while our military tenures were in force, the king might levy an aid for marrying his eldest daughter, and her only. The heir apparent to the crown is usually made prince of Wales and earl of Chester, by special creation, and investiture; but, being the king's eldest son, he is by inheritance duke of Cornwall, without any new <9> creation<sup>d</sup>.

THE younger sons and daughters of the <10> king, who are not in the immediate line of succession, are little farther regarded by the laws, than to give them precedence before all peers and public officers as well ecclesiastical as temporal. This is done by the statute 31 Hen. VIII. c. 10. which enacts that no person, except the king's children, shall presume to sit or have place at the side of the cloth of estate in the parliament chamber; and that certain great officers therein named shall have precedence above all dukes, except only such as shall happen to be the king's son, brother, uncle, nephew (which sir Edward Coke<sup>e</sup> explains to signify grandson or nepos) or brother's or <11> sister's son. And in 1718, upon a question referred to all the judges by king George I, 219 it was resolved by the opinion of ten against the other two, that the education and care of all the king's grandchildren <12> while minors, and the care and approbation of their marriages, when grown up, did belong of right to his majesty as king of this realm, <13> during their father's life<sup>f</sup>. And this may suffice for the notice, <14> taken by law, of his majesty's royal family.

<sup>d</sup> [The Prince's case] 8 Rep. 1. Seld. titl. of hon. 2. 5.

<sup>e</sup> 4 Inst. 362.

<sup>f</sup> [The Grand Opinion for the Prerogative concerning the Royal Family] Fortesc. Al[and]. 401–440.

OF THE COUNCILS BELONGING TO THE KING.

THE third point of view, in which we are to consider the king, is with regard to his councils. For, in order to assist him in the discharge of his duties, the maintenance of his dignity, and the exertion of his prerogative, the law hath assigned him a diversity of councils to advise with.

1. THE first of these is the high court of parliament, whereof we have already treated at large.

2. SECONDLY, the peers of the realm are by their birth hereditary counsellors of the crown, and may be called together by the king to impart their advice in all matters of importance to the realm, either in time of parliament, or, which hath been their principal use, when there is no parliament in being<sup>a</sup>. Accordingly Bracton<sup>b</sup>, speaking of the nobility of his time, says they might properly be called “consules, a consulendo; reges enim tales sibi associant ad consulendum [consuls, from advising; for kings associate such with themselves for taking advice].” And in our law books<sup>c</sup> it is laid down, that peers are created for two reasons; 1. Ad consulendum, 2. Ad defendendum regem [for advising and defending the king]: (1) for which reasons the law gives them certain great and high privileges; such as freedom from arrests, &c, even when no parliament is sitting: (2) because the law intends, that they are always assisting the king with their counsel for the commonwealth; or keeping the realm in safety by their prowess and valour. 221

INSTANCES of conventions of the peers, to advise the king, have been in former times very frequent; though now fallen into disuse, by reason of the more regular meetings of parliament. Sir Edward Coke<sup>d</sup> gives us an extract of a record, 5 Hen. IV, concerning an exchange of lands between the king and the earl of Northumberland, wherein the value of each was agreed to be settled by advice of parliament (if any should be called before the feast of St Lucia)<sup>1</sup> or otherwise by advice of the grand council (of peers) which the king promises to assemble before the said feast, in case no parliament shall be called. Many other instances of this kind of meeting are to be found under our antient kings: though the formal method of convoking them had been so long left off, that when king Charles I in 1640 issued out writs under the great seal to call a great council of all the peers of England to meet and attend his majesty

<sup>a</sup> Co. Litt. 110.

<sup>b</sup> l. 1. c. 8.

<sup>c</sup> [Nevil's case] 7 Rep. 34. [Earl of Shrewsbury's case] 9 Rep. 49. [Countess of Shrewsbury's case] 12 Rep. 96.

<sup>d</sup> 1 Inst. 110.

<sup>1</sup> St Lucy's Day, 13 December.

at York, previous to the meeting of the long parliament, the earl of Clarendon<sup>e</sup> mentions it as a new invention, not before heard of; that is, as he explains himself, so old, that it had not been practiced in some hundreds of years. But, though there had not so long before been an instance, nor has there been any since, of assembling them in so solemn a manner, yet, in cases of emergency, our princes have at several times thought proper to call for and consult as many of the nobility as could easily be got together: as was particularly the case with king James the second, after the landing of the prince of Orange; and with the prince of Orange himself, before he called that convention parliament, which afterwards called him to the throne.

222 BESIDES this general meeting, it is usually looked upon to be the right of each particular peer of the realm, to demand an audience of the king, and to lay before him, with decency and respect, such matters as he shall judge of importance to the public weal. And therefore, in the reign of Edward II, it was made an article of impeachment in parliament against the two Hugh Spencers, father and son, for which they were banished the kingdom, “that they by their evil covin<sup>2</sup> would not suffer the great men of the realm, the king’s good counsellors, to speak with the king, or to come near him; but only in the presence and hearing of the said Hugh the father and Hugh the son, or one of them, and at their will, and according to such things as pleased them<sup>f</sup>”

3. A THIRD council belonging the king, are, according to sir Edward Coke<sup>g</sup>, his judges of the courts of law, for law matters. And this appears frequently in our statutes, particularly 14 Ed. III. c. 5. and in other books of law. So that when the king’s council is mentioned generally, it must be defined, particularized, and understood, secundum subjectam materiam [according to the subject matter]; and, if the subject be of a legal nature, then by the king’s council is understood his council for matters of law; namely, his judges. Therefore when by statute 16 Ric. II. c. 5. it was made a high offence to import into this kingdom any papal bulles, or other processes from Rome; and it was enacted, that the offenders should be attached by their bodies, and brought before the king and his council to answer for such offence; here, by the expression of king’s council, were understood the king’s judges of his courts of justice, the subject matter being legal: this being the general way of interpreting the word, council<sup>h</sup>.

223 4. BUT the principal council belonging to the king is his privy council, which is generally called, by way of eminence, the council. And this, according to sir Edward Coke’s description of it<sup>i</sup>, is a noble, honorable, and reverend assembly, of the king and such as he wills to be of his privy council, in the king’s court or palace. The king’s will is the sole constituent of a privy counsellor; and this also regulates their number, which of antient time was twelve or thereabouts. Afterwards it increased to so large

<sup>e</sup> Hist. b. 2.

<sup>f</sup> 4 Inst. 53.

<sup>g</sup> 1 Inst. 110.

<sup>h</sup> 3 Inst. 125.

<sup>i</sup> 4 Inst. 53.

<sup>2</sup> Covin: a conspiracy, or private agreement with sinister connotations.

a number, that it was found inconvenient for secrecy and dispatch; and therefore king Charles the second in 1679 limited it to thirty: whereof fifteen were to be the principal officers of state, and those to be counsellors, virtute officii [by virtue of their office]; and the other fifteen were composed of ten lords and five commoners of the king's choosing<sup>k</sup>. But since that time the number has been much augmented, and now continues indefinite. At the same time also, the antient office of lord president of the council was revived in the person of Anthony earl of Shaftsbury; an officer, that by the statute of 31 Hen. VIII. c. 10. has precedence next after the lord chancellor and lord treasurer.

PRIVY counsellors are made by the king's nomination, without either patent or grant; and, on taking the necessary oaths, they become immediately privy counsellors during the life of the king that chooses them, but subject to removal at his discretion.

THE duty of a privy counsellor appears from the oath of office<sup>l</sup>, which consists of seven articles: 1. To advise the king according to the best of his cunning and discretion. 2. To advise for the king's honour and good of the public, without partiality through affection, love, meed, doubt, or dread. 3. To keep the king's counsel secret. 4. To avoid corruption. 5. To help and strengthen the execution of what shall be there resolved. 6. To withstand all persons who would attempt the contrary. And, lastly, in general, 7. To observe, keep, and do all that a good and true counsellor ought to do to his sovereign lord.

THE power of the privy council is to enquire into all offences against the government, and (3) to commit the offenders into custody, in order to take their trial in some of the courts of law. (4) But their jurisdiction is only to enquire, and not to punish: and the persons committed by them are entitled to their habeas corpus by statute 16 Car. I. c. 10. as much as if committed by an ordinary justice of the peace. And, by the same statute, the court of starchamber, and the court of requests, both of which consisted of privy counsellors, were dissolved; and it was declared illegal for them to take cognizance of any matter of property, belonging to the subjects of this kingdom. But, in plantation or admiralty causes, which arise out of the jurisdiction of this kingdom, and in matters of (5) lunacy and (6) ideocy (being a special flower of the prerogative) with regard to these, although they may eventually involve questions of extensive property, the privy council continues to have cognizance, (7) being the court of appeal in such causes: or, rather, the appeal lies to (8) the king's majesty himself, assisted by his privy (9) council. 224

As to the qualifications of members to sit at this board: any natural born subject of England is capable of being a member of the privy council; taking the proper oaths for security of the government, and the test for security of the church. But, in order to prevent any persons under foreign attachments from insinuating themselves into this important trust, as happened in the reign of king William in many instances,<sup>3</sup> it is enacted by the act of settlement<sup>m</sup>, that no person born out of the dominions of the crown of England, unless born of English parents, even though naturalized by parliament, shall be capable of being of the privy council.

<sup>k</sup> Temple's Mem. part 3.

<sup>l</sup> 4 Inst. 54.

<sup>3</sup> William III: a reference to his continued reliance on Dutch councillors and favourites, notably Willem Bentinck, created earl of Portland 1689.

225 (10) THE privileges of privy counsellors, as such, consist principally in the security which the law has given them against attempts and conspiracies to destroy their lives. For, by statute 3 Hen. VII. c. 14. if any of the king's servants, of his household, conspire or imagine to take away the life of a privy counsellor, it is felony, though nothing be done upon it. (11) And the reason of making this statute, sir Edward Coke<sup>n</sup> tells us, was because such servants have greater and readier means, either by night or by day, to destroy such as be of great authority, and near about the king: and such a conspiracy was, just before this parliament, made by some of king Henry the seventh's household servants, and great mischief was like to have ensued thereupon. This extends only to the king's menial servants. But the statute 9 Ann. c. 16. goes farther, and enacts, that (12) any persons that shall unlawfully attempt to kill, or shall unlawfully assault, and strike, or wound, any privy counsellor in the execution of his office, (13) shall be felons, and suffer death as such. This statute was made upon the daring attempt of the sieur Guiscard, who stabbed Mr Harley, afterwards earl of Oxford, with a penknife, when under examination for high crimes in a committee of the privy council.<sup>4</sup>

THE dissolution of the privy council depends upon the king's pleasure; and he may, whenever he thinks proper, discharge any particular member, or the whole of it, and appoint another. By the common law also it was dissolved ipso facto by the king's demise; as deriving all its authority from him. But now, to prevent the inconveniences of having no council in being at the accession of a new prince, it is enacted by statute 6 Ann. c. 7 that the privy council shall continue for six months after the demise of the crown, unless sooner determined by the successor.

<sup>m</sup> Stat. 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2.

<sup>n</sup> 3 Inst. 38.

---

<sup>4</sup> 8 March 1711: Harley (lord treasurer) was severely wounded, but recovered.

OF THE KING'S DUTIES.

I PROCEED next to the duties, incumbent on the king by our constitution; in consideration of which duties his dignity and prerogative are established by the laws of the land: it being a maxim in the law, that protection and subjection are reciprocal<sup>a</sup>. And these reciprocal duties are what, I apprehend, were meant by the convention in 1688, when they declared that king James had broken the original contract between king and people. But however, as the terms of that original contract were in some measure disputed, being alleged to exist principally in theory, and to be only deducible by reason and the rules of natural law; in which deduction different understandings might very considerably differ; it was, after the revolution, judged proper to declare these duties expressly; and to reduce that contract to a plain certainty. So that, whatever doubts might be formerly raised by weak and scrupulous minds about the existence of such an original contract, they must now entirely cease; especially with regard to every prince, who has reigned since the year 1688.

THE principal duty of the king is, to govern his people according to law. Nec regibus infinita aut libera potestas [the power of kings should be neither free nor unlimited], was the constitution of our German ancestors on the continent<sup>b</sup>. And this is not only consonant to the principles of nature, of liberty, of reason, and of society, but has 227 always been esteemed an express part of the common law of England, even when prerogative was at the highest. "The king," saith Bracton<sup>c</sup>, who wrote under Henry III, "ought not to be subject to man, but to God, and to the law; for the law maketh the king. Let the king therefore render to the law, what the law has invested in him with regard to others; dominion, and power: for he is not truly king, where will and pleasure rules, and not the law." And again<sup>d</sup>, "the king also hath a superior, namely God, and also the law, by which he was made a king." Thus Bracton: and Fortescue also<sup>e</sup>, having first well distinguished between a monarchy absolutely and despotically regal, which is introduced by conquest and violence, and a political or civil monarchy, which arises from mutual consent; (of which last species he asserts the government of England to be) immediately lays it down as a principle, that "the king of England must rule his people according to the decrees of the laws thereof: insomuch that he is bound by an oath at his coronation to the observance and keeping of his own laws." But, to obviate all doubts and difficulties concerning this matter, it is expressly declared by statute 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2. that "the laws of England are the birthright of the people thereof; and all the kings and queens who shall ascend the throne of this

<sup>a</sup> [Calvin's case] 7 Rep. 5.

<sup>b</sup> Tac. de M. G. c. 7.

<sup>c</sup> l. 1. c. 8.

<sup>d</sup> l. 2. c. 16. §. 3.

<sup>e</sup> c. 9. & 34.

realm ought to administer the government of the same according to the said laws; and all their officers and ministers ought to serve them respectively according to the same: and therefore all the laws and statutes of this realm, for securing the established religion, and the rights and liberties of the people thereof, and all other laws and statutes of the same now in force, <sup>(1)</sup> are by his majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons, and by authority of the same, ratified and confirmed accordingly.”

228 AND, as to the terms of the original contract between king and people, these I apprehend to be now couched in the coronation oath, which by the statute 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 6. is to be administred to every king and queen, who shall succeed to the imperial crown of these realms, by one of the archbishops or bishops of the realm, in the presence of all the people; who on their parts do reciprocally take the oath of allegiance to the crown. This coronation oath is conceived in the following terms:

“The archbishop or bishop shall say, Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this kingdom of England; and the dominions thereto belonging, according to the statutes in parliament agreed on, and the laws and customs of the same?—The king or queen shall say, I solemnly promise so to do.

Archbishop or bishop. Will you to your power cause law and justice, in mercy, to be executed in all your judgments?—King or queen. I will.

Archbishop or bishop. Will you to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the gospel, and the protestant reformed religion established by the law? And will you preserve unto the bishops and clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain unto them, or any of them?—King or queen. All this I promise to do.

After this the king or queen, laying his or her hand upon the holy gospels, shall say, The things which I have here before promised I will perform and keep: so help me God. And then shall kiss the book.”

229 THIS is the form of the coronation oath, as it is now prescribed by our laws: the principal articles of which appear to be at least as antient as the mirror of justices<sup>f</sup>, and even as the time of Bracton<sup>g</sup>: but the wording of it was changed at the revolution, because (as the statute alleges) the oath itself had been framed in doubtful words and expressions, with relation to antient laws and constitutions at this time unknown<sup>h</sup>.

<sup>f</sup> cap. 1. §. 2.

<sup>g</sup> l. 3. tr. 1. c. 9.

<sup>h</sup> In the old folio abridgment of the statutes [Abbreviamentum statutorum], printed by Lettou and Machlinia in the reign of Edward IV, (penes me) [in my possession] there is preserved a copy of the old coronation oath; which, as the book is extremely scarce, I will here transcribe. Ceo est le serement que le roy jurre a soun coronement: que il gardera et meintenera lez droitez et lez franchisez de seynt esglise grauntez auncienment dez droitez roys christiens dEngleterre, et quil gardera toutes sez terre honours et dignitees droiturelx et franks del coron du roialme d Engleterre en tout maner dientierte sanz null maner damenusement, et lez droitez dispergez dilapidez ou perduz de la corone a soun poiair rappeller en launcien estate, et quil gardera le peas de seynt esglise et al clergie et al people de bon accorde, et quil face faire en toutes sez jugementez owel et droit justice oue discretion et misericorde, et quil grauntera a tenure lez leyes et custumes du roialme, et a soun poiair lez face garder et affermer que lez gentez du people avont faitez et estiez, et les malveys leyz et custumes de tout oustera, et ferme peas et establie al people de soun roialme en ceo garde

However, in what form soever it be conceived, this is most indisputably a fundamental and original express contract; though doubtless the duty of protection is impliedly as much incumbent on the sovereign before coronation as after: in the same manner as allegiance to the king becomes the duty of the subject immediately on the descent of the crown, before he has taken the oath of allegiance, or whether he ever takes it at all. This reciprocal duty of the subject will be considered in its proper place. At present we are only to observe, that in the king's part of this original contract are expressed all the duties that a monarch can owe to his people; viz. to govern according to law: to execute judgment in mercy: and to maintain the established <3> religion.

esgardera a soun poiair: come Dieu luy aide. [This is the oath which the king swears at his coronation; that he will keep and maintain the rights and franchises of holy church granted anciently by the rightful Christian kings of England, and that he will keep all the lands, honours, and rightful and free dignities of the crown of the kingdom of England in all respects entire, without any kind of diminution, and recall to their ancient state, as far as in him lies, all rights dispersed and diminished or lost to the crown, and that he will keep the peace of Holy Church, and the clergy and people of good will; and that he will have given in all his judgments equal and right justice with discretion and mercy and that he will agree to keep all the laws and customs of the realm and so far as he can will confirm and keep those which the men of the people have made and established, and will wholly remove all bad laws and customs, and will, in all respects, as far as he can, maintain a firm and established peace for the people of his kingdom. So help him God.] Tit. sacramentum regis. <2> fol. m. ij.

OF THE KING'S PREROGATIVE.

IT was observed in a former chapter<sup>a</sup>, that one of the principal bulwarks of civil liberty, or (in other words) of the British constitution, was the limitation of the king's prerogative by bounds so certain and notorious, that it is impossible he should ever exceed them, without the consent of the people, on the one hand; or without, on the other, a violation of that original contract, which in all states impliedly, and in ours most expressly, subsists between the prince and the subject. It will now be our business to consider this prerogative minutely; to demonstrate its necessity in general; and to mark out in the most important instances its particular extent and restrictions: from which considerations this conclusion will evidently follow, that the powers which are vested in the crown by the laws of England, are necessary for the support of society; and do not intrench any farther on our natural liberties, than is expedient for the maintenance of our civil.

231 THERE cannot be a stronger proof of that genuine freedom, which is the boast of this age and country, than the power of discussing and examining, with decency and respect, the limits of the king's prerogative. A topic, that in some former ages was thought too delicate and sacred to be profaned by the pen of a subject. It was ranked among the arcana imperii [secrets of the empire]; and, like the mysteries of the bona dea [good goddess], was not suffered to be pried into by any but such as were initiated in its service: because perhaps the exertion of the one, like the solemnities of the other, would not bear the inspection of a rational and sober enquiry. The glorious queen Elizabeth herself made no scruple to direct her parliaments to abstain from discoursing of matters of state<sup>b</sup>; and it was the constant language of this favorite princess and her ministers, that even that august assembly "ought not to deal, to judge, or to meddle, with her majesty's prerogative royal<sup>c</sup>." And her successor, king James the first, who had imbibed high notions of the divinity of regal sway, more than once laid it down in his speeches, that "as it is atheism and blasphemy in a creature to dispute what the deity may do, so it is presumption and sedition in a subject to dispute what a king may do in the height of his power: good christians, he adds, will be content with God's will, revealed in his word; and good subjects will rest in the king's will, revealed in his law<sup>d</sup>."

BUT, whatever might be the sentiments of some of our princes, this was never the language of our antient constitution and laws. The limitation of the regal authority was a first and essential principle in all the Gothic systems of government established in Europe; though gradually driven out and overborne, by violence and chicane, in

<sup>a</sup> chap. 1. page 137 [I. 95].

<sup>b</sup> Dewes. 479.

<sup>c</sup> Ibid. 645.

<sup>d</sup> King James's works. 557, 531.

most of the kingdoms on the continent. We have seen, in the preceding chapter, the sentiments of Bracton and Fortescue, at the distance of two centuries from each other. And sir Henry Finch, under Charles the first, after the lapse of two centuries more, though he lays down the law of prerogative in very strong and emphatical terms, yet qualifies it with a general restriction, in regard to the liberties of the people. “The king hath a prerogative in all things, that are not injurious to the subject; for in them all it must be remembered, that the king’s prerogative stretcheth not to the doing of any wrong<sup>e</sup>.” Nihil enim aliud potest rex, nisi id solum quod de jure potest 232 [For the king can do no more than what he is able to do by right]<sup>f</sup>. And here it may be some satisfaction to remark, how widely the civil law differs from our own, with regard to the authority of the laws over the prince, or (as a civilian would rather have expressed it) the authority of the prince over the laws. It is a maxim of the English law, as we have seen from Bracton, that “rex debet esse sub lege, quia lex facit regem [the king should be subject to the law, because the law makes the king]:” the imperial law will tell us, that “in omnibus, imperatoris excipitur fortuna; cui ipsas leges Deus subjecit [in all things the emperor’s interest is reserved; to him God has made the laws themselves subject]<sup>g</sup>.” We shall not long hesitate to which of them to give the preference, as most conducive to those ends for which societies were framed, and are kept together; especially as the Roman lawyers themselves seem to be sensible of the unreasonableness of their own constitution. “Decet tamen principem,” says Paulus,<sup>1</sup> “servare leges, quibus ipse solutus est [nevertheless it becomes a prince to observe those laws from which he is himself exempt]<sup>h</sup>.” This is at once laying down the principle of despotic power, and at the same time acknowledging its absurdity.

By the word prerogative we usually understand that special pre-eminence, which the king hath, over and above all other persons, and out of the ordinary course of the common law, in right of his regal dignity. It signifies, in its etymology, (from prae [before] and rogo [I ask]) something that is required or demanded before, or in preference to, all others. And hence it follows, that it must be in its nature singular and eccentric; that it can only be applied to those rights and capacities which the king enjoys alone, in contradistinction to others, and not to those which he enjoys in common with any of his subjects: for if once any one prerogative of the crown could be held in common with the subject, it would cease to be prerogative any longer. And therefore Finch<sup>i</sup> lays it down as a maxim, that the prerogative is that law in case of the king, which is law in no case of the subject.

PREROGATIVES are either direct or incidental. The direct are such positive substantial parts of the royal character and authority, as are rooted in and spring from the king’s political person, considered merely by itself, without reference to any other extrinsic circumstance; as, the right of sending ambassadors, of creating peers, and of making 233

<sup>e</sup> Finch. L. 84, 85.

<sup>f</sup> Bract. l. 3. tr. 1. c. 9 [recte l. 1 c. 8].

<sup>g</sup> Nov. 105. §. 2.

<sup>h</sup> Ff. 32. 1. 23.

<sup>i</sup> Finch. L. 85.

<sup>1</sup> i.e. Julius Paulus, Roman jurist.

war or peace. But such prerogatives as are incidental bear always a relation to something else, distinct from the king's person; and are indeed only exceptions, in favour of the crown, to those general rules that are established for the rest of the community: such as, that no costs shall be recovered against the king; that the king can never be a joint-tenant; and that his debt shall be preferred before a debt to any of his subjects. These, and an infinite number of other instances, will better be understood, when we come regularly to consider the rules themselves, to which these incidental prerogatives are exceptions. And therefore we will at present only dwell upon the king's substantive or direct prerogatives.

THESE substantive or direct prerogatives may again be divided into three kinds: being such as regard, first, the king's royal character; secondly, his royal authority; and, lastly, his royal income. These are necessary, to secure reverence to his person, obedience to his commands, and an affluent supply for the ordinary expenses of government; without all of which it is impossible to maintain the executive power in due independence and vigour. Yet, in every branch of this large and extensive dominion, our free constitution has interposed such seasonable checks and restrictions, as may curb it from trampling on those liberties, which it was meant to secure and establish. The enormous weight of prerogative (if left to itself, as in (1) arbitrary government it is) spreads havoc and destruction among all the inferior movements: but, when (2) balanced and bridled (as with us) by its proper counterpoise, timely and judiciously applied, its operations are then (3) equable and regular, it invigorates the whole machine, and enables every part to answer the end of its construction.

234 IN the present chapter we shall only consider the two first of these divisions, which relate to the king's political character and authority; or, in other words, his dignity and regal power; to which last the name of prerogative is frequently narrowed and confined. The other division, which forms the royal revenue, will require a distinct examination; according to the known distribution of the feudal writers, who distinguish the royal prerogatives into the majora and minora regalia [greater and lesser regalities], in the latter of which classes the rights of the revenue are ranked. For, to use their own words, "majora regalia imperii praeeminentiam spectant; minora vero ad commodum pecuniarium immediate attinent; et haec proprie fiscalia sunt, et ad jus fisci pertinent"<sup>k,2</sup>

FIRST, then, of the royal dignity. Under every monarchical establishment, it is necessary to distinguish the prince from his subjects, not only by the outward pomp and decorations of majesty, but also by ascribing to him certain qualities, as inherent in his royal capacity, distinct from and superior to those of any other individual in the nation. For, though a philosophical mind will consider the royal person merely as one man appointed by mutual consent to preside over many others, and will pay him that reverence and duty which the principles of society demand, yet the mass of mankind will be apt to grow insolent and refractory, if taught to consider their prince as a man of no greater perfection than themselves. The law therefore ascribes to the king, in his high political character, not only large powers and emoluments which form his prerogative and revenue, but likewise certain attributes of a great and transcendent nature; by which the people are led to consider him in the light of a superior being, and to pay him that awful respect, which may enable him with greater ease to carry on the business of government. This is what I understand by the royal dignity, the several branches of which we will now proceed to examine.

<sup>k</sup> Peregrin. de jure. fisc. l. 1. c. 1. num. 9.

<sup>2</sup> 'the greater regalities belong to pre-eminence of rule, but the lesser immediately concern the acquisition of pecuniary advantage; these are properly fiscal, and relate to the rights of revenue'.

I. AND, first, the law ascribes to the king the attribute of sovereignty, or pre-eminence. “Rex est vicarius,” says Bracton,<sup>1</sup> “et minister Dei in terra: omnis quidem sub eo est, et ipse sub nullo, nisi tantum sub Deo [the king is the deputy and minister of God on earth: all are subject to him; and he is subject to none but God alone].” He is said to have imperial dignity, and in charters before the conquest is frequently stiled basileus and imperator, the titles respectively assumed by the emperors of the east and west<sup>m</sup>. His realm is declared to be an empire, and his crown imperial, by many acts of parliament, particularly the statutes (4) 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12. and 25 Hen. VIII. c. 28; which at the same time declare the king to be the supreme head of the realm in matters both civil and ecclesiastical, and of consequence inferior to no man upon earth, dependent on no man, accountable to no man. Formerly there prevailed a ridiculous notion, propagated by the German and Italian civilians, that an emperor could do many things which a king could not, (as the creation of notaries and the like) and that all kings were in some degree subordinate and subject to the emperor of Germany or Rome. The meaning therefore of the legislature, when it uses these terms of empire and imperial, and applies them to the (5) realm of England, is only to assert that our king is equally sovereign and independent within these his dominions, as any emperor is in his (6) empire; and owes no kind of subjection to any other potentate upon earth. Hence it is, that no suit or action can be brought against the king, even in civil matters, because no court can have jurisdiction over him. For all jurisdiction implies superiority of power: authority to try would be vain and idle, without an authority to redress; and the sentence of a court would be contemptible, unless that court had power to command the execution of it: but who, says Finch<sup>n</sup>, shall command the king? Hence it is likewise, that by law the person of the king is sacred, even though the measures pursued in his reign be completely tyrannical and arbitrary: for no jurisdiction upon earth has power to try him in a criminal way; much less to condemn him to punishment. If any foreign jurisdiction had this power, as was formerly claimed by the pope, the independence of the kingdom would be no more: and, if such a power were vested in any domestic tribunal, there would soon be an end of the constitution, by destroying the free agency of one of the constituent parts of the sovereign legislative power. 236

ARE then, it may be asked, the subjects of England totally destitute of remedy, in case the crown should invade their rights, either by private injuries, or public oppressions? To this we may answer, that the law has provided a remedy in both cases.

<sup>1</sup> l. 1. c. 8 [recte l. 3. tr. 1. c. 9].

<sup>m</sup> Seld. tit. of hon. 1. 2.

<sup>n</sup> Finch. L. 83.

AND, first, as to private injuries; if any person has, in point of property, a just demand upon the king, he must petition him in his court of chancery, where his chancellor will administer right as a matter of grace, though not upon compulsion<sup>o</sup>. And this is entirely consonant to what is laid down by the writers on natural law. "A subject, says Puffendorf<sup>p</sup>, so long as he continues a subject, hath no way to oblige his prince to give him his due, when he refuses it; though no wise prince will ever refuse to stand to a lawful contract. And, if the prince gives the subject leave to enter an action against him, upon such contract, in his own courts, the action itself proceeds rather upon natural equity, than upon the municipal laws." For the end of such action is not to compel the prince to observe the contract, but to persuade him. And, as to personal wrongs; it is well observed by Mr Locke<sup>q</sup>, "the harm which the sovereign can do in his own person not being likely to happen often, nor to extend itself far; nor being able by his single strength to subvert the laws, nor oppress the body of the people, (should any prince have so much weakness and ill nature as to endeavour to do it)—the inconveniency therefore of some particular mischiefs, that may happen sometimes, when a heady prince comes to the throne, are well recompensed by the peace of the public and security of the government, in the person of the chief magistrate being thus set out of the reach of danger."

237 NEXT, as to cases of ordinary public oppression, where the vitals of the constitution are not attacked, the law hath also assigned a remedy. For, as a king cannot misuse his power, without the advice of evil counsellors, and the assistance of wicked ministers, these men may be examined and punished. The constitution has therefore provided, by means of indictments, and parliamentary impeachments, that no man shall dare to assist the crown in contradiction to the laws of the land. But it is at the same time a maxim in those laws, that the king himself can do no wrong; since it would be a great weakness and absurdity in any system of positive law, to define any possible wrong, without any possible redress.

FOR, as to such public oppressions as tend to dissolve the constitution, and subvert the fundamentals of government, they are cases which the law will not, out of decency, suppose; being incapable of distrusting those, whom it has invested with any part of the supreme power; since such distrust would render the exercise of that power precarious and <8> impracticable. For, wherever the law expresses its distrust of abuse of power, it always vests a superior coercive authority in some other hand to correct it; the very notion of which destroys the idea of sovereignty. If therefore (for example) the two houses of parliament, or either of them, had avowedly a right to animadvert on the king, or each other, or if the king had a right to animadvert on either of the houses, that branch of the legislature, so subject to animadversion, would instantly cease to be part of the supreme power; the ballance of the constitution would be overturned; and that branch or branches, in which this jurisdiction resided, would be completely sovereign. The supposition of law therefore is, that neither the king nor either house of parliament (collectively taken) is capable of doing any wrong; since in such cases the law feels itself incapable of furnishing any adequate remedy. For which reason all oppressions, which may happen to spring from any branch of the sovereign power, must necessarily be out of the reach of any stated rule, 238 or express legal provision: but, if ever they unfortunately happen, the prudence of the times must provide new remedies upon new emergencies.

<sup>o</sup> <7> Finch. L. 255.

<sup>p</sup> Law of N. and N. I. 8. c. 10.

<sup>q</sup> on Gov. p. 2. §. 205.

INDEED, it is found by experience, that whenever the unconstitutional oppressions, even of the sovereign power, advance with gigantic strides and threaten desolation to a state, mankind will not be reasoned out of the feelings of humanity; nor will sacrifice their liberty by a scrupulous adherence to those political maxims, which were originally established to preserve it. And therefore, though the positive laws are silent, experience will furnish us with a very remarkable case, wherein nature and reason prevailed. When king James the second invaded the fundamental constitution of the realm, the convention declared an abdication, whereby the throne was rendered vacant, which induced a new settlement of the crown. And so far as this precedent leads, and no farther, we may now be allowed to lay down the law of redress against public oppression. If therefore any future prince should endeavour to subvert the constitution by breaking the original contract between king and people, should violate the fundamental laws, and should withdraw himself out of the kingdom; we are now authorized to declare that this conjunction of circumstances would amount to an abdication, and the throne would be thereby vacant. But it is not for us to say, that any one, or two, of these ingredients would amount to such a situation; for there our precedent would fail us. In these therefore, or other circumstances, which a fertile imagination may furnish, since both law and history are silent, it becomes us to be silent too; leaving to future generations, whenever necessity and the safety of the whole shall require it, the exertion of those inherent (though latent) powers of society, which no climate, no time, no constitution, no contract, can ever destroy or diminish.

II. BESIDES the attribute of sovereignty, the law also ascribes to the king, in his political capacity, absolute perfection. The king can do no wrong. Which antient and fundamental maxim is not to be understood, as if every thing transacted by the 239 government was of course just and lawful, but means only two things. First, that whatever is exceptionable in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the king, nor is he answerable for it personally to his people: for this doctrine would totally destroy that constitutional independence of the crown, which is necessary for the balance of power, in our free and active, and therefore compounded, constitution. And, secondly, it means that the prerogative of the crown extends not to do any injury: it is created for the benefit of the people, and therefore cannot be exerted to their prejudice<sup>r</sup>.

THE king, moreover, is not only incapable of doing wrong, but even of thinking wrong: he can never mean to do an improper thing: in him is no folly or weakness. And therefore, if the crown should be induced to grant any franchise or privilege to a subject contrary to reason, or in any wise prejudicial to the commonwealth, or a private person, the law will not suppose the king to have meant either an unwise or an injurious action, but declares that the king was deceived in his grant; and thereupon such grant is rendered void, merely upon the foundation of fraud and deception, either by or upon those agents, whom the crown has thought proper to employ. For the law will not cast an imputation on that magistrate whom it entrusts with the executive power, as if he was capable of intentionally disregarding his trust: but attributes to mere imposition (to which the most perfect of sublunary beings must still continue liable) those little inadvertencies, which, if charged on the will of the prince, might lessen him in the eyes of his subjects.

<sup>r</sup> [Nichols v Nichols] [2] Plowd. 487.

240 YET still, notwithstanding this personal perfection, which the law attributes to the sovereign, the constitution has allowed a latitude of supposing the contrary, in respect to both houses of parliament; each of which, in its turn, hath exerted the right of remonstrating and complaining to the king even of those acts of royalty, which are most properly and personally his own; such as messages signed by himself, and speeches delivered from the throne. And yet, such is the reverence which is paid to the royal person, that though the two houses have an undoubted right to consider these acts of state in any light whatever, and accordingly treat them in their addresses as personally proceeding from the prince, yet, among themselves, (to preserve the more perfect decency, and for the greater freedom of debate) they usually suppose them to flow from the advice of the administration. But the privilege of canvassing thus freely the personal acts of the sovereign (either directly, or even through the medium of his reputed advisers) belongs to no individual, but is confined to those august assemblies: and there too the objections must be proposed with the utmost respect and deference. One member<sup>3</sup> was sent to the tower<sup>s</sup>, for suggesting that his majesty's answer to the address of the commons contained "high words, to fright the members out of their duty;" and another<sup>t</sup>, for saying that a part of the king's speech "seemed rather to be calculated for the meridian of (9) Germany than Great Britain."<sup>4</sup>

IN farther pursuance of this principle, the law also determines that in the king can be no negligence, or laches, and therefore no delay will bar his right. Nullum tempus occurrit regi [no time runs against the king] (10) is the standing maxim upon all occasions: for the law intends that the king is always busied for the public good, and therefore has not leisure to assert his right within the times limited to subjects<sup>u</sup>. In the king also can be no stain or corruption of blood: for if the heir to the crown were attainted of (11) treason or felony, and afterwards the crown should descend to him, this would purge the attainder ipso facto<sup>w</sup>. And therefore when Henry VII, who as earl of Richmond stood attainted, came to the crown,<sup>5</sup> it was not thought necessary to pass an act of parliament to reverse this attainder; because, as lord Bacon in his

<sup>s</sup> Com. Journ. 18 Nov. 1685.

<sup>t</sup> Com. Journ. 4 Dec. 1717.

<sup>u</sup> Finch. L. 82. Co. Litt. 90 b.

<sup>w</sup> Finch. L. 82.

<sup>3</sup> John Cooke MP (c. 1653–92).

<sup>4</sup> William Shippen MP (1673–1743).

<sup>5</sup> Parliament passed an act of attainder against Henry, earl of Richmond, in 1484; next year he defeated Richard III at the battle of Bosworth Field and took the throne as Henry VII. See YB Mich. 1 Hen. VII, fo. 4, pl. 5; J. H. Baker, The Oxford History of the Laws of England. vi: 1483–1558 (Oxford, 2003), 58.

history of that prince informs us,<sup>6</sup> it was agreed that the assumption of the crown had at once purged all attainders. Neither can the king in judgment of law, as king, ever be a minor or under age; and therefore his royal grants and assents to acts of parliament are good, though he has not in his natural capacity attained the legal age of twenty one<sup>x</sup>. By a statute indeed, 28 Hen. VIII. c. 17. power was given to future kings to rescind and revoke all acts of parliament that should be made while they were under the age of twenty four: but this was repealed by the statute 1 Edw. VI. c. 11. so far as related to that prince; and both statutes are declared to be determined by 24 Geo. II. c. 24. It hath also been usually thought prudent, when the heir apparent has been very young, to appoint a protector, guardian, or regent, for a limited time: but the very necessity of such extraordinary provision is sufficient to demonstrate the truth of that maxim of the common law, that in the king is no minority; and therefore he hath no legal guardian<sup>y</sup>. 241

III. A THIRD attribute of the king's majesty is his perpetuity. The law ascribes to him, in his political capacity, an absolute immortality. The king never dies. Henry, Edward, or George may die; but the king survives them all. For immediately upon the decease of the reigning prince in his natural capacity, his kingship or imperial dignity, by act of law, without any interregnum or interval, is vested at once in his heir; who is, eo instanti [immediately], king to all intents and purposes. And so tender is the law of supposing even a possibility of his death, that his natural dissolution is generally called his demise; dimissio regis, vel coronae [the demise of the king or the crown]: an expression which signifies merely a transfer of property; for as 242

<sup>x</sup> (12) Co. Litt. 43.

<sup>y</sup> The methods of appointing this guardian or regent have been so various, and the duration of his power so uncertain, that from thence alone it may be collected that his office is unknown to the common law; and therefore (as sir Edward Coke says, 4 Inst. 58.) the surest way is to have him made by authority of the great council in parliament. The earl of Pembroke by his own authority assumed, in very troublesome times, the regency of Henry III, who was then only nine years old; but was declared of full age by the pope at seventeen, confirmed the great charter at eighteen, and took upon him the administration of the government at twenty. A guardian and council of regency were named for Edward III, by the parliament which deposed his father; the young king being then fifteen, and not assuming the government till three years after. When Richard II succeeded at the age of eleven, the duke of Lancaster took upon him the management of the kingdom, till the parliament met, which appointed a nominal council to assist him. Henry V on his death-bed named a regent and a guardian for his infant son Henry VI, then nine months old: but the parliament altered his disposition, and appointed a protector and council, with a special limited authority. Both these princes remained in a state of pupillage till the age of twenty three. Edward V, at the age of thirteen, was recommended by his father to the care of the duke of Gloucester [the future Richard III]; who was declared protector by the privy council. The statutes 25 Hen. VIII. c. 12. and 28 Hen. VIII. c. 7. provided, that the successor, if a male and under eighteen, or if a female and under sixteen, should be till such age in the governance of his or her natural mother, (if approved by the king) and such other counsellors as his majesty should by will or otherwise appoint: and he accordingly appointed his sixteen executors to have the government of his son, Edward VI, and the kingdom; which executors elected the earl of Hertford [Edward Seymour, duke of Somerset] protector. The statute 24 Geo. II. c. 24. in case the crown should descend to any of the children of Frederick late prince of Wales under the age of eighteen, (13) appoints the princess dowager [Augusta, princess of Wales];—and that of 5 Geo. III. c. 27. in case of a like descent to any of his present majesty's children, empowers the king to name either the queen, the princess dowager, or any descendant of king George II residing in this kingdom;—to be guardian and regent, till the successor attains such age, assisted by a council of regency: the powers of them all being expressly defined and set down in the several acts.

<sup>6</sup> F. Bacon, Historie of the Raigne of King Henry the seventh (1629), 13.

is observed in Plowden<sup>z</sup>, when we say the demise of the crown, we mean only that in consequence of the disunion of the king's body natural from his body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor; and so the royal dignity remains perpetual. Thus too, when Edward the fourth, in the tenth year of his reign, was driven from his throne for a few months by the house of Lancaster, this temporary transfer of his dignity was denominated his demise; and all process was held to be discontinued, as upon a natural death of the king<sup>a</sup>.

243 WE are next to consider those branches of the royal prerogative, which invest this our sovereign lord, thus all-perfect and immortal in his kingly capacity, with a number of authorities and powers; in the exertion whereof consists the executive part of government. This is wisely placed in a single hand by the British constitution, for the sake of unanimity, strength and dispatch. Were it placed in many hands, it would be subject to many wills: many wills, if disunited and drawing different ways, create weakness in a government: and to unite those several wills, and reduce them to one, is a work of more time and delay than the exigencies of state will afford. The king of England is therefore not only the chief, but properly the sole, magistrate of the nation; all others acting by commission from, and in due subordination to him: in like manner as, upon the great revolution in the Roman state, all the powers of the antient magistracy of the commonwealth were concentrated in the new emperor; so that, as Gravina<sup>b</sup> expresses it, "in ejus unius persona veteris reipublicae vis atque majestas per cumulas magistratuum potestates exprimebatur [all the power and majesty of the old commonwealth were concentrated in one man's person by the united powers of the magistrates]."

AFTER what has been premised in this chapter, I shall not (I trust) be considered as an advocate for arbitrary power, when I lay it down as a principle, that in the exertion of lawful prerogative, the king is and ought to be absolute; that is, so far absolute, that there is no legal authority that can either delay or resist him. He may reject what bills, may make what treaties, may coin what money, may create what peers, may pardon what offences he pleases: unless where the constitution hath expressly, or by evident consequence, laid down some exception or boundary; declaring, that thus far the prerogative shall go and no farther. For otherwise the power of the crown would indeed be but a name and a shadow, insufficient for the ends of government, if, where its jurisdiction is clearly established and allowed, any man or body of men were permitted to disobey it, in the ordinary course of law: I say, in the ordinary course of law; for I do not now speak of those extraordinary recourses to first principles, which are necessary when the contracts of society are in danger of dissolution, and the law proves too weak a defence against the violence of fraud or oppression. And yet the want of attending to this obvious distinction has occasioned these doctrines, of absolute power in the prince and of national resistance by the people, to be much misunderstood and perverted by the advocates for slavery on the one hand, and the demagogues of faction on the other. The former, observing the absolute sovereignty and transcendent dominion of the crown laid down (as it certainly is) most strongly and emphatically in our lawbooks, as well as our homilies, have denied that any case can be excepted from so general and positive a rule; forgetting how impossible it is, in any practical system of laws, to point out beforehand those eccentric remedies, which the sudden emergence of national distress may dictate, and which that alone can justify. On the other hand, over-zealous republicans, feeling the absurdity of unlimited passive obedience, have fancifully (or sometimes factiously) gone over to the other extreme: and, because resistance is justifiable to the person of the prince when the being of the state is endangered, and the public voice proclaims such resistance necessary, they have therefore allowed to every individual the right of determining this expedience, and of employing private force to resist even private oppression. A doctrine productive of anarchy, and (in consequence) equally fatal to civil liberty as tyranny itself. For civil liberty, rightly understood, consists in protecting the rights of individuals by the united force of society: society cannot be maintained, and of course can exert no protection, without obedience to some sovereign power: and obedience is an empty name, if every individual has a right to decide how far he himself shall obey. 244

<sup>z</sup> [Hill v Grange] [1] Plowd. 177. [Willion v Berkley] ibid. 234.

<sup>a</sup> [YB] M. 49 Hen. VI. pl. 1–8.

<sup>b</sup> (14) Orig. 1. §. 105.

IN the exertion therefore of those prerogatives, which the law has given him, the king is irresistible and absolute, according to the forms of the constitution. And yet, if the consequence of that exertion be manifestly to the grievance or dishonour of the kingdom, the parliament will call his advisers to a just and severe account. For prerogative consisting (as Mr Locke<sup>c</sup> has well defined it) in the discretionary power of acting for the public good, where the positive laws are silent, if that discretionary power be abused to the public detriment, such prerogative is exerted in an unconstitutional manner. Thus the king may make a treaty with a foreign state, which shall irrevocably bind the nation; and yet, when such treaties have been judged pernicious, impeachments have pursued those ministers, by whose agency or advice they were concluded.

THE prerogatives of the crown (in the sense under which we are now considering them) respect either this nation's intercourse with foreign nations, or its own domestic government and civil polity. 245

WITH regard to foreign concerns, the king is the delegate or representative of his people. It is impossible that the individuals of a state, in their collective capacity, can transact the affairs of that state with another community equally numerous as themselves. Unanimity must be wanting to their measures, and strength to the execution of their counsels. In the king therefore, as in a center, all the rays of his people are united, and form by that union a consistency, splendor, and power, that make him feared and respected by foreign potentates; who would scruple to enter into any engagements, that must afterwards be revised and ratified by a popular assembly. What is done by the royal authority, with regard to foreign powers, is the act of the whole nation: what is done without the king's concurrence is the act only of private men. And so far is this point carried by our law, that it hath been held<sup>d</sup>, that should all the subjects of England make war with a king in league with the king of England, without the royal assent, such war is no breach of the league. And, by the statute 2 Hen. V. c. 6. any subject committing acts of hostility upon any nation in league with the king, was declared to be guilty of high treason: and, though that act was repealed by the statute 20 Hen. VI. c. 11. so far as relates to the making this offence high treason, yet still it remains a very great offence against the law of nations, and punishable by our laws, either capitally or otherwise, according to the circumstances of the case.

<sup>c</sup> on Gov. 2. §. 166.

I. The king therefore, considered as the representative of his people, has the sole power of sending ambassadors to foreign states, and receiving ambassadors at home.
 246 This may lead us into a (15) short enquiry, how far the municipal laws of England inter-meddle with or protect the rights of these messengers from one potentate to another, whom we call ambassadors.

THE rights, the powers, the duties, and the privileges of ambassadors are determined by the law of nature and nations, and not by any municipal constitutions. For, as they represent the persons of their respective masters, who owe no subjection to any laws but those of their own country, their actions are not subject to the control of the private law of that state, wherein they are appointed to reside. He that is subject to the coercion of laws is necessarily dependent on that power by whom those laws were made: but an ambassador ought to be independent of every power, except that by which he is sent; and of consequence ought not to be subject to the mere municipal laws of that nation, wherein he is to exercise his functions. If he grossly offends, or makes an ill use of his character, he may be sent home and accused before his master<sup>e</sup>; who is bound either to do justice upon him, or avow himself the accomplice of his crimes<sup>f</sup>. But there is great dispute among the writers on the laws of nations, whether this exemption of ambassadors extends to all crimes, as well natural as positive; or whether it only extends to such as are mala prohibita [wrongs, because forbidden], as coining, and not to those that are mala in se [wrongs in themselves], as murder<sup>g</sup>. Our law seems to have formerly taken in the restriction, as well as the general exemption. For it has been held, both by our common lawyers and civilians<sup>h</sup>, that an ambassador is privileged by the law of nature and nations; and yet, if he commits any offence against the law of reason and nature, he shall lose his privilege<sup>i</sup>: and that therefore, if an ambassador conspires the death of the king in whose land he is, he may be condemned and executed for treason; but if he commits any other species of treason, 247 it is otherwise, and he must be sent to his own kingdom<sup>k</sup>. And these positions seem to be built upon good appearance of reason. For since, as we have formerly shewn, all

<sup>d</sup> 4 Inst. 152.

<sup>e</sup> As was done with count Gyllenberg the Swedish minister to Great Britain, A.D. 1716.

<sup>f</sup> Sp. L. 26. 21.

<sup>g</sup> Van Leeuwen in Ff. 50. 7. 17. Barbeyrac's Puff. l. 8. c. 9. §. 9. & 17. Van Bynkershoek de foro legator. c. 17, 18, 19.

<sup>h</sup> [Marche's case] 1 Roll. Rep. 175. [R. v Marsh] 3 Bulstr. 27.

<sup>i</sup> 4 Inst. 153.

<sup>k</sup> [R. v Owen] 1 Roll. Rep. 185.

municipal laws act in subordination to the primary law of nature, and, where they annex a punishment to natural crimes, are only declaratory of and auxiliary to that law; therefore to this natural, universal rule of justice ambassadors, as well as other men, are subject in all countries; and of consequence it is reasonable that wherever they transgress it, there they shall be liable to make atonement<sup>1</sup>. But, however these principles might formerly obtain, the general practice (16) of Europe seems now to have adopted the sentiments of the learned Grotius, that the security of ambassadors is of more importance than the punishment of a particular crime<sup>m</sup>. And therefore few, if any, examples have happened within a century past, where an ambassador has been punished for any offence, however atrocious in its nature

IN respect to civil suits, all the foreign jurists agree, that neither an ambassador, nor any of his train or comites [companions], can be prosecuted for any debt or contract in the courts of that kingdom wherein he is sent to reside. Yet sir Edward Coke maintains, that, if an ambassador make a contract which is good jure gentium [by the law of nations], he shall answer for it here<sup>n</sup>. (17) And the truth is, we find no traces in our lawbooks of allowing any privilege to ambassadors or their domestics, even in civil suits, previous to the reign of queen Anne; when an ambassador from Peter the great, czar of Muscovy, was actually arrested and taken out of his coach in (18) London, in 1708, for debts which he had there (19) contracted. This the czar resented very highly, and demanded (we are told) that the officers who made the arrest should be punished with death. But the queen (to the amazement of that despotic court) (20) directed her minister to inform him, “that the law of England had not yet protected ambassadors from the payment of their lawful debts; that therefore the arrest was no offence by the laws; and that she could inflict no punishment upon any, the meanest, of her subjects, unless warranted by the law of the land<sup>o</sup>.” To satisfy however the clamours of the foreign ministers (who made it a common cause) as well as to appease the wrath of (21) Peter<sup>p</sup>, a new statute was enacted by parliament<sup>q</sup>, reciting the arrest which had been made, “in contempt of the protection granted by her majesty, contrary to the law of nations, and in prejudice of the rights and privileges, which ambassadors and other public ministers have at all times been thereby possessed of, and ought to be kept sacred and inviolable:” wherefore it enacts, that for the future all process whereby the person of any ambassador, or of his domestic or domestic servant, may be arrested, or his goods distrained or seised, shall be utterly null and void; and the persons prosecuting, soliciting, or executing such process shall be deemed violaters of the law of nations, and disturbers of the public repose; and shall suffer such penalties and corporal punishment as the lord chancellor and the two chief justices, or any two of them,

248

<sup>1</sup> Foster's reports. 188.

<sup>m</sup> Securitas legatorum utilitati quae ex poena est praeponderat. de jur. b. & p. 2. 18. 4. 4.

<sup>n</sup> 4 Inst. 153.

<sup>o</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xxxv. 454.

<sup>p</sup> A copy of the act made upon this occasion, very elegantly engrossed and illuminated, was sent him to Moscow as a present.

<sup>q</sup> 7 Ann. c. 12.

shall think fit. But it is expressly provided, that no trader, within the description of the bankrupt laws, who shall be in the service of any ambassador, shall be privileged or protected by this act; nor shall any one be punished for arresting an ambassador's servant, unless his name be registred with the secretary of state, and by him transmitted to the sheriffs of London and Middlesex. Exceptions, that are strictly conformable to the rights of ambassadors<sup>r</sup>, as observed in the most civilized countries. And, in consequence of this statute, (22) thus enforcing the law of nations, these privileges are now usually allowed in the courts of common law<sup>s</sup>.

249 II. It is also the king's prerogative to make treaties, leagues, and alliances with foreign states and princes. For it is by the law of nations essential to the goodness of a league, that it be made by the sovereign power<sup>t</sup>; and then it is binding upon the whole community: and in England the sovereign power, quoad hoc [as to this], is vested in the person of the king. Whatever contracts therefore he engages in, no other power in the kingdom can legally delay, resist, or annul. And yet, lest this plenitude of authority should be abused to the detriment of the public, the constitution (as was hinted before) hath here interposed a check, by the means of parliamentary impeachment, for the punishment of such (23) ministers as advise or conclude any treaty, which shall afterwards be judged to derogate from the honour and interest of the nation.

III. Upon the same principle the king has also the sole prerogative of making war and peace. For it is held by all the writers on the law of nature and nations, that the right of making war, which by nature subsisted in every individual, is given up by all private persons that enter into society, and is vested in the sovereign power<sup>u</sup>: and this right is given up not only by individuals, but even by the intire body of people, that are under the dominion of a sovereign. It would indeed be extremely improper, that any number of subjects should have the power of binding the supreme magistrate, and putting him against his will in a state of war. Whatever hostilities therefore may be committed by private citizens, the state ought not to be affected thereby; unless that should justify their proceedings, and thereby become partner in the guilt. Such unauthorized volunteers in violence are not ranked among open enemies, but are treated like pirates and robbers: according to that rule of the civil law<sup>w</sup>; hostes hi sunt qui nobis, aut quibus nos, publice bellum decrevimus: caeteri latrones aut praedones

<sup>r</sup> Saepe quaesitum est an comitum numero et jure habendi sunt, qui legatum comitantur, non ut instructor fiat legatio, sed utine ut lucro suo consulant, institores forte et mercatores. Et, quamvis hos saepe defenderint et comitum loco habere voluerint legati, apparet tamen satis eo non pertinere, qui in legati legationisve officio non sunt. Quum autem ea res nonnunquam turbas dederit, optimo exemplo in quibusdam aulis olim receptum fuit, ut legatus teneretur exhibere nomenclaturam comitum suorum. [It was often a question whether they who accompanied the ambassador, not that the embassy might be better appointed, but merely to consult their own advantage, perhaps as hucksters and merchants, should be reckoned in the number and enjoy the rights of his train. And although the ambassadors often protected them, and wished to reckon them in the number of their suite, yet it is evident that they who are neither in the office of ambassador, nor employed in the embassy, do not belong to it. But as this frequently caused disturbances, it was formerly adjudged in some courts the best mode of proceeding, that the ambassador should be bound to show a list of the names of his attendants.] Van Bynkersh. c. 15. prope finem [near the end].

<sup>s</sup> [Wigmore v Alvarez] Fitzg. 200. [Evans v Higgs] Stra. 797.

<sup>t</sup> Puff. L. of N. b. 8. c. 9. §. 6.

<sup>u</sup> Puff. l. 8. c. 6. §. 8. and Barbeyr. in loc.

<sup>w</sup> Ef. 50. 16. 118.

sunt [those are enemies who have declared war against us or on whom we have declared war, all others are thieves or robbers]. And the reason which is given by Grotius<sup>x</sup>, why according to the law of nations a denunciation of war ought always to precede the actual commencement of hostilities, is not so much that the enemy may be put upon his guard, (which is matter rather of magnanimity than right) but that it may be certainly clear that the war is not undertaken by private persons, but by the will of the whole community; whose right of willing is in this case transferred to the supreme magistrate by the fundamental laws of society. So that, in order to make a war completely effectual, it is necessary with us in England that it be publicly declared and duly proclaimed by the king's authority; and, then, all parts of both the contending nations, from the highest to the lowest, are bound by it. And, wherever the right resides of beginning a national war, there also must reside the right of ending it, or the power of making peace. And the same check of parliamentary impeachment, for improper or inglorious conduct, in beginning, conducting, or concluding a national war, is in general sufficient to restrain the ministers of the crown from a wanton or injurious exertion of this great prerogative. 250

IV. BUT, as the delay of making war may sometimes be detrimental to individuals who have suffered by depredations from foreign potentates, (24) our laws have in some respect armed the subject with powers to impel the prerogative; by directing the ministers of the crown to issue letters of marque and reprisal<sup>7</sup> upon due demand: the prerogative of granting which is nearly related to, and plainly derived from, that other of making war; this being indeed only an incomplete state of hostilities, and generally ending in a formal denunciation of war. These letters are grantable by the law of nations<sup>y</sup>, whenever the subjects of one state are oppressed and injured by those of another; and justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs. In this case letters of marque and reprisal (25) (words in themselves synonymous and signifying a taking in return) may be obtained, in order to seize the bodies or goods of the subjects of the offending state, until satisfaction be made, wherever they 251 happen to be found. (26) Indeed this custom of reprisals seems dictated by nature herself; and accordingly we find in the most antient times very notable instances of it<sup>z</sup>. But here the necessity is obvious of calling in the sovereign power, to determine when reprisals may be made; else every private sufferer would be a judge in his own cause. (27) And, in pursuance of this principle, it is with us declared by the statute 4 Hen. V c. 7. that, if any subjects of the realm are oppressed in time of truce by any foreigners, the king will grant marque in due form, to all that feel themselves grieved. Which form is thus directed to be observed: the sufferer must first apply to the lord privy-seal, and he shall make out letters of request under the privy seal; and, if, after

<sup>x</sup> de jur. b. & p. l. 3. c. 3. §. 11.

<sup>y</sup> Grot. de jur. b. & p. l. 3. c. 2. §. 4 & 5.

<sup>z</sup> See the account given by Nestor, in the eleventh book of the Iliad, of the reprisals made by himself on the Epeian nation; from whom he took a multitude of cattle, as a satisfaction for a prize won at the Elian games by his father Neleus, and for debts due to many private subjects of the Pylian kingdom: out of which booty the king took three hundred head of cattle for his own demand, and the rest were equitably divided among the other creditors.

<sup>7</sup> i.e. privateering licences.

such request of satisfaction made, the party required do not within convenient time make due satisfaction or restitution to the party grieved, the lord chancellor shall make him out letters of marque under the great seal; and by virtue of these he may attack and seize the property of the aggressor nation, without hazard of being condemned as a robber or pirate.

252 V. UPON exactly the same reason stands the prerogative of granting safe-conducts, without which by the law of nations no member of one society has a right to intrude into another. And therefore Puffendorf very justly resolves<sup>a</sup>, that it is left in the power of all states, to take such measures about the admission of strangers, as they think convenient; those being ever excepted who are driven on the coasts by necessity, or by any cause that deserves pity or compassion. Great tenderness is shewn by our laws, not only to foreigners in distress (as will appear when we come to speak of shipwrecks) but with regard also to the admission of strangers who come spontaneously. For so long as their nation continues at peace with ours, and they themselves behave peaceably, they are under the king's protection; though liable to be sent home whenever the king sees occasion. But no subject of a nation at war with us can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandize from one place to another, without danger of being seized by our subjects, unless he has letters of safe-conduct; which by divers antient statutes<sup>b</sup> must be granted under the king's great seal and inrolled in chancery, or else are of no effect: the king being supposed the best judge of such emergencies, as may deserve exception from the general law of (28) arms.

INDEED the law of England, as a commercial country, pays a very particular regard to foreign merchants in innumerable instances. One I cannot omit to mention: that by magna carta<sup>c</sup> it is provided, that all merchants (unless publickly prohibited beforehand) shall have safe conduct to depart from, to come into, to tarry in, and to go through England, for the exercise of merchandize, without any unreasonable imposts, except in time of war: and, if a war breaks out between us and their country, they shall be attached (if in England) without harm of body or goods, till the king or his chief justiciary be informed how our merchants are treated in the land with which we are at war; and, if ours be secure in that land, they shall be secure in ours. This seems to have been a common rule of equity among all the northern nations; for we learn from Stiernhook<sup>d</sup>, that it was a maxim among the Goths and Swedes, "quam legem exteri nobis posuere, eandem illis ponemus [we will impose the same law on foreigners that they have imposed on us]." But it is somewhat extraordinary, that it should have found a place in magna carta, a mere interior treaty between the king and his natural-born subjects; which occasions the learned Montesquieu to remark with a degree of admiration, "that the English have made the protection of foreign merchants one of 253 the articles of their national liberty<sup>e</sup>." But indeed it well justifies another observation

<sup>a</sup> Law of N. and N. b. 3. c. 3. §. 9.

<sup>b</sup> 15 Hen. VI. c. 3. 18 Hen. VI. c. 8. 20 Hen. VI. c. 1.

<sup>c</sup> c. 30.

<sup>d</sup> de jure Sueon. l. 3. c. 4.

<sup>e</sup> Sp. L. 20. 13.

which he has made<sup>f</sup>, “that the English know better than any other people upon earth, how to value at the same time these three great advantages, religion, liberty, and commerce.” Very different from the genius of the Roman people; who in their manners, their constitution, and even in their laws, treated commerce as a dishonorable employment, and prohibited the exercise thereof to persons of birth, or rank, or fortune<sup>g</sup>: and equally different from the bigotry of the canonists, who looked on trade as inconsistent with christianity<sup>h</sup>, and determined at the council of Melfi, under pope Urban II, A.D. 1090, that it was impossible with a safe conscience to exercise any traffic, or follow the profession of the law<sup>i</sup>.

THESE are the principal prerogatives of the king, respecting this nation’s intercourse with foreign nations; in all of which he is considered as the delegate or representative of his people. But in domestic affairs he is considered in a great variety of characters, and from thence there arises an abundant number of other prerogatives.

I. FIRST, he is a constituent part of the supreme legislative power; and, as such, has the prerogative of rejecting such provisions in parliament, as he judges improper to be passed. The expediency of which constitution has before been evinced at large<sup>k</sup>. I shall only farther remark, that the king is not bound by any act of parliament, unless he be named therein by special and particular words. The most general words that can be devised (“any person or persons, bodies politic, or corporate, &c.”) affect not him in the least, if they may tend to restrain or diminish any of his rights or interests<sup>l</sup>. For it would be of most mischievous consequence to the public, if the strength of the executive power were liable to be curtailed without its own express consent, by constructions and implications of the subject. Yet where an act of parliament is expressly made for the preservation of public rights and the suppression of public wrongs, and does not interfere with the established rights of the crown, it is said to be binding as well upon the king as upon the subject<sup>m</sup>: and, likewise, the king may take the benefit of any particular act, though he be not especially named<sup>n</sup>.

254

II. THE king is considered, in the next place, as the generalissimo, or the first in military command, within the kingdom. The great end of society is to protect the weakness of individuals by the united strength of the community: and the principal use of government is to direct that united strength in the best and most effectual manner, to answer the end proposed. Monarchical government is allowed to be the

<sup>f</sup> Sp. L. 20. 6.

<sup>g</sup> Nobiliore natalibus, et honorum luce conspicuos, et patrimonio ditiores, perniciosum urbibus mercimonium exercere prohibemus. [We forbid those who are noble by birth, conspicuous from the splendour of their honours, and wealthy in their patrimony, to exercise trade, so pernicious to cities.] C. 4. 63. 3.

<sup>h</sup> Homo mercator; vix aut nunquam potest Deo placere: et ideo nullus Christianus debet esse mercator; aut si voluerit esse, projiciatur de ecclesia Dei. [A merchant can seldom or never please God, therefore, no Christian ought to be a merchant; or, if he will be one, he should be cast out from the church of God.] Decret. 1. 88. 11.

<sup>i</sup> Falsa sit poenitentia [laici] cum penitus ab officio curiali vel negotiali non recedit, quae sine peccatis agi ulla ratione non praevallet. [The repentance [of a layman] becomes fallacious if he does not quit entirely the occupations law and commerce, which it is impossible to exercise in any manner without sin.] Act. Concil. apud Baron. c. 16.

<sup>k</sup> ch. 2. pag. 149. [I. 102–3]

<sup>l</sup> [Magdalen College case] 11 Rep. 74b.

<sup>m</sup> [Magdalen College case] 11 Rep. 71.

<sup>n</sup> [Case of a Fine levied by the King, tenant in Tail] 7 Rep. 32.

fittest of any for this purpose: it follows therefore, from the very end of its institution, that in a monarchy the military power must be trusted in the hands of the prince.

IN this capacity therefore, of general of the kingdom, the king has the sole power of raising and regulating fleets and armies. Of the manner in which they are raised and regulated I shall speak more, when I come to consider the military state. We are now only to consider the prerogative of enlisting and of governing them: which indeed was disputed and claimed, contrary to all reason and precedent, by the long parliament of king Charles I; but, upon the restoration of his son, was solemnly declared by the statute 13 Car. II. c. 6. to be in the king alone: for that the sole supreme government and command of the militia within all his majesty's realms and dominions, and of all forces by sea and land, and of all forts and places of strength, ever was and is the undoubted right of his majesty, and his royal predecessors, kings and queens of England; and that both or either house of parliament cannot, nor ought to, pretend to the same.

255 THIS statute, it is obvious to observe, extends not only to fleets and armies, but also to forts, and other places of strength, within the realm; the sole prerogative as well of erecting, as manning and governing of which, belongs to the king in his capacity of general of the kingdom<sup>o</sup>: and all lands were formerly subject to a tax, for building of castles wherever the king thought proper. This was one of the three things, from contributing to the performance of which no lands were exempted; and therefore called by our Saxon ancestors the trinoda necessitas: sc[ilicet]. pontis reparatio, arcis constructio, et expeditio contra hostem [the threefold obligation: that is, to repair bridges, to build fortifications, and to serve in the army against the enemy]<sup>p</sup>. And this they were called upon to do so often, that, as sir Edward Coke from M. Paris assures us<sup>q</sup>, there were in the time of Henry II 1115 castles subsisting in England. The inconvenience of which, when granted out to private subjects, the lordly barons of those times, (29) was severely felt by the whole kingdom; for, as William of Newbury remarks in the reign of king Stephen, "erant in Anglia quodammodo tot reges vel potius tyranni, quot domini castellorum [there were in England, in effect, as many kings, or rather tyrants, as there were lords of castles]:" but it was felt by none more sensibly than by two succeeding princes, king John and king Henry III. And therefore, the greatest part of them being demolished in the barons' wars,<sup>8</sup> the kings of after times have been very cautious of suffering them to be rebuilt in a fortified manner: and sir Edward Coke lays it down<sup>r</sup>, that no subject can build a castle, or house of strength imbatteled, or other fortress defensible, without the licence of the king; for the danger which might ensue, if every man at his pleasure might do (30) it.

To this branch of the prerogative may be referred the power vested in his majesty, by statutes 12 Car. II. c. 4. and 29 Geo. II. c. 16. of prohibiting the exportation of arms

<sup>o</sup> 2 Inst. 30.

<sup>p</sup> Cowel's interpr. tit. castellorum operatio. Seld. Jan. Angl. 1. 42.

<sup>q</sup> 2 Inst. 31.

<sup>r</sup> 1 Inst. 5.

<sup>8</sup> The Barons' Wars (1215–17, 1264–7) were fought between rebellious magnates and the crown.

or ammunition out of this kingdom, under severe penalties: and likewise the right which the king has, whenever he sees proper, of confining his subjects to stay within the realm, or of recalling them when beyond the seas. By the common law<sup>s</sup>, every man may go out of the realm for whatever cause he pleaseth, without obtaining the king's leave; provided he is under no injunction of staying at home: (which liberty was expressly declared in king John's great charter, though left out in that of Henry III)<sup>9</sup> but, because that every man ought of right to defend the king and his realm, therefore the king at his pleasure may command him by his writ that he go not beyond the seas, or out of the realm without licence; and if he do the contrary, he shall be punished for disobeying the king's command. Some persons there antiently were, that, by reason of their stations, were under a perpetual prohibition of going abroad without licence obtained; among which were reckoned all peers, on account of their being counsellors of the crown; all knights, who were bound to defend the kingdom from invasions; all ecclesiastics, who were expressly confined by cap. 4. of the constitutions of Clarendon, on account of their attachment in the times of popery to the see of Rome; all archers and other artificers, lest they should instruct foreigners to rival us in their several trades and manufactures. This was law in the times of Britton<sup>t</sup>, who wrote in the reign of Edward I: and sir Edward Coke<sup>u</sup> gives us many instances to this effect in the time of Edward III. In the succeeding reign the affair of travelling wore a very different aspect: an act of parliament being made<sup>w</sup>, forbidding all persons whatever to go abroad without licence; except only the lords and other great men of the realm; and true and notable merchants; and the king's soldiers. But this act was repealed by the statute 4 Jac. I. c. 1. And at present every body has, or at least assumes, the liberty of going abroad when he pleases. Yet undoubtedly if the king, by writ of ne exeat regnum [that he should not leave the kingdom], under his great seal or privy seal, thinks proper to prohibit him from so doing; or if the king sends a writ to any man, when abroad, commanding his return; and in either case the subject disobeys; it is a high contempt of the king's prerogative, for which the offender's lands shall be seised till he return; and then he is liable to fine and imprisonment<sup>x</sup>. 256 257

III. ANOTHER capacity, in which the king is considered in domestic affairs, is as the fountain of justice and general conservator of the peace of the kingdom. By the fountain of justice the law does not mean the author or original, but only the distributor. Justice is not derived from the king, as from his free gift; but he is the steward of the public, to dispense it to whom it is due<sup>y</sup>. He is not the spring, but the reservoir; from whence right and equity are conducted, by a thousand chanel, to

<sup>s</sup> F. N. B. 85.

<sup>t</sup> c. 123.

<sup>u</sup> 3 Inst. 175.

<sup>w</sup> 5 Ric. II. c. 2.

<sup>x</sup> 1 Hawk. P. C. 22.

<sup>y</sup> Ad hoc autem creatus est et electus, ut justitiam faciat universis. [But he is created and chosen for the purpose of dispensing justice to all.] Bract. l. 3. tr. 1. c. 9.

<sup>9</sup> Magna Carta (1215), cl. 42, omitted from the 1216 revised reissue and subsequently those of 1217 and 1225.

every individual. The original power of judicature, by the fundamental principles of society, is lodged in the society at large: but as it would be impracticable to render complete justice to every individual, by the people in their collective capacity, therefore every nation has committed that power to certain select magistrates, who with more ease and expedition can hear and determine complaints; and in England this authority has immemorially been exercised by the king or his substitutes. He therefore has alone the right of erecting courts of judicature: for, though the constitution of the kingdom hath entrusted him with the whole executive power of the laws, it is impossible, as well as improper, that he should personally carry into execution this great and extensive trust: it is consequently necessary, that courts should be erected, to assist him in executing this power; and equally necessary, that, if erected, they should be erected by his authority. And hence it is, that all jurisdictions of courts are either mediately or immediately derived from the crown, their proceedings run generally in the king's name, they pass under his seal, and are executed by his officers.

258 It is probable, and almost certain, that in very early times, before our constitution arrived at its full perfection, our kings in person often heard and determined causes between party and party. But at present, by the long and uniform usage of many ages, our kings have delegated their whole judicial power to the judges of their several courts; which are the (31) grand depositary of the fundamental laws of the kingdom, and have gained a known and stated jurisdiction, regulated by certain and established rules, which the crown itself cannot now alter but by act of parliament<sup>z</sup>. And, in order to maintain both the dignity and independence of the judges in the superior courts, it is enacted by the statute 13 W. III. c. 2. that their commissions shall be made (not, as formerly, durante bene placito [during pleasure], but) quamdiu bene se gesserint [during good behaviour], and their salaries ascertained and established; but that it may be lawful to remove them on the address of both houses of parliament. And now, by the noble improvements of that law in the statute of 1 Geo. III. c. 23. enacted at the earnest recommendation of the king himself from the throne,<sup>10</sup> the judges are continued in their offices during their good behaviour, notwithstanding any demise of the crown (which was formerly held<sup>a</sup> immediately to vacate their seats) and their full salaries are absolutely secured to them during the continuance of their commissions: his majesty having been pleased to declare, that “he looked upon the independence and uprightness of the judges, as essential to the impartial administration of justice; as one of the best securities of the rights and liberties of his subjects; and as most conducive to the honour of the crown<sup>b</sup>.”

In criminal proceedings, or prosecutions for offences, it would still be a higher absurdity, if the king personally sate in judgment; because in regard to these he

<sup>z</sup> 2 Hawk. P. C. 2.

<sup>a</sup> Ld Raym. 747.

<sup>b</sup> Com. Journ. 3 Mar. 1761.

<sup>10</sup> This was an item in George III's speech at the opening of his first parliament, 3 March 1761: The Parliamentary History of England (1806–20), xv. 1007.

appears in another capacity, that of prosecutor. All offences are either against the king's peace, or his crown and dignity; and are so laid in every indictment. For, though in their consequences they generally seem (except in the case of treason and a very few others) to be rather offences against the kingdom than the king; yet, as the public, which is an invisible body, has delegated all its power and rights, with regard to the execution of the laws, to one visible magistrate, all affronts to that power, and breaches of those rights, are immediately offences against him, to whom they are so delegated by the public. He is therefore the proper person to prosecute for all public offences and breaches of the peace, being the person injured in the eye of the law. And this notion was carried so far in the old Gothic constitution, (wherein the king was bound by his coronation oath to conserve the peace) that in case of any forcible injury offered to the person of a fellow subject, the offender was accused of a kind of perjury, in having violated the king's coronation oath; dicebatur fregisse juramentum regis juratum [he was said to have broken the sworn oath of the king]<sup>c</sup>. And hence also arises another branch of the prerogative, that of pardoning offences; for it is reasonable that he only who is injured should have the power of forgiving. (33) And therefore, in parliamentary impeachments, the king has no prerogative of pardoning; because there the commons of Great Britain are in their own names the prosecutors, and not the crown; the offence being for the most part avowedly taken to be done against the public. Of prosecutions and pardons I shall treat more at large hereafter; and only mention them here, in this cursory manner, to shew the constitutional grounds of this power of the crown, and how regularly connected all the links are in this vast chain of prerogative. 259

IN this distinct and separate existence of the judicial power, in a peculiar body of men, nominated indeed, but not removeable at pleasure, by the crown, consists one main preservative of the public liberty; which cannot subsist long in any state, unless the administration of common justice be in some degree separated both from the legislative and also from the executive power. Were it joined with the legislative, the life, liberty, and property, of the subject would be in the hands of arbitrary judges, whose decisions would be then regulated only by their own opinions, and not by any fundamental principles of law; which, though legislators may depart from, yet judges are bound to observe. Were it joined with the executive, this union might soon be an over-balance for the legislative. For which reason, by the statute of 16 Car. I. c. 10. which abolished the court of star chamber, effectual care is taken to remove all judicial power out of the hands of the king's privy council; who, as then was evident from recent instances, might soon be inclined to pronounce that for law, which was most agreeable to the prince or his officers. Nothing therefore is more to be avoided, in a free constitution, than uniting the provinces of a judge and a minister of state. And indeed, that the absolute power, claimed and exercised in a neighbouring nation, is more tolerable than that of the eastern empires, is in great measure owing to their having vested the judicial power in their parliaments, a body separate and distinct from both the legislative and executive: and, if ever that nation recovers its former 260 liberty, it will owe it to the efforts of those assemblies.<sup>11</sup> In Turkey, where every thing is centered in the sultan or his ministers, despotic power is in its meridian, and wears a more dreadful aspect.

<sup>c</sup> Stiernh. de jure Goth. l. 3. c. 3. A notion somewhat similar to this may be found in (32) the mirrour. c. 1. §. 5.

A CONSEQUENCE of this prerogative is the legal ubiquity of the king. His majesty, in the eye of the law, is always present in all his courts, though he cannot personally distribute justice<sup>d</sup>. His judges are the mirror by which the king's image is reflected. It is the regal office, and not the royal person, that is always present in court, always ready to undertake prosecutions, or pronounce judgment, for the benefit and protection of the subject. And from this ubiquity it follows, that the king can never be nonsuit<sup>e</sup>; for a nonsuit is the desertion of the suit or action by the non-appearance of the plaintiff in court. For the same reason also, in the forms of legal proceedings, the king is not said to appear by his attorney, as other men do; (34) for he always appears in contemplation of law in his own proper person<sup>f</sup>.

261 FROM the same original, of the king's being the fountain of justice, we may also deduce the prerogative of issuing proclamations, which is vested in the king alone. These proclamations have then a binding force, when (as sir Edward Coke observes<sup>g</sup>) they are grounded upon and enforce the laws of the realm. For, though the making of laws is entirely the work of a distinct part, the legislative branch, of the sovereign power, yet the manner, time, and circumstances of putting those laws in execution must frequently be left to the discretion of the executive magistrate. And therefore his constitutions or edicts, concerning these points, which we call proclamations, are binding upon the subject, where they do not either contradict the old laws, or tend to establish new ones; but only enforce the execution of such laws as are already in being, in such manner as the king shall judge necessary. Thus the established law is, that the king may prohibit any of his subjects from leaving the realm: a proclamation therefore forbidding this in general for three weeks, by laying an embargo upon all shipping in time of war<sup>h</sup>, will be equally binding as an act of parliament, because founded upon a prior (35) law. A proclamation for disarming papists is also binding, being only in execution of what the legislature has first ordained: but a proclamation for allowing arms to papists, or for disarming any protestant subjects, will not bind; because the first would be to assume a dispensing power, the latter a legislative one; to the vesting of either of which in any single person the laws of England are absolutely strangers. Indeed by the statute 31 Hen. VIII. c. 8. it was enacted, that the king's proclamations should have the force of acts of parliament: a statute, which was calculated to introduce the most despotic tyranny; and which must have proved fatal to the liberties of this kingdom, had it not been luckily repealed in the minority of his successor, about five years after<sup>i</sup>.

<sup>d</sup> Fortesc. c. 8. 2 Inst. 186.

<sup>e</sup> Co. Litt. 139.

<sup>f</sup> Finch. L. 81.

<sup>g</sup> 3 Inst. 162.

<sup>h</sup> [Sands v Child] 4 Mod. 177, 179.

<sup>i</sup> Stat. 1 Edw. VI. c. 12.

<sup>11</sup> In France, 'parlements' were essentially high courts, with some power of review over royal legislation.

IV. THE king is likewise the fountain of honour, of office, and of privilege: and this in a different sense from that wherein he is stiled the fountain of justice; for here he is really the parent of them. It is impossible that government can be maintained 262 without a due subordination of rank; that the people may know and distinguish such as are set over them, in order to yield them their due respect and obedience; and also that the officers themselves, being encouraged by emulation and the hopes of superiority, may the better discharge their functions: and the law supposes, that no one can be so good a judge of their several merits and services, as the king himself who employs them. It has therefore intrusted with him the sole power of conferring dignities and honours, in confidence that he will bestow them upon none, but such as deserve them. And therefore all degrees of nobility, of knighthood, and other titles, are received by immediate grant from the crown: either expressed in writing, by writs or letters patent, as in the creations of peers and baronets; or by corporeal investiture, as in the creation of a simple knight.

FROM the same principle also arises the prerogative of erecting and disposing of offices: for honours and offices are in their nature convertible and synonymous. All offices under the crown carry in the eye of the law an honour along with them; because they imply a superiority of parts and abilities, being supposed to be always filled with those that are most able to execute them. And, on the other hand, all honours in their original had duties or offices annexed to them: an earl, comes, was the conservator or governor of a county; and a knight, miles, was bound to attend the king in his wars. For the same reason therefore that honours are in the disposal of the king, offices ought to be so likewise; and as the king may create new titles, so may he create new offices: but with this restriction, that he cannot create new offices with new fees annexed to them, nor annex new fees to old offices; for this would be a tax upon the subject, which cannot be imposed but by act of parliament<sup>k</sup>. Wherefore, in 13 Hen. IV, a new office being created by the king's letters patent for measuring cloths, with a new fee for the same, the letters patent were, on account of the new fee, revoked and declared void in parliament.

UPON the same, or a like reason, the king has also the prerogative of conferring 263 privileges upon private persons. Such as granting place or precedence to any of his subjects, as shall seem good to his royal wisdom<sup>l</sup>: or such as converting aliens, or persons born out of the king's dominions, into denizens; whereby some very considerable privileges of natural-born subjects are conferred upon them. Such also is the prerogative of erecting corporations; whereby a number of private persons are united and knit together, and enjoy many liberties, powers, and immunities in their politic capacity, which they were utterly incapable of in their natural. Of aliens, denizens, natural-born, and naturalized subjects, I shall speak more largely in a subsequent chapter; as also of corporations at the close of this book of our commentaries.<sup>12</sup> I now only mention them incidentally, in order to remark the king's prerogative of making them; which is grounded upon this foundation, that the king, having the sole administration of the government in his hands, is the best and the only judge, in what capacities, with what privileges, and under what distinctions, his people are the best qualified to serve, and to act under him. A principle, which was carried so far by the imperial law, that it was determined to be the crime of sacrilege, even to doubt whether the prince had appointed proper officers in the state<sup>m</sup>.

<sup>k</sup> 2 Inst. 533.

<sup>l</sup> 4 Inst. 361.

<sup>12</sup> See I, chs. 10, 18.

264 V. ANOTHER light in which the laws of England consider the king with regard to domestic concerns, is as the arbiter of commerce. By commerce, I at present mean domestic commerce only. It would lead me into too large a field, if I were to attempt to enter upon the nature of foreign trade, its privileges, regulations, and restrictions; and would be also quite beside the purpose of these commentaries, which are confined to the laws of England. Whereas no municipal laws can be sufficient to order and determine the very extensive and complicated affairs of traffic and 265 merchandize; neither can they have a proper authority for this purpose. For as these are transactions carried on between the subjects of independent states, the municipal laws of one will not be regarded by the other. For which reason the affairs of commerce are regulated by a law of their own, called the law merchant or lex mercatoria, which all nations agree in and take notice of. (36) And in particular the law of England does in many cases refer itself to it, and leaves the causes of merchants to be tried by their own peculiar customs; and that often even in matters (37) relating to inland trade, as for instance with regard to the drawing, the acceptance, and the transfer, (38) of bills of exchange<sup>n</sup>.

WITH us in England, the king's prerogative, so far as it relates to mere domestic commerce, will fall principally under the following articles:

FIRST, the establishment of public marts, or places of buying and selling, such as markets and fairs, with the tolls thereunto belonging. These can only be set up by virtue of the king's grant, or by long and immemorial usage and prescription, which presupposes such a grant<sup>o</sup>. The limitation of these public resorts, to such time and such place as may be most convenient for the neighbourhood, forms a part of oeconomics, or domestic polity; which, considering the kingdom as a large family, and the king as the master of it, he clearly has a right to dispose and order as he pleases.

265 SECONDLY, the regulation of weights and measures. These, for the advantage of the public, ought to be universally the same throughout the kingdom; being the general criterions which reduce all things to the same or an equivalent value. But, as weight and measure are things in their nature arbitrary and uncertain, it is therefore expedient that they be reduced to some fixed rule or standard: which standard it is impossible to fix by any written law or oral proclamation; for no man can, by words
265 only, give another an adequate idea of a foot-rule, or a pound-weight. It is therefore necessary to have recourse to some visible, palpable, material standard; by forming a comparison with which, all weights and measures may be reduced to one uniform size: and the prerogative of fixing this standard, our antient law vested in the crown; as in Normandy it belonged to the duke<sup>p</sup>. This standard was originally kept at Winchester:<sup>13</sup> and we find in the laws of king Edgar<sup>q</sup>,<sup>14</sup> near a century before the conquest, an injunction that the one measure, which was kept at Winchester, should be observed throughout the realm. Most nations have regulated the standard of measures of length by comparison with the parts of the human body; as the palm, the hand, the span, the foot, the cubit, the ell, (ulna, or arm) the pace, and the fathom. But, as these are of different dimensions in men of different proportions, our antient historians<sup>r</sup> inform us, that a new standard of longitudinal measure was ascertained by king Henry the first; who commanded that the ulna or antient ell, which answers to the modern yard, should be made of the exact length of his own arm. And, one standard of measures of length being gained, all others are easily derived from thence; those of greater length by multiplying, those of less by subdividing, that original standard. Thus, by the statute called compositio ulnarum et perticarum [the composition of ells and perches],<sup>15</sup> five yards and an half make a perch; and the yard is subdivided into three feet, and each foot into twelve inches; which inches will be each of the length of three grains of barley. Superficial measures are derived by squaring those of length; and measures of capacity by cubing them. The standard of weights was originally taken from corns of wheat, whence the lowest denomination of weights we have is still called a grain; thirty two of which are directed, by the statute called compositio mensurarum [the composition of measures],<sup>16</sup> to compose a penny weight, whereof twenty make an ounce, twelve ounces a pound, and so upwards. And upon these principles the first standards were made; which, being originally so fixed by the crown, their subsequent regulations have been generally made by the king in parliament. Thus, under king Richard I, in his parliament holden at Westminster, A.D. 1197, it was ordained that (39) there shall be only one weight and one measure throughout the kingdom, and that the custody of the assise or standard of weights and (40) measures shall be committed to certain persons in every city and borough<sup>s</sup>; from whence the antient office of the king's aulnager<sup>17</sup> seems to have been derived, whose duty it was, for a certain fee, to measure all cloths made for sale, till the office was abolished by the statute 11 & 12 W. III. c. 20. In king John's time this ordinance of king Richard was frequently dispensed with for money<sup>t</sup>; which

<sup>m</sup> Disputare de principali judicio non oportet: sacrilegii enim instar est, dubitare an is dignus sit, quem elegerit imperator. [One should not dispute concerning the emperor's court, for it is a kind of sacrilege to doubt the worth of him whom the emperor has chosen.] C 9. 29. 3 [recte 9. 29. 2.]

<sup>n</sup> Co. Litt. 172. [Nicholson v Sedgwick] Ld Raym. 181. [Ereskine v Murray] 1542.

<sup>o</sup> 2 Inst. 220.

266

<sup>p</sup> Gr. Coustum. c. 16

<sup>q</sup> cap. 8.

<sup>r</sup> William of Malsb. in vita Hen. I. [in De Gestis Regum Anglorum]; Spelm. Hen. I. ap. Wilkins. 299.

<sup>s</sup> Hoved. Matth. Paris.

<sup>t</sup> Hoved. A.D. 1201.

<sup>13</sup> Winchester was the administrative centre of the kingdom of Wessex and then of England from 827 to 1066.

<sup>14</sup> Edgar's name had become attached to customary laws by 1018, when they were adopted by Cnut as the basis for an Anglo-Danish settlement.

<sup>15</sup> Uncertain date, in the reign of Edward I (1272–1307): see Statutes of the Realm, i. 206.

<sup>16</sup> Assize of Weights and Measures, an early statute of uncertain date, in the reign of Edward I: see Statutes of the Realm, i. 204.

<sup>17</sup> Aulnager (or 'alnager'), from Fr. aulner, to measure by the ell.

occasioned a provision to be made for inforcing it, in the great charters of king John and his son<sup>u</sup>. These original standards were called pondus regis [the king's weight]<sup>w</sup>, and mensura domini regis [the lord king's measure]<sup>x</sup>; and are directed by a variety of subsequent statutes to be kept in the exchequer, and all weights and measures to be made conformable thereto<sup>y</sup>. But, as sir Edward Coke observes<sup>z</sup>, though this hath so often by authority of parliament been enacted, yet it could never be effected; so forcible is custom with the <41> multitude, when it hath gotten an head.

THIRDLY, as money is the medium of commerce, it is the king's prerogative, as the arbiter of domestic commerce, to give it authority or make it current. Money is an universal medium, or common standard, by comparison with which the value of all merchandize may be ascertained: or it is a sign, which represents the respective values of all commodities. Metals are well calculated for this sign, because they are durable and are capable of many subdivisions: and a precious metal is still better calculated for this purpose, because it is the most portable. A metal is also the most proper for a common measure, because it can easily be reduced to the same standard in all nations: and every particular nation fixes on it its own impression, that the weight and standard (wherein consists the intrinsic value) may both be known by inspection only.

As the quantity of precious metals increases, that is, the more of them there is extracted from the mine, this universal medium or common sign will sink in value, and grow less precious. Above a thousand millions of bullion are calculated to have been imported into Europe from America within less than three centuries; and the quantity is daily increasing. The consequence is, that more money must be given now for the same commodity than was given an hundred years ago. And, if any accident was to diminish the quantity of gold and silver, their value would proportionably rise. A horse, that was formerly worth ten pounds, is now perhaps worth twenty; and, by any failure of current specie, the price may be reduced to what it was. Yet is the horse in reality neither dearer nor cheaper at one time than another: for, if the metal which constitutes the coin was formerly twice as scarce as at present, the commodity was then as dear at half the price, as now it is at the whole.

THE coining of money is in all states the act of the sovereign power; for the reason just mentioned, that its value may be known on inspection. And with respect to coinage in general, there are three things to be considered therein; the materials, the impression, and the denomination.

WITH regard to the materials, sir Edward Coke lays it down<sup>a</sup>, that the money of England must either be of gold or silver; and none other was ever issued by the royal authority till 1672, when copper farthings and half-pence were coined by king Charles the second, and ordered by proclamation to be current in all payments, under the

<sup>u</sup> 9 Hen. III. c. 25.

<sup>w</sup> Plac. 35 Edw. I. apud Cowel's Interpr. tit. pondus regis.

<sup>x</sup> Flet. 2. 12.

<sup>y</sup> 14 Edw. III. st. 1. c. 12. 25 Edw. III. st. 5. c. 10. 16 Ric. II. c. 3. 8 Hen. VI. c. 5. 11 Hen. VI. c. 8. 11 Hen. VII. c. 4. 22 Car. II. c. 8.

<sup>z</sup> 2 Inst. 41.

<sup>a</sup> 2 Inst. 577.

value of six-pence, and not otherwise. But this copper coin is not upon the same footing with the other in many respects, particularly with regard to the offence of counterfeiting (42) it.

As to the impression, the stamping thereof is the unquestionable prerogative of the crown: for, though divers bishops and monasteries had formerly the privilege of coining money, yet, as sir Matthew Hale observes<sup>b</sup>, this was usually done by special grant from the king, or by prescription which supposes one; and therefore was derived from, and not in derogation of, the royal prerogative. Besides that they had only the profit of the coinage, and not the power of instituting either the impression or denomination; but had usually the stamp sent them from the exchequer. 268

THE denomination, or the value for which the coin is to pass current, is likewise in the breast of the king; and, if any unusual pieces are coined, that value must be ascertained by proclamation. In order to fix the value, the weight, and the fineness of the metal are to be taken into consideration together. When a given weight of gold or silver is of a given fineness, it is then of the true (43) standard, and called sterling metal; a name for which there are various reasons given<sup>c</sup>, but none of them entirely satisfactory. And of this sterling metal all the coin of the kingdom must be made by the statute 25 Edw. III. c. 13. So that the king's prerogative seemeth not to extend to the debasing or inhancing the value of the coin, below or above the sterling value<sup>d</sup>: though sir Matthew Hale<sup>e</sup> appears to be of another opinion. The king may also, by his proclamation, legitimate foreign coin, and make it current here; declaring at what value it shall be taken in payments<sup>f</sup>. But this, I apprehend, ought to be by comparison with the standard of our own coin; otherwise the consent of parliament will be necessary. There is at present no such legitimated money; Portugal coin being only current by private consent, so that any one who pleases may refuse to take it in payment. The king may also at any time decry, or cry down, any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current<sup>g</sup>.

VI. THE king is, lastly, considered by the laws of England as the head and supreme governor of the national church. 269

To enter into the reasons upon which this prerogative is founded is matter rather of divinity than of law. I shall therefore only observe that by statute 26 Hen. VIII. c. 1. (reciting that the king's majesty justly and rightfully is and ought to be the supreme head of the church of England; and so had been recognized by the clergy of this kingdom in their convocation) it is enacted, that the king shall be reputed the only supreme head in earth of the church of England, and shall have, annexed to the imperial crown of this realm, as well the titles and stile thereof, as all jurisdictions, authorities, and commodities, to the said dignity of supreme head of the church appertaining. And another statute to the same purport was made, 1 Eliz. c. 1.

<sup>b</sup> 1 Hist. P. C. 191.

<sup>c</sup> (44) Spelm. Gloss. 203.

<sup>d</sup> 2 Inst. 577.

<sup>e</sup> 1 H. P. C. 194.

<sup>f</sup> Ibid. 197.

<sup>g</sup> (45) Ibid.

IN virtue of this authority the king convenes, prorogues, restrains, regulates, and dissolves all ecclesiastical synods or convocations. This was an inherent prerogative of the crown, long before the time of Henry VIII, as appears by the statute 8 Hen. VI. c. 1. and the many authors, both lawyers and historians, vouched by sir Edward Coke<sup>h</sup>. So that the statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19. which restrains the convocation from making or putting in execution any canons repugnant to the king's prerogative, or the laws, customs, and statutes of the realm, was merely declaratory of the old common (46) law: that part of it only being new, which makes the king's royal assent actually necessary to the validity of every canon. The convocation or ecclesiastical synod, in England, differs considerably in its constitution from the synods of other christian kingdoms: those consisting wholly of bishops; whereas with us the convocation is the miniature of a parliament, wherein the archbishop presides with regal state; the upper house of bishops represents the house of lords; and the lower 270 house, composed of representatives of the several dioceses at large, and of each particular chapter therein, resembles the house of commons with its knights of the shire and burgesses<sup>i</sup>. This constitution is said to be owing to the policy of Edward I; who thereby at one and the same time let in the inferior clergy to (47) the privilege of forming ecclesiastical canons, (which before they had not) and also introduced a method of taxing ecclesiastical benefices, by consent of convocation<sup>k</sup>.

FROM this prerogative also of being the head of the church arises the king's right of nomination to vacant bishopricks, and certain other ecclesiastical preferments; which (48) will better be considered when we come to treat of the clergy. I shall only here observe, that this is now done in consequence of the statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 20.

As head of the church, the king is likewise the dernier resort [last resource] in all ecclesiastical causes; an appeal lying ultimately to him in chancery from the sentence of every ecclesiastical judge: which right was restored to the crown by statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19. as will more fully be shewn hereafter.

<sup>h</sup> 4 Inst. 322, 323.

<sup>i</sup> In the diet of Sweden, where the ecclesiastics form one of the branches of the legislature, the chamber of the clergy resembles the convocation of England. It is composed of the bishops and superintendants; and also of deputies, one of which is chosen by every ten parishes or rural deanry. Mod. Un. Hist. xxxiii. 18.

<sup>k</sup> Gilb. hist. of exch. c. 4.

OF THE KING'S REVENUE.

HAVING, in the preceding chapter, considered at large those branches of the king's prerogative, which contribute to his royal dignity, and constitute the executive power of the government, we proceed now to examine the king's fiscal prerogatives, or such as regard his revenue; which the British constitution hath vested in the royal person, in order to support his dignity and maintain his power: being a portion which each subject contributes of his property, in order to secure the remainder.<sup>1</sup>

THIS revenue is either ordinary, or extraordinary. The king's ordinary revenue is such, as has either subsisted time out of mind in the crown; or else has been granted by parliament, by way of purchase or exchange for such of the king's inherent hereditary revenues, as were found inconvenient to the subject.

WHEN I say that it has subsisted time out of mind in the crown, I do not mean that the king is at present in the actual possession of the whole of this revenue. Much (nay, the greatest part) of it is at this day in the hands of subjects; to whom it has been granted out from time to time by the kings of England: which has rendered the crown in some measure dependent on the people for its ordinary support and subsistence. So that I must be obliged to recount, as part of the royal revenue, what lords of manors and other subjects frequently look upon to be their own <sup>(1)</sup> absolute rights, because they are and have been vested in them and their ancestors for ages, though in reality originally derived from the grants of our antient princes. 272

I. THE first of the king's ordinary revenues, which I shall take notice of, is of an ecclesiastical kind; (as are also the three succeeding ones) viz. the custody of the temporalities of bishops; by which are meant all the lay revenues, lands, and tenements (in which is included his barony) which belong to an archbishop's or bishop's see. And these upon the vacancy of the bishoprick are immediately the right of the king, as a consequence of his prerogative in church matters; whereby he is considered as the founder of all archbishopricks and bishopricks, to whom during the vacancy they revert. And for the same reason, before the dissolution of abbeys, the king had the custody of the temporalities of all such abbeys and priories as were of royal foundation (but not of those founded by subjects) on the death of the abbot or prior<sup>a</sup>. Another reason may also be given, why the policy of the law hath vested this custody in the king; because, as the successor is not known, the lands and possessions of the see would be liable to spoil and devastation, if no one had a property therein. Therefore the law has given the king, not the temporalities themselves, but the custody of the temporalities, till such time as a successor is appointed; with power of taking to himself all the intermediate profits, without any account to the successor; and with the right of presenting (which the crown very frequently exercises) to such benefices and other preferments as fall within the time of vacation<sup>b</sup>. This revenue is of so high a nature, that it could not be granted out to a subject, before, or even after, it accrued: but now by the statute 14 Edw. III. st. 4. c. 4 & 5. the king may, after the vacancy, lease the temporalities to the dean and chapter; saving to himself all advowsons, escheats, and the like. Our antient kings, and particularly William Rufus, were not only 273 remarkable for keeping the bishopricks a long time vacant, for the sake of enjoying the temporalities, but also committed horrible waste on the woods and other parts of the estate; and, to crown all, would never, when the see was filled up, restore to the bishop his temporalities again, unless he purchased them at an exorbitant price. To remedy which, king Henry the first<sup>c</sup>, granted a charter at the beginning of his reign, promising neither to sell, nor let to farm, nor take any thing from, the domains of the church, till the successor was installed. And it was made one of the articles of the great charter<sup>d</sup>, that no waste should be committed in the temporalities of bishopricks, neither should the custody of them be sold. The same is ordained by the statute of Westminster the first<sup>e</sup>; and the statute 14 Edw. III. st. 4. c. 4. (which permits, as we have seen, a lease to the dean and chapter) is still more explicit in prohibiting the other exactions. It was also a frequent abuse, that the king would for trifling, or no causes, seise the temporalities of bishops, even during their lives, into his own hands: but this is guarded against by statute 1 Edw. III. st. 2. c. 2.

<sup>a</sup> 2 Inst. 15.

<sup>1</sup> For the development of public finance in the eighteenth century, see P. G. M. Dickson, The Financial Revolution in England: A Study in the Development of Public Credit 1688–1756 (1967).

THIS revenue of the king, which was formerly very considerable, is now by a customary indulgence almost reduced to nothing: for, at present, as soon as the new bishop is consecrated and confirmed, he usually receives the restitution of his temporalities quite entire, and untouched, (2) from the king; and then, and not sooner, he has a fee simple in his bishoprick, and may maintain (3) an action for the same<sup>f</sup>.

II. THE king is entitled to a corody, as the law calls it, out of every bishoprick: that is, to send one of his chaplains to be maintained by the bishop, or to have a pension allowed him till the bishop promotes him to a benefice<sup>g</sup>. This is also in the nature of an acknowledgement to the king, as founder of the see; since he had formerly the same 274 corody or pension from every abbey or priory of royal foundation. It is, I apprehend, now fallen into total disuse; though sir Matthew Hale says<sup>h</sup>, that it is due of common right, and that no prescription will discharge it.

III. THE king also (as was formerly observed<sup>i</sup>) is entitled to all the tithes arising in extraparochial places<sup>k</sup>: though perhaps it may be doubted how far this article, as well as the last, can be properly reckoned a part of the king's own royal revenue; since a

<sup>b</sup> Stat. 17 Edw. II. c. 14. F. N. B. 32.

<sup>c</sup> Matth. Paris.

<sup>d</sup> 9 Hen. III. c. 5.

<sup>e</sup> 3 Edw. I. c. 21.

<sup>f</sup> Co. Litt. 67. 341.

<sup>g</sup> F. N. B. 230.

<sup>h</sup> Notes on F. N. B. above cited [i.e. The New Natura Brevium. ... To which is added A Commentary ... by the Late Lord Chief Justice Hale (8th edn, 1755)].

<sup>i</sup> page 110 [I. 78–9].

<sup>k</sup> 2 Inst. 647.

corody supports only his chaplains, and these extraparochial tithes are held under an implied trust, that the king will distribute them for the good of the clergy in general.

IV. THE next branch consists in the first-fruits, and tenths, of all spiritual preferments in the kingdom; both of which I shall consider together.

THESE were originally a part of the papal usurpations over the clergy of this kingdom; first introduced by Pandulph the pope's legate, during the reigns of king John and Henry the third, in the see of Norwich; and afterwards attempted to be made universal by the popes Clement V and John XXII, about the beginning of the fourteenth century. The first-fruits, primitiae, or annates, were the first year's whole profits of the spiritual preferment, according to a rate or valor made under the direction of pope Innocent IV by Walter bishop of Norwich in 38 Hen. III, and afterwards advanced in value by commission from pope Nicholas the third, A.D. 1292, 20 Edw. I<sup>1</sup>; which valuation of pope Nicholas is still preserved in the exchequer<sup>m</sup>. The tenths, or decimae, were the tenth part of the annual profit of each living by the same valuation; which was also claimed by the holy see, under no better pretence than a strange misapplication of that precept of the Levitical law, which directs<sup>n</sup>, "that the Levites should offer the (4) tenth part of their tithe as a heave-offering to the Lord, and give it to Aaron the high priest." But this claim of the pope met with vigorous resistance from the English parliament; and a variety of acts were passed to prevent and restrain it, particularly the statute 6 Hen. IV. c. 1. which calls it a horrible mischief and damnable custom. But the popish clergy, blindly devoted to the will of a foreign master, still kept it on foot; sometimes more secretly, sometimes more openly and avowedly: so that, in the reign of Henry VIII, it was computed, that in the compass of fifty years 800000 ducats had been sent to Rome for first-fruits only. And, as the clergy expressed this willingness to contribute so much of their income to the head of the church, it was thought proper (when in the same reign the papal power was abolished, and the king was declared the head of the church of England) to annex this revenue to the crown; which was done by statute 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3. (confirmed by statute 1 Eliz. c. 4.) and a new valor beneficiorum [value of benefices] was then made, by which the clergy are at present rated.

275

By these lastmentioned statutes all vicarages under ten pounds a year, and all rectories under ten marks, are discharged from the payment of first-fruits: and if, in such livings as continue chargeable with this payment, the incumbent lives but half a year, he shall pay only one quarter of his first-fruits; if but one whole year, then half of them; if a year and half, three quarters; and if two years, then the whole; and not otherwise. Likewise by the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 8. no tenths are to be paid for the first year, for then the first-fruits are due: and by other statutes of queen Anne,<sup>2</sup> in the fifth and sixth years of her reign, if a benefice be under fifty pounds per annum clear yearly value, it shall be discharged of the payment of first-fruits and tenths.

<sup>1</sup> F. N. B. 176.

<sup>m</sup> 3 Inst. 154.

<sup>n</sup> Numb. 18. 26.

<sup>2</sup> Stats. 6 Ann. c. 24. & 6 Ann. c. 54 (Queen Anne's Bounty).

276 THUS the richer clergy, being, by the criminal bigotry of their popish predecessors, subjected at first to a foreign exaction, were afterwards, when that yoke was shaken off, liable to a like misapplication of their revenues, through the rapacious disposition of the then reigning monarch: till at length the piety of queen Anne restored to the church what had been thus indirectly taken from it. This she did, not by remitting the tenths and first-fruits entirely; but, in a spirit of the truest equity, by applying these superfluities of the larger benefices to make up the deficiencies of the smaller. And to this end she granted her royal charter, which was confirmed by the statute 2 Ann. c. 11 whereby all the revenue of first-fruits and tenths is vested in trustees for ever, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor livings. This is usually called queen Anne's bounty; which has been still farther regulated by subsequent (5) statutes, too numerous here to recite.

V. THE next branch of the king's ordinary revenue (which, as well as the subsequent branches, is of a lay or temporal nature) consists in the rents and profits of the demesne lands of the crown. These demesne lands, terrae dominicales regis [the king's demesne lands], being either the share reserved to the crown at the original distribution of landed property, or such as came to it afterwards by forfeitures or other means, were antiently very large and extensive; comprizing divers manors, honors, and lordships; the tenants of which had very peculiar privileges, as will be shewn in the second book of these commentaries, when we speak of the tenure in antient demesne. At present they are contracted within a very narrow compass, having been almost entirely granted away to private subjects. This has occasioned the parliament frequently to interpose; and, particularly, after king William III had greatly impoverished the crown, an act passed<sup>o</sup>, whereby all future grants or leases from the crown for any longer term than thirty one years or three lives are declared to be void; except with regard to houses, which may be granted for fifty years. And no reversionary lease can be made, so as to exceed, together with the estate in being, the same term of three lives or thirty one years: that is, where there is a subsisting lease, of which there are twenty years still to come, the king cannot grant a future interest, to commence after the expiration of the former, for any longer term than eleven years. The tenant must also 277 be made liable to be punished for committing waste; and the usual rent must be reserved, or, where there has usually been no rent, one third of the clear yearly value<sup>p</sup>. The misfortune is, that this act was made too late, after almost every valuable possession of the crown had been granted away for ever, or else upon very long leases; but may be of (6) benefit to posterity, when those leases come to expire.

VI. HITHER might have been referred the advantages which were used to arise to the king from the profits of his military tenures, to which most lands in the kingdom were subject, till the statute 12 Car. II. c. 24. which in great measure abolished them all: the explication of the nature of which tenures, must be (7) referred to the second book of these commentaries. Hither also might have been referred the profitable prerogative of purveyance and pre-emption: which was a right enjoyed by the crown of buying up provisions and other necessities, by the intervention of the king's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner; and also of forcibly impressing the carriages and horses of the subject, to do the king's business on the publick roads, in the conveyance of timber, baggage, and the like, however inconvenient to the proprietor, upon paying him a settled price. A prerogative, which prevailed pretty generally throughout Europe, during the scarcity of gold and silver, and the high valuation of money consequential thereupon. In those early times the king's household (as well as those of inferior lords) were supported by specific renders of corn, and other victuals, from the tenants of the respective demesnes; and there was also a continual market kept at the palace gate to furnish viands for the royal use<sup>q</sup>. And this answered all purposes, in those ages of simplicity, so long as the king's court continued in any certain place. But when it removed from one part of the kingdom to another (as was formerly very frequently done) it was found necessary to send purveyors 278 beforehand, to get together a sufficient quantity of provisions and other necessities for the household: and, lest the unusual demand should raise them to an exorbitant price, the powers beforementioned were vested in these purveyors; who in process of time very greatly abused their authority, and became a great oppression to the subject though of little advantage to the crown; ready money in open market (when the royal residence was more permanent, and specie began to be plenty) being found upon experience to be the best provider of any. Wherefore by degrees the powers of purveyance have declined, in foreign countries as well as our own; and particularly were abolished in Sweden by Gustavus Adolphus, towards the beginning of the last century<sup>r</sup>. And, with us in England, having fallen into disuse during the suspension of monarchy, king Charles at his restoration consented, by the same statute, to resign intirely these branches of his revenue and (8) power, for the ease and convenience of his subjects: and the parliament, in part of recompense, settled on him, his heirs, and successors, for ever, the hereditary excise of fifteen pence per barrel on all beer and ale sold in the kingdom, and a proportionable sum for certain other liquors. So that this hereditary excise, the nature of which shall be farther explained in the subsequent part of this chapter, now forms the sixth branch of his majesty's ordinary revenue.

<sup>o</sup> 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 7.

<sup>p</sup> In like manner, by the civil law, the inheritances or fundi patrimoniales [inherited lands] of the imperial crown could not be alienated, but only let to farm. Cod. l. 11. t. 61.

VII. A SEVENTH branch might also be computed to have arisen from wine licences; or the rents payable to the crown by such persons as are licensed to sell wine by retale throughout England, except in a few privileged places. These were first settled on the crown by the statute 12 Car. II. c. 25. and, together with the hereditary excise, made up the equivalent in value for the loss sustained by the prerogative in the abolition of the military tenures, and the right of pre-emption and purveyance: but this revenue was abolished by the statute 30 Geo. II. c. 19. and an annual sum of upwards of £7000 per annum, issuing out of the new stamp duties imposed on wine licences, was settled on the crown in its stead.

VIII. AN eighth branch of the king's ordinary revenue is usually reckoned to 279 consist in the profits arising from his forests. Forests are waste grounds belonging to the king, replenished with all manner of beasts of chase or venary; which are under the king's protection, for the sake of his royal recreation and delight: and, to that end, and for preservation of the king's game, there are particular laws, privileges, courts and officers belonging to the king's forests; all which will be, in their turns, explained in the subsequent books of these commentaries. What we are now to consider are only the profits arising to the king from hence; which consist principally in amercements or fines levied for offences against the forest-laws. But as few, if any courts of this kind for (9) levying amercements have been held since 1632, 8 Car. I. and as, from the accounts given of the proceedings in that court by our histories and law books<sup>s</sup>, nobody would now wish to see them again revived, it is needless (at least in this place) to pursue this enquiry any farther.

<sup>q</sup> 4 Inst. 273.

<sup>r</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xxxiii. 220.

IX. THE profits arising from the king's ordinary courts of justice make a ninth branch of his revenue. And these consist not only in fines imposed upon offenders, forfeitures of recognizances, and amercements levied upon defaulters; but also in certain fees due to the crown in a variety of legal matters, as, for setting the great seal to charters, original writs, and (10) other legal proceedings, and for permitting fines to be levied of lands in order to bar entails, or otherwise to insure their title. As none of these can be done without the immediate intervention of the king, by himself or his officers, the law allows him certain perquisites and profits, as a recompense for the trouble he undertakes for the public. These, in process of time, have been almost all granted out to private person, or else appropriated to certain particular uses: so that, though our law-proceedings are still loaded with their payment, very little of them is 280 now returned into the king's exchequer for a part of whose royal maintenance they were originally intended. All future grants of them however, by the statute 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 7. are to endure for no longer time than the prince's life who grants them.

X. A TENTH branch of the king's ordinary revenue, said to be grounded on the consideration of his guarding and protecting the seas from pirates and robbers, is the right to royal fish, which are whale and sturgeon: and these, when either thrown ashore, or caught near the coasts, are the property of the king, on account<sup>t</sup> of their superior excellence. Indeed our ancestors seem to have entertained a very high notion of the importance of this right; it being the prerogative of the kings of Denmark and the dukes of Normandy<sup>u</sup>; and from one of these it was probably derived to our princes. It is expressly claimed and allowed in the statute de praerogativa regis [of the king's prerogative]<sup>w</sup>: and the most antient treatises of law now extant make mention of it<sup>x</sup>; though they seem to have made a distinction between whale and sturgeon, as was incidentally observed in a former chapter<sup>y</sup>.

XI. ANOTHER maritime revenue, and founded partly upon the same reason, is that of shipwrecks; which are also declared to be the king's property by the same

<sup>s</sup> 1 Jones. 267–298.

<sup>t</sup> [Case of Mines] [1] Plowd. 315.

<sup>u</sup> Stiernh. de jure Sueonum. l. 2. c. 8. Gr. Coustum. cap. 17.

<sup>w</sup> 17 Edw. II. c. 11.

<sup>x</sup> Bracton. l. 3. c. 3. Britton. c. 17. (11) Fleta. l. 1. c. 45 & 46.

<sup>y</sup> ch. 4. pag. 216 [I. 144–5].

prerogative statute 17 Edw. II. c. 11. and were so, long before, at the common law. It is worthy observation, how greatly the law of wrecks has been altered, and the rigour of it gradually softened, in favour of the distressed proprietors. Wreck, by the antient common law, was where any ship was lost at sea, and the goods or cargo were thrown upon the land; in which case these goods, so wrecked, were adjudged to belong to the king: for it was held, that, by the loss of the ship, all property was gone out of the original owner<sup>z</sup>. But this was undoubtedly adding sorrow to sorrow, and was consonant neither to reason nor humanity. Wherefore it was first ordained by king Henry I, that if any person escaped alive out of the ship it should be no wreck<sup>a</sup>; and afterwards king Henry II, by his charter<sup>b</sup>, declared, that if on the coasts of either England, Poictou, Oleron, or Gascony,<sup>3</sup> any ship should be distressed, and either man or beast should escape or be found therein alive, the goods should remain to the owners, if they claimed them within three months; but otherwise should be esteemed a wreck, and should belong to the king, or other lord of the franchise. This was again confirmed with improvements by king Richard the first, who, in the second year of his reign<sup>c</sup>,<sup>4</sup> not only established these concessions, by ordaining that the owner, if he was shipwrecked and escaped, “omnes res suas liberas et quietas haberet [that he should keep his goods free and undisputed],” but also, that, if he perished, his children, or in default of them his brethren and sisters, should retain the property; and, in default of brother or sister, then the goods should remain to the king<sup>d</sup>. (12) And the law, so long after as the reign of Henry III, seems still to have been guided by the same equitable provisions. For then if a dog (for instance) escaped, by which the owner might be discovered, or if any certain mark were set on the goods, by which they might be known again, it was held to be no wreck<sup>e</sup>. And this is certainly most agreeable to reason; the rational claim of the king being only founded upon this, that the true owner cannot be ascertained. (13) But afterwards, in the statute of Westminster the first<sup>f</sup>, the law is laid down more agreeable to the charter of king Henry the second: and upon that statute hath stood the legal doctrine of wrecks to the present time. It enacts, that if any live thing escape (a man, a cat, or a dog; which, as in Bracton, are only put for examples<sup>g</sup>;) in this case, and, as it seems, in this case only, it is clearly not a legal wreck: but the sheriff of the county is bound to keep the 281 282

<sup>z</sup> Dr & St. d. 2. c. 51.

<sup>a</sup> Spelm. Cod. apud Wilkins. 305.

<sup>b</sup> 26 May, A.D. 1174. 1 Rym. Foed. 36.

<sup>c</sup> Rog. Hoved. in Ric I.

<sup>d</sup> In like manner Constantine the great, finding that by the imperial law the revenue of wrecks was given to the prince's treasury or fiscus, restrained it by an edict (Cod. 11. 5. 1.) and ordered them to remain to the owners; adding this humane expostulation, “Quod enim jus habet fiscus in aliena calamitate, ut de re tam luctuosa compendium sectetur?” [For what right has the exchequer in other men's misfortunes, that it should seek gain from so lamentable a source?]

<sup>e</sup> Bract. l. 3. c. 3.

<sup>f</sup> 3 Edw. I. c. 4.

<sup>g</sup> Flet. 1. c. 44. (14) 2 Inst. 167.

<sup>3</sup> Poitou, Oléron, and Gascony: French possessions of the Angevin English monarchs.

<sup>4</sup> In 1191.

goods a year and a day (as in France for one year, agreeably to the maritime laws<sup>5</sup> of Oleron<sup>h</sup>, and in Holland for a year and an half) that if any man can prove a property in them, either in his own right or by right of representation<sup>i</sup>, they shall be restored to him without delay; but, if no such property be proved within that time, they then shall be the king's. If the goods are of a perishable nature, the sheriff may sell them, and the money shall be liable in their stead<sup>k</sup>. This revenue of wrecks is frequently granted out to lords of manors, as a royal franchise; and if any one be thus entitled to wrecks in his own land, and the king's goods are wrecked thereon, the king may claim them at any time, even after the year and day<sup>l</sup>.

It is to be observed, that in order to constitute a legal wreck, the goods must come to land. If they continue at sea, the law distinguishes them by the barbarous and uncouth appellations of jetsam, flotsam, and ligan. Jetsam is where goods are cast into the sea, and there sink and remain under water: flotsam is where they continue swimming on the surface of the waves: ligan is where they are sunk in the sea, but tied to a cork or buoy, in order to be found again<sup>m</sup>. These are also the king's, if no owner appears to claim them; but, if any owner appears, he is entitled to recover the possession. For even if they be cast overboard, without any mark or buoy, in order to lighten the ship, the owner is not by this act of necessity construed to have renounced his property<sup>n</sup>: much less can things ligan be supposed to be abandoned, since the owner has done all in his power, to assert and retain his property. These three are therefore accounted so far a distinct thing from the former, that by the king's grant to a man of wrecks, things jetsam, flotsam, and ligan will not pass<sup>o</sup>.

283     WRECKS, in their legal acceptation, are at present not very frequent: <15> it rarely happening that every living creature on board perishes; and if any should survive, it is a very great chance, since the improvement of commerce, navigation, and correspondence, but the owner will be able to assert his property within the year and day limited by law. And in order to preserve this property entire for him, and if possible to prevent wrecks at all, our laws have made many very humane regulations; in a spirit quite opposite to those savage laws, which formerly prevailed in all the northern regions of Europe, and a few years ago were still said to subsist on the coasts of the Baltic sea, permitting the inhabitants to seize on whatever they could get as lawful prize; or, as an author of their own expresses it, "in naufragorum miseria et

<sup>h</sup> §. 28.

<sup>i</sup> 2 Inst. 168.

<sup>k</sup> [Eyston v Studd] [1] Plowd. 166 [recte 466].

<sup>l</sup> 2 Inst. 168. Bro. Abr. tit. Wreck.

<sup>m</sup> [Sir Henry Constable's case] 5 Rep. 106.

<sup>n</sup> Quae enim res in tempestate, levandae navis causa, ejiciuntur, hae dominorum permanent. Quia palam est, eas non eo animo ejici, quod quis habere nolit. [Those things which are cast overboard for the sake of lightening the ship still belong to the owners. For it is clear that they were not thrown away as relinquished because no longer wanted.] Inst. 2. 1. §. 48.

<sup>o</sup> [Sir Henry Constable's case] 5 Rep. 108.

<sup>5</sup> Roole des Jugemens d'Oleron (Laws of Oléron): a body of maritime law said to have been promulgated in France by Eleanor duchess of Aquitaine and wife of Henry II; subsequently adopted in England and codified in the Black Book of the Admiralty (1336). An English translation by Guy Miège was published in 1686; see also I. 268.

calamitate tanquam vultures ad praedam currere [to run like vultures to their prey, amidst the misery and calamity of the shipwrecked]<sup>p</sup>. For by the statute 2 Edw. III. c. 13. if any ship be lost on the shore, and the goods come to land (16) (so as it be not legal wreck) they shall be presently delivered to the merchants, they paying only a reasonable reward to those that saved and preserved them, which is intitled salvage. Also by the common law, if any persons (other than the sheriff) take any goods so cast on shore, which are not legal wreck, the owners might have a commission to enquire and find them out, and compel them to make restitution<sup>q</sup>. And by statute 12 Ann. st. 2 c. 18. confirmed by 4 Geo. I. c. 12. in order to assist the distressed, and prevent the scandalous illegal practices on some of our sea coasts, (too similar to those on the Baltic) it is enacted, that all head-officers and others of towns near the sea shall, upon application made to them, summon as many hands as are necessary, and send them to the relief of any ship in distress, on forfeiture of 100*l.* and, in case of assistance given, salvage shall be paid by the owners, to be assessed by three neighbouring justices. All persons that secrete any goods shall forfeit their treble value: and if they wilfully do any act whereby the ship is lost or destroyed, by making holes in her, stealing her pumps, or otherwise, they are guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy. Lastly, by the statute 26 Geo. II. c. 19. plundering any vessel either 284 in distress, or wrecked, and whether any living creature be on board or not, (for, whether wreck or otherwise, it is clearly not the property of the populace) such plundering, I say, or preventing the escape of any person that endeavors to save his life, or wounding him with intent to destroy him, or putting out false lights in order to bring any vessel into danger, are all declared to be capital felonies; in like manner as the destroying trees, steeples, or other stated seamarks, is punished by the statute 8 Eliz. c. 13. with (17) a forfeiture of 200*l.* Moreover, by the statute of George II, pilfering any goods cast ashore is declared to be petty larceny; and many other salutary regulations are made, for the more effectually preserving ships of any nation in distress<sup>r</sup>.

XII. A TWELFTH branch of the royal revenue, the right to mines, has its original from the king's prerogative of coinage, in order to supply him with materials: and therefore those mines, which are properly royal, and to which the king is entitled when found, are only those of silver and gold<sup>s</sup>. By the old common law, if gold or silver be found in mines of base metal, according to the opinion of some the whole was a royal mine, and belonged to the king; though others held that it only did so, if the quantity of gold or silver was of greater value than the quantity of base metal<sup>t</sup>. But now by the statutes 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 30. and 5 W. & M. c. 6. this difference is made

<sup>p</sup> Stiernh. de jure Sueon. l. 3. c. 5.

<sup>q</sup> F. N. B. 112.

<sup>r</sup> By the civil law, to destroy persons shipwrecked, or prevent their saving the ship, is capital. And to steal even a plank from a vessel in distress, or wrecked, makes the party liable to answer for the whole ship and cargo. (Ff. 47. 9. 3.) The laws also of the Wisigoths, and the most early Neapolitan constitutions, punished with the utmost severity all those who neglected to assist any ship in distress, or plundered any goods cast on shore. (Lindenbrog. Cod. LL. antiq. 146. 715.)

<sup>s</sup> 2 Inst. 577.

<sup>t</sup> [Case of Mines] [1] Plowd. (18) 366 [recte 310].

immaterial; it being enacted, that no mines of copper, tin, iron, or lead, shall be looked upon as royal mines, notwithstanding gold or silver may be extracted from them in any quantities: but that the king, or persons claiming royal mines under his 285 authority, may have the ore, (other than tin-ore in the counties of Devon and Cornwall) paying for the same a price stated in the act. This was an extremely reasonable law: for now private owners are not discouraged from working mines, through a fear that they may be claimed as royal ones; neither does the king depart from the just rights of his revenue, since he may have all the precious metal contained in the ore, paying no more for it than the value of the base metal which it is supposed to be; to which base metal the land-owner is by reason and law entitled.

XIII. To the same original may in part be referred the revenue of treasure-trove (derived from the French word, trover, to find) called in Latin thesaurus inventus, which is where any money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, is found hidden in the earth, or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown; in which case the treasure belongs to the king: but if he that hid it be known, or afterwards found out, the owner and not the king is entitled to it<sup>u</sup>. Also if it be found in the sea, or upon the earth, it doth not belong to the king, but the finder, if no owner appears<sup>w</sup>. So that it seems it is the hiding, not the abandoning of it, that gives the king a property: Bracton<sup>x</sup> defining it, in the words of the civilians, to be "vetus depositio pecuniae [the ancient concealment of the money]." This difference clearly arises from the different intentions, which the law implies in the owner. A man, that hides his treasure in a secret place, evidently does not mean to relinquish his property; but reserves a right of claiming it again, when he sees occasion; and, if he dies and the secret also dies with him, the law gives it the king, in part of his royal revenue. But a man that scatters his treasure into the sea, or upon the public surface of the earth, is construed to have absolutely abandoned his property, and returned it into the common stock, without any intention of reclaiming it; and therefore it belongs, as in a state of nature, to the first occupant, or finder; unless the owner appear and assert his right, which then proves that the loss was by accident, and not with an intent to renounce his property.

286 FORMERLY all treasure-trove belonged to the finder<sup>y</sup>; as was also the rule of the civil law<sup>z</sup>. Afterwards it was judged expedient for the purposes of the state, and particularly for the coinage, to allow part of what was so found to the king; which part was assigned to be all hidden treasure; such as is casually lost and unclaimed, and also such as is designedly abandoned, still remaining the right of the fortunate finder. And that the prince shall be entitled to this hidden treasure is now grown to be, according to Grotius<sup>a</sup>, "jus commune, et quasi gentium [the common law, and as it were the law of nations]:" for it is not only observed, he adds, in England, but in Germany, France, Spain, and Denmark. The finding of deposited treasure was much more frequent, and the treasures themselves more considerable, in the infancy of our

<sup>u</sup> 3 Inst. 132. Dalt. Sheriffs. c. 16.

<sup>w</sup> Britt. c. 17. Finch. L. 177.

<sup>x</sup> 13. c. 3. §. 4.

<sup>y</sup> Bracton. l. 3. c. 3. 3 Inst. 133.

<sup>z</sup> Ff. 41. 1. 31.

<sup>a</sup> de jur. b. & p. l. 2. c. 8. §. 7.

constitution than at present. When the Romans, and other inhabitants of the respective countries which composed their empire, were driven out by the northern nations, they concealed their money under-ground; with a view of resorting to it again when the heat of the irruption should be over, and the invaders driven back to their desarts. But as this never happened, the treasures were never claimed; and on the death of the owners the secret also died along with them. The conquering generals, being aware of the value of these hidden mines, made it highly penal to secrete them from the public service. In England therefore, as among the feudists<sup>b</sup>, the punishment of such as concealed from the king the finding of hidden treasure was formerly no less than death; but now it is only fine and imprisonment<sup>c</sup>.

XIV. WAIFS, bona waviata [waived goods], are goods stolen, and waived or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. These are given to the king by the law, as a punishment upon the owner, for not himself pursuing the felon, and taking away his goods from him<sup>d</sup>. And therefore if the party robbed do his diligence immediately to follow and apprehend the thief (which is called making 287 fresh suit) or do convict him afterwards, or procure evidence to convict him, he shall have his goods again<sup>e</sup>. Waived goods do also not belong to the king, till seised by somebody for his use; for if the party robbed can seize them first, though at the distance of twenty years, the king shall never have them<sup>f</sup>. If the goods are hid by the thief, or left any where by him, so that he had them not about him when he fled, and therefore did not throw them away in his flight; these also are not bona waviata, but the owner may have them again when he pleases<sup>g</sup>. The goods of a foreign merchant, though stolen and thrown away in flight, shall never be waifs<sup>h</sup>: the reason whereof may be, not only for the encouragement of trade, but also because there is no wilful default in the foreign merchant's not pursuing the thief, he being generally a stranger to our laws, our usages, and our language.

XV. ESTRAYS are such valuable animals as are found wandering in any manor or lordship, and no man knoweth the owner of them; in which case the law gives them to the king as the general owner and lord paramount of the soil, in recompence for the damage which they may have done therein; and they now most commonly belong to the lord of the manor, by special grant from the crown. But in order to vest an absolute property in the king or his grantees, they must be proclaimed in the church and two market towns next adjoining to the place where they are found; and then, if no man claims them, after proclamation and a year and a day passed, they belong to the king or his substitute without redemption<sup>i</sup>; even though the owner were a minor, or under any other legal incapacity<sup>k</sup>. A provision similar to which obtained in the old

<sup>b</sup> Glanv. l. 1. c. 2. Crag. 1. 16. 40.

<sup>c</sup> 3 Inst. 133.

<sup>d</sup> [Foxley v Annesley] Cro. Eliz. 694.

<sup>e</sup> Finch. L. 212.

<sup>f</sup> Ibid.

<sup>g</sup> [Foxley's case] 5 Rep. 109.

<sup>h</sup> Fitzh. Abr. tit. Estray. I. [R. and Waller v Hanger] 3 Bulstr. 19.

<sup>i</sup> Mirr. c. 3. §. 19.

<sup>k</sup> [Sir Henry Constable's case] 5 Rep. 108. Bro. Abr. tit. Estray. [Brownlow v Lambert] Cro. Eliz. 716.

288 Gothic constitution, with regard to all things that were found, which were to be thrice proclaimed, primum coram comitibus et viatoribus obviis, deinde in proxima villa vel pago, postremo coram ecclesia vel iudicio [first before his companions and passing travellers, then in the next village or area, lastly before the church, or court]: and the space of a year was allowed for the owner to reclaim his property<sup>l</sup>. If the owner claims them within the year and day, he must pay the charges of finding, keeping, and proclaiming them<sup>m</sup>. The king or lord has no property till the year and day passed: for if a lord keepeth an estray three quarters of a year, and within the year it strayeth again, and another lord getteth it, the first lord cannot take it again<sup>n</sup>. (19) Any beast may be an estray, that is by nature tame or reclaimable, and in which there is a valuable property, as sheep, oxen, swine, and horses, which we in general call cattle; and so (20) Fleta<sup>o</sup> defines it, pecus vagans, quod nullus petit, sequitur, vel advocat [wandering cattle, which no one claims, follows, or says is his]. For animals upon which the law sets no value, as a dog or cat, and animals ferae naturae [of a wild nature], as a bear or wolf, cannot be considered as estrays. So swans may be estrays, but not any other fowl<sup>p</sup>; whence they are said to be royal fowl. The reason of which distinction seems to be, that, cattle and swans being of a reclaimed nature, the owner's property in them is not lost merely by their temporary escape; and they also, from their intrinsic value, are a sufficient pledge for the expense of the lord of the franchise in keeping them the year and day. For he that takes an estray is bound, so long as he keeps it, to find it in provisions and (21) keep it from damage<sup>q</sup>; and may not use it by way of labour, but is liable to an action for so doing<sup>r</sup>. Yet he may milk a cow, or the like, for that tends to the preservation, and is for the benefit, of the animal<sup>s</sup>.

289 BESIDES the particular reasons before given why the king should have the several revenues of royal fish, shipwrecks, treasure-trove, waifs, and estrays, there is also one general reason which holds for them all; and that is, because they are bona vacantia [goods having no claimant], or goods in which no one else can claim a property. And therefore by the law of nature they belonged to the first occupant or finder; and so continued under the imperial law. But, in settling the modern constitutions of most of the governments in Europe, it was thought proper (to prevent that strife and contention, which the mere title of occupancy is apt to create and continue, and to provide for the support of public authority in a manner the least burthensome to individuals) that these rights should be annexed to the supreme power by the positive laws of the state. And so it came to pass that, as Bracton expresses it<sup>t</sup>, haec, quae nullius in bonis sunt, et olim fuerunt inventoris de jure naturali, jam efficiuntur principis de jure gentium [those things which are no man's property and formerly

<sup>l</sup> Stiernh. de jur. Gothor. l. 3. c. 5.

<sup>m</sup> Dalt. Sh. 79.

<sup>n</sup> Finch. L. 177.

<sup>o</sup> l. 1. c. 43.

<sup>p</sup> [Case of Swans] 7 Rep. 17.

<sup>q</sup> [Bagshawe v Goward] 1 Roll. Abr. 889.

<sup>r</sup> [Bagshawe v Goward] Cro. Jac. 147.

<sup>s</sup> Cro. Jac. 148. [Bagshaw v Gawin] Noy. 119.

<sup>t</sup> l. 1. c. 12.

belonged to the finder as by natural right, become now the property of the king by the law of nations].

XVI. THE next branch of the king's ordinary revenue consists in forfeitures of lands and goods for offences; bona confiscata [confiscated goods], as they are called by the civilians, because they belonged to the fiscus or imperial treasury; or, as our lawyers term them, forisfacta [forfeited], that is, such whereof the property is gone away or departed from the owner. The true reason and only substantial ground of any forfeiture for crimes consist in this; that all property is derived from society, being one of those civil rights which are conferred upon individuals, in exchange for that degree of natural freedom, which every man must sacrifice when he enters into social communities. If therefore a member of any national community violates the fundamental contract of his association, by transgressing the municipal law, he forfeits his right to such privileges as he claims by that contract; and the state may very justly resume that portion of property, or any part of it, which the laws have before assigned him. Hence, in every offence of an atrocious kind, the laws of England have exacted a total confiscation of the moveables or personal estate; and in many cases a perpetual, in others only a temporary, loss of the offender's immoveables or landed property; and have vested them both in the king, who is the person supposed to be offended, being the one visible magistrate in whom the majesty of the public resides. The particulars of these forfeitures will be more properly recited when we treat of crimes and misdemeanors. I therefore only mention them here, for the sake 290 of regularity, as a part of the census regalis [royal revenue]; and shall postpone for the present the farther consideration of all forfeitures, excepting one species only, which arises from the misfortune rather than the crime of the owner, and is called a deodand.

By this is meant whatever personal chattel is the immediate occasion of the death of any reasonable creature; which is forfeited to the king, to be applied to pious uses, and distributed in alms by his high almoner<sup>u</sup>; though formerly destined to a more superstitious purpose. It seems to have been originally designed, in the blind days of popery, as an expiation for the souls of such as were snatched away by sudden death; and for that purpose ought properly to have been given to holy church<sup>w</sup>; in the same manner, as the apparel of a stranger who was found dead was applied to purchase masses for the good of his soul. And this may account for that rule of law, that no deodand is due where an infant under <22> the years of discretion is killed by a fall from a cart, or horse, or the like, not being in motion<sup>x</sup>; whereas, if an adult person falls from thence and is killed, the thing is certainly forfeited. For the reason given by sir Matthew Hale seems to be very inadequate, viz. because an infant is not able to take care of himself: for why should the owner save his forfeiture, on account of the imbecillity of the child, which ought rather to have made him more cautious to prevent any accident of mischief? The true ground of this rule <23> seems rather to be, that the child, by reason of its want of discretion, is presumed incapable of actual sin, and therefore needed no deodand to purchase propitiatory masses: but every adult, who dies in actual sin, stood in need of such atonement, according to the humane superstition of the founders of the English law.

<sup>u</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 419. Fleta. l. 1. c. 25.

<sup>w</sup> Fitzh. Abr. tit. Enditement. pl. 27. Staunf. P. C. 20, 21.

<sup>x</sup> 3 Inst. 57. 1 Hal. P. C. 422.

291 THUS stands the law, if a person be killed by a fall from a thing standing still. But if a horse, or ox, or other animal, of his own motion, kill as well an infant as an adult, or if a cart run over him, they shall in either case be forfeited as deodands<sup>y</sup>; which is grounded upon this additional reason, that such misfortunes are in part owing to the negligence of the owner, and therefore he is properly punished by such forfeiture. A like punishment is in like cases inflicted by the mosaical law<sup>z</sup>: “if an ox gore a man that he die, the ox shall be stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten.” And among the Athenians<sup>a</sup>, whatever was the cause of a man’s death, by falling upon him, was exterminated or cast out of the dominions of the republic. Where a thing, not in motion, is the occasion of a man’s death, that part only which is the immediate cause is forfeited; as if a man be (25) climbing up a wheel, and is killed by falling from it, the wheel alone is a deodand<sup>b</sup>: but, wherever the thing is in motion, not only that part which immediately gives the wound, (as the wheel, which runs over his body) but all things which move with it and help to make the wound more dangerous (as the cart and loading, which increase the pressure of the wheel) are forfeited<sup>c</sup>. It matters not whether the owner were concerned in the killing or not; for if a man kills another with my sword, the sword is forfeited<sup>d</sup> as an accursed thing<sup>e</sup>. And therefore, in all indictments for homicide, the instrument of death and the value are presented and found by the grand jury (as, that the stroke was (26) given with a certain penknife, value sixpence) that the king or his grantee may claim the deodand: for it is no deodand, unless it be presented as such by a jury of twelve men<sup>f</sup>. No deodands are due for accidents happening upon the high sea, that being out of the jurisdiction of 292 the common law: but if a man falls from a boat or ship in fresh water, and is (27) drowned, the vessel and cargo are in strictness a deodand<sup>g</sup>.

DEODANDS, and forfeitures in general, as well as wrecks, treasure trove, royal fish, mines, waifs, and estrays, may be granted by the king to particular subjects, as a royal franchise: and indeed they are for the most part granted out to the lords of manors, or other liberties; to the perversion of their original design.

<sup>y</sup> Omnia, quae movent ad mortem, sunt Deo danda. [“What moves to death we understand / Is forfeit as a deodand”: J. Cowell, The Interpreter (Cambridge, 1607), under ‘Deodand.’] Bracton. l. 3. c. 5.

<sup>z</sup> Exod. 21. 28.

<sup>a</sup> (24) Aeschin. contr. Ctesiph.

<sup>b</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 422.

<sup>c</sup> 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

<sup>d</sup> A similar rule obtained among the antient Goths. Si quis, me nesciente, quocunque meo telo vel instrumento in perniciem suam abutatur; vel ex aedibus meis cadat, vel incidat in puteum meum, quantumvis tectum et munitum, vel in cataractam, et sub molendino meo confrignatur, ipse aliqua multa plectar; ut in parte infelicitatis meae numeretur, habuisse vel aedificasse aliquod quo homo periret. [If any one, without my knowledge, use any weapon or instrument of mine for his own destruction, or fall from my house, or into my well, however securely covered or fenced, or into my mill-stream and be crushed in my mill, it is to be punished by some fine; as the misfortune may be reckoned in part mine, to have built or possessed anything by which a man should perish.] Stiernhook de jure Goth. l. 3. c. 4.

<sup>e</sup> Dr. & St. d. 2. c. 51.

<sup>f</sup> 3 Inst. 57.

<sup>g</sup> 3 Inst. 58. 1 Hal. P. C. 423. Molloy de jur. maritim. 2. 225.

XVII. ANOTHER branch of the king's ordinary revenue arises from escheats of lands, which happen upon the defect of heirs to succeed to the inheritance; whereupon they in general revert to and vest in the king, who is esteemed, in the eye of the law, the original proprietor of all the lands in the kingdom. But the discussion of this topic more properly belongs to the second book of these commentaries, wherein we shall particularly consider the manner in which lands may be acquired or lost by escheat.

XVIII. I PROCEED therefore to the eighteenth and last branch of the king's ordinary revenue; which consists in the custody of idiots, from whence we shall be naturally led to consider also the custody of lunatics.

AN idiot, or natural fool, is one that hath had no understanding from his nativity; and therefore is by law presumed never likely to attain any. For which reason the custody of him and of his lands was formerly vested in the lord of the fee<sup>h</sup>; (and therefore still, by special custom, in some manors the lord shall have the ordering of idiot and lunatic copyholders<sup>i</sup>) but, by reason of the manifold abuses of this power by subjects, it was at last provided by common consent, that it should be given to the king, as the general conservator of his people, in order to prevent the idiot from wasting his estate, and reducing himself and his heirs to poverty and distress<sup>k</sup>: This 293 fiscal prerogative of the king is declared in parliament by statute 17 Edw. II. c. 9. which directs (in affirmance of the common law<sup>l</sup>), that the king shall have ward of the lands of natural fools, taking the profits without waste or destruction, and shall find them necessities; and after the death of such idiots he shall render the estate to the heirs; in order to prevent such idiots from aliening their lands, and their heirs from being disherited.

By the old common law there is a writ de idiota inquirendo, to enquire whether a man be an idiot or not<sup>m</sup>: which must be tried by a jury of twelve men; and if they find him purus idiota [an absolute idiot], the profits of his lands, and the custody of his person may be granted by the king to some subject, who has interest enough to obtain them<sup>n</sup>. This branch of the revenue hath been long considered as a hardship upon private families; and so long ago as in the 8 Jac. I. it was under the consideration of parliament, to vest this custody in the relations of the party, and to settle an equivalent on the crown in lieu of it; it being then proposed to share the same fate with the slavery of the feudal tenures, which has been since abolished<sup>o</sup>. Yet few instances can be given of the oppressive exertion of it, since it seldom happens that a jury finds a man an idiot a nativitate [from his birth], but only non compos mentis [not in his right mind] from some particular time; which has an operation very different in point of law.

<sup>h</sup> Flet. l. 1. c. 11. §. 10.

<sup>i</sup> [John Roger's case] [3] Dyer. 302. [Drury v Fitch] Hutt. 17. [Cox v Dawson] Noy 27.

<sup>k</sup> F. N. B. 232.

<sup>l</sup> <28> [Beverley's case] 4 Rep. 126.

<sup>m</sup> F. N. B. 232.

<sup>n</sup> This power, though of late very rarely exerted, is still alluded to in common speech, by that usual expression of begging a man for a fool.

<sup>o</sup> 4 Inst. 203. Com. Journ. 1610.

A MAN is not an idiot<sup>p</sup>, if he hath any glimmering of reason, so that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters. But a man who is born deaf, dumb, and blind, is looked upon by the law as in the same state with an idiot<sup>q</sup>; he being supposed (29) incapable of understanding, as wanting those senses which furnish the human mind with ideas.

294 A LUNATIC, or non compos mentis, is one who hath had understanding, but by disease, grief, or other accident hath lost the use of his (30) reason. A lunatic is indeed properly one that hath lucid intervals; sometimes enjoying his senses, and sometimes not, and that frequently depending upon the change of the moon. But under the general name of non compos mentis (which sir Edward Coke says is the most legal name<sup>r</sup>) are comprized not only lunatics, but persons under frenzies; or who lose their intellects by disease; those that grow deaf, dumb, and blind, not being born so; or such, in short as (31) are by any means rendered incapable of conducting their own affairs. To these also, as well as idiots, the king is guardian, but to a very different purpose. For the law always imagines, that these accidental misfortunes may be removed; and therefore only constitutes the crown a trustee for the unfortunate persons, to protect their property, and to account to them for all profits received, if they recover, or after their decease to their representatives. And therefore it is declared by the statute 17 Edw. II. c. 10. that the king shall provide for the custody and sustentation of lunatics, and preserve their lands and the profits of them, for their use, when they come to their right mind: and the king shall take nothing to his own use; and if the parties die in such estate, the residue shall be distributed for their souls by the advice of the ordinary, and of course (by the subsequent amendments of the law of administrations) shall now go to their executors or (32) administrators.

THE method of proving a person non compos is very similar to that of proving him an idiot. The lord chancellor, to whom, by special authority from the king, the custody of idiots and lunatics is intrusted<sup>s</sup>, upon petition or information, grants a commission in nature of the writ de idiota inquirendo, to enquire into the party's state of mind; and if he be found non compos, he usually commits the care of his person, with a suitable allowance for his maintenance, to some friend, who is then called his 295 committee. However, to prevent sinister practices, the next heir is (33) never permitted to be this committee of the person; because it is his interest that the party should die. But, it hath been said, there lies not the same objection against his next of kin, provided he be not his heir; for it is his interest to preserve the lunatic's life, in order to increase the personal estate by savings, which he or his family may hereafter be entitled to enjoy<sup>t</sup>. The heir is generally made the manager or committee of the estate, it being clearly his interest by good management to keep it in condition; accountable however to the court of chancery, and to the non compos himself, if he recovers; or otherwise, to his administrators.

<sup>p</sup> F. N. B. 233.

<sup>q</sup> Co. Litt. 42. Fleta. l. 6. c. 40.

<sup>r</sup> 1 Inst. 246.

<sup>s</sup> [Sheldon v Aland] 3 P. Wms. 108.

<sup>t</sup> [Ex parte Ludlow] 2 P. Wms. 638.

IN this care of idiots and lunatics the civil law agrees with ours; by assigning them tutors to protect their persons, and curators to manage their estates. But in another instance the Roman law goes much beyond the English. For, if a man by notorious prodigality was in danger of wasting his estate, he was looked upon as non compos and committed to the care of curators or tutors by the praetor<sup>u</sup>. And by the laws of Solon such prodigals were branded with perpetual infamy<sup>w</sup>. But with us, when a man on an inquest of idiocy hath been returned an unthrift and not an idiot<sup>x</sup>, no farther proceedings have been had. And the propriety of the practice itself seems to be very questionable. It was doubtless an excellent method of benefiting the individual and of preserving estates in families; but it hardly seems calculated for the genius of a free nation, who claim and exercise the liberty of using their own property as they please. “Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non laedas [use your property so that you do not injure that of another],” is the only restriction our laws have given with regard to oeconomical prudence. And the frequent circulation and transfer of lands and other property, which can not be effected without extravagance somewhere, are perhaps not a little conducive towards keeping our mixed constitution in its due health and vigour. 296

THIS may suffice for a short view of the king’s ordinary revenue, or the proper patrimony of the crown; which was very large formerly, and capable of being increased to a magnitude truly formidable: for there are very few estates in the kingdom, that have not, at some period or other since the Norman conquest, been vested in the hands of the king by forfeiture, escheat, or otherwise. But, fortunately for the liberty of the subject, this hereditary landed revenue, by a series of improvident management, is sunk almost to nothing; and the casual profits, arising from the other branches of the census regalis [royal revenue], are likewise almost all of them alienated from the crown. In order to supply the deficiencies of which, we are now obliged to have recourse to new methods of raising money, unknown to our early ancestors; which methods constitute the king’s extraordinary revenue. For, the publick patrimony being got into the hands of private subjects, it is but reasonable that private contributions should supply the public service. Which, though it may perhaps fall harder upon some individuals, whose ancestors have had no share in the general plunder, than upon others, yet, taking the nation throughout, it amounts to nearly the same; provided the gain by the extraordinary, should appear to be no greater than the loss by the ordinary, revenue. And perhaps, if every gentleman in the kingdom was to be stripped of such of his lands as were formerly the property of the crown; was to be again subject to the inconveniences of purveyance and pre-emption, the oppression of forest laws, and the slavery of feodal tenures; and was to resign into the king’s hands all his royal franchises of waifs, wrecks, estrays, treasure-trove, mines, deodands, forfeitures, and the like; he would find himself a greater loser, than by paying his quota to such taxes, as are necessary to the support of government. The thing therefore to be wished and aimed at in a land of liberty, is by no means the total 297 abolition of taxes, which would draw after it very pernicious consequences, and the very supposition of which is the height of political absurdity. For as the true idea of government and magistracy will be found to consist in this, that some few men are deputed by many others to preside over public affairs, so that individuals may the better be enabled to attend to their private concerns; it is necessary that those individuals should be bound to contribute a portion of their private gains, in order to support that government, and reward that magistracy, which protects them in the enjoyment of their respective properties. But the things to be aimed at are wisdom and moderation, not only in granting, but also in the method of raising, the necessary supplies; by contriving to do both in such a manner as may be most conducive to the national welfare and at the same time most consistent with oeconomy and the liberty of the subject; who, when properly taxed, contributes only, as was before observed<sup>y</sup>, some part of his property, in order to enjoy the rest.

<sup>u</sup> Solent praetores, si talem hominem invenerint, qui neque tempus neque finem expensarum habet, sed bona sua dilacerando et dissipando profundit, curatorem ei dare, exemplo furiosi et tamdiu erunt ambo in curatione, quamdiu vel furiosus sanitatem, vel ille bonos mores, receperit. [The praetors are accustomed, when they find a man who sets no bounds to his expenses, but lavishes his fortune in acts of dissipation, to appoint him a guardian as though he were a madman, and as the madman so the spendthrift shall be in wardship until the one be restored to sanity and the other to good conduct.] Ff. 27. 10. 1.

<sup>w</sup> Potter. Antiqu. b. 1. c. 26.

<sup>x</sup> Bro. Abr. tit. Ideot. 4.

THESE extraordinary grants are usually called by the synonymous names of aids, subsidies, and supplies; and are granted, we have formerly seen<sup>z</sup>, by the commons of Great Britain, in parliament assembled: who, when they have voted a supply to his majesty, and settled the quantum of that supply, usually resolve themselves into what is called a committee of ways and means, to consider of the ways and means of raising the supply so voted. And in this committee every member (though it is looked upon as the peculiar province of the chancellor of the exchequer) may propose such scheme of taxation as he thinks will be least detrimental to the public. The resolutions of this committee (when approved by a vote of the house) are in general esteemed to be (as it were) final and conclusive. For, though the supply cannot be actually raised upon the subject till directed by an act of the whole parliament, yet no monied man will scruple to advance to the government any quantity of ready cash, on the credit 298 of a bare vote of the house of commons, though no law be yet passed to establish it.

THE taxes, which are raised upon the subject, are either annual or perpetual. The usual annual taxes are those upon land and malt.

I. THE land tax, in its modern shape, has superseded all the former methods of rating either property, or persons in respect of their property, whether by tenths or fifteenths, subsidies on land, hydages, scutages, or talliages; a short explication of
 (34) which will greatly assist us in understanding our antient laws and history.

TENTHS, and fifteenths<sup>a</sup>, were temporary aids issuing out of personal property, and granted to the king by parliament. They were formerly the real tenth or fifteenth part of all the moveables belonging to the subject; when such moveables, or personal estates, were a very different and a much less considerable thing than what they usually are at this day. Tenths are said to have been first granted under Henry the second, who took advantage of the fashionable zeal for croisades to introduce this new taxation, in order to defray the expense of a pious expedition to Palestine, which he really or seemingly had projected against Saladin emperor of the Saracens;<sup>6</sup> whence it was originally denominated the Saladin tenth<sup>b</sup>. But afterwards fifteenths were more usually granted than tenths. Originally the amount of these taxes was uncertain, being levied by assessments new made at every fresh grant of the commons, a commission for which is preserved by Matthew Paris<sup>c</sup>: but it was at length reduced to a certainty in the eighth of Edw. III.<sup>7</sup> when, by virtue of the king's commission, new taxations were made of every township, borough, and city in the kingdom, and recorded in the exchequer; which rate was, at the time, the fifteenth part of the value of every township, the whole amounting to about 29000*l*. and therefore it still kept up the name of a fifteenth, when by the alteration of the value of money and the encrease of personal property, things came to be in a very different situation. So that when, of later years, the commons granted the king a fifteenth, every parish in England immediately knew their proportion of it; that is, the same identical sum that was assessed by the same aid in the eighth of Edw. III; and then raised it by a rate among themselves, and returned it into the royal exchequer. 299

<sup>y</sup> pag. 271 [I. 181].

<sup>z</sup> pag. 163 [I. 111–12].

<sup>a</sup> 2 Inst. 77. 4 Inst. 34.

THE other antient levies were in the nature of a modern land tax; for we may trace up the original of that charge as high as to the introduction of our military tenures<sup>d</sup>; when every tenant of a knight's fee was bound, if called upon, to attend the king in his army for forty days in every year. But this personal attendance growing troublesome in many respects, the tenants found means of compounding for it, by first sending others in their stead, and in process of time by making a pecuniary satisfaction to the crown in lieu of it. This pecuniary satisfaction at last came to be levied by assessments, at so much for every knight's fee, under the name of scutages; which appear to have been levied for the first time in the fifth year of Henry the second, on account of his expedition to Toulouse, and were then (I apprehend) mere arbitrary compositions, as the king and the subject could agree. But this precedent being afterwards abused into a means of oppression, (35) (by levying scutages on the landholders by the royal authority only, whenever our kings went to war, in order to hire mercenary troops and pay their contingent expences) it became thereupon a matter of national complaint; and king John was obliged to promise in his magna carta<sup>e</sup>, that no scutage should be imposed without the consent of the common council of the realm. This clause was indeed omitted in the charters of Henry III, where<sup>f</sup> we only find it stipulated, that scutages should be taken as they were used to be in the time of king Henry the second, Yet afterwards, by a variety of statutes under Edward I and his grandson<sup>g</sup>, it was provided, that the king shall not take any aids or 300

<sup>b</sup> Hoved. A.D. 1188. Carte. I. 719. Hume. I. 329.

<sup>c</sup> A.D. 1232.

<sup>d</sup> See the second book of these commentaries.

<sup>e</sup> cap. 14.

<sup>f</sup> 9 Hen. III. c. 37.

<sup>g</sup> 25 Edw. I. c. 5 & 6. 34 Edw. I. st. 4. c. 1. 14 Edw. III. st. 2. c. 1.

<sup>6</sup> During the crusades, a term for Arabs or Muslims.

<sup>7</sup> In 1334.

tasks, any talliage or tax, but by the common assent of the great men and commons in parliament.

OF the same nature with scutages upon knights-fees were the assessments of hydage upon all other lands, and of talliage upon cities and burghs<sup>h</sup>. But they all gradually fell into disuse, upon the introduction of subsidies, about the time of king Richard II and king Henry IV. These were a tax, not immediately imposed upon property, but upon persons in respect of their reputed estates, after the nominal rate of 4s. in the pound for lands, and <36> 2s. 6d. for goods; and for those of aliens in a double proportion. But this assessment was also made according to an antient valuation; wherein the computation was so very moderate, and the rental of the kingdom was supposed to be so exceeding low, that one subsidy of this sort did not, according to sir Edward Coke<sup>i</sup>, amount to more than 70000*l*. whereas a modern land tax at the same rate produces two millions. It was antiently the rule never to grant more than one subsidy, and two fifteenths at a time; but this rule <37> was broke through for the first time on a very pressing occasion, the Spanish invasion in 1588; when the parliament gave queen Elizabeth two subsidies and four fifteenths. Afterwards, as money sunk in value, more subsidies were given; and we have an instance in the first parliament of 1640, of the king's desiring twelve subsidies of the commons, to be levied in three years; which was looked upon as a startling proposal: <38> though lord Clarendon tells us<sup>k</sup>, that the speaker, serjeant Glanville, made it manifest to the house, how very inconsiderable a sum twelve subsidies amounted to, by telling them he had computed what he was <39> to pay for them; and, when he named the sum, he being known to be possessed of a great estate, it seemed not worth any farther deliberation. And indeed, upon calculation, 301 we shall find, that the total amount of these twelve subsidies, to be raised in three years, is less than what is now raised in one year, by a land tax of two shillings in the pound.

THE grant of scutages, talliages, or subsidies by the commons did not extend to spiritual preferments; those being usually taxed at the same time by the clergy themselves in convocation; which grants of the clergy were confirmed in parliament, otherwise they were illegal, and not binding; as the same noble writer observes of the subsidies granted by the convocation, <40> who continued sitting after the dissolution of the first parliament in 1640. A subsidy granted by the clergy was after the rate of 4s. in the pound according to the valuation of their livings in the king's books; and amounted, sir Edward Coke tells us<sup>l</sup>, to about 20000*l*. While this custom continued, convocations were wont to sit as frequently as parliaments: but the last subsidies, thus given by the clergy, were those confirmed by statute 15 Car. II. c. 10. since which another method of taxation has generally prevailed, which takes in the clergy as well as the laity; in recompense for which the beneficed clergy have from that period been allowed to vote at <41> the elections of knights of the shire<sup>m</sup>; and thenceforward also the practice of giving ecclesiastical subsidies hath fallen into total disuse.

<sup>h</sup> Madox. hist. exch. 480.

<sup>i</sup> 4 Inst. 33.

<sup>k</sup> Hist. b. 2.

<sup>l</sup> 4 Inst. 33.

<sup>m</sup> Dalt. of sheriffs, 418. Gilb. hist. of exch. c. 4.

THE lay subsidy was usually raised by commissioners appointed by the crown, or the great officers of state: and therefore in the beginning of the civil wars between Charles I and his parliament, the latter, having no other sufficient revenue to support themselves and their measures, introduced the practice of laying weekly and monthly assessments<sup>n</sup> of a specific sum upon the several counties of the kingdom; to be levied by a pound rate on lands and personal estates: which were occasionally continued during the whole usurpation, sometimes at the rate of 120000*l.* a month; sometimes at inferior rates<sup>o</sup>. After the restoration the antient method of granting subsidies, instead of such monthly assessments, was twice, and twice only, renewed; viz. in 1663, when four subsidies were granted by the temporalty, and four by the clergy; and in 1670, when 800000*l.* was raised by way of subsidy, which was the last time of raising supplies in that manner. For, the monthly assessments being now established by custom, being raised by commissioners named by parliament, and producing a more certain revenue; from that time forwards we hear no more of subsidies; but occasional assessments were granted as the national emergencies required. These periodical assessments, the subsidies which preceded them, and the more antient scutage, hydag, and talliage, were to all intents and purposes a land tax; and the assessments were sometimes expressly called so<sup>p</sup>. Yet a popular opinion has prevailed, that the land tax was first introduced in the reign of king William III; because in the year 1692 a new assessment or valuation of estates was made throughout the kingdom; which, though by no means a perfect one, had this effect, that a supply of 500000*l.* was equal to 1*s.* in the pound of the value of the estates given in. And, according to this enhanced valuation, from the year 1693 to the present, a period of <42> above seventy years, the land tax has continued an annual charge upon the subject; above half the time at 4*s.* in the pound, sometimes at 3*s.*, sometimes at 2*s.*, twice<sup>q</sup> at 1*s.*, but without any total intermission. The medium has been 3*s.* 3*d.* in the pound, being equivalent to twenty three antient subsidies, and amounting annually to more than a million and an half of money. The method of raising it is by charging a particular sum upon each county, according to the valuation given in, A.D. 1692: and this sum is assessed and raised upon individuals (their personal estates, as well as real, being liable thereto) by commissioners appointed in the act, being the principal landholders of the county, and their officers. 302

II. THE other annual tax is the malt tax; which is a sum of 750000*l.*, raised every year by parliament, ever since 1697, by a duty of 6*d.* in the bushel on malt, and a proportionable sum on certain liquors, such as cyder and perry, which might otherwise prevent the consumption of malt. This is under the management of the commissioners of the excise; and is indeed itself no other than an annual excise, the nature of which species of taxation I shall presently explain: only premising at present, that in the year 1760 an additional perpetual excise of 3*d.* per bushel was laid upon <43> malt; and in 1763 a proportionable excise was <44> laid upon cyder and perry. 303

<sup>n</sup> [By ordinances dated] 29 Nov. [1642] 4 Mar. 1642 [i.e. 1643 new style].

<sup>o</sup> One of these bills of assessment, in 1656, is preserved in Scobell's collection, 400.

<sup>p</sup> Com. Journ. 26 Jun. 9 Dec. 1678.

<sup>q</sup> in the years 1732 and 1733.

THE perpetual taxes are,

I. THE customs; or the duties, toll, tribute, or tariff, payable upon merchandize exported and imported. The considerations upon which this revenue (or the more antient part of it, which arose only from exports) was invested in the king, were said to be two<sup>r</sup>; 1. Because he gave the subject leave to depart the kingdom, and to carry his goods along with him. 2. Because the king was bound of common right to maintain and keep up the ports and havens, and to protect the merchant from pirates. Some have imagined they are called with us customs, because they were the inheritance of the king by immemorial usage and the common law, and not granted him by any statute<sup>s</sup>: but sir Edward Coke hath clearly shewn<sup>t</sup>, that the king's first claim to them was by grant of parliament 3 Edw. I. though the record thereof is not now extant. And indeed this is in express words confessed by statute 25 Edw. I. c. 7. wherein the king promises to take no customs from merchants, without the common assent of the realm, "saving to us and our heirs, the (45) customs on wools, skins, and leather, formerly granted to us by the commonalty aforesaid." These were formerly called the hereditary customs of the crown; and were due on the exportation only of the said three commodities, and of none other: which were stiled the staple commodities of the kingdom, because they were obliged to be brought to those ports where the king's staple was established, in order to be there first rated, and then exported<sup>u</sup>. They were denominated in the barbarous Latin of our antient records, custuma<sup>w</sup>; not consuetudines, which is the language of our law whenever it means merely usages. The duties on wool, sheep-skins, or woolfells, and leather, exported, were called custuma antiqua sive magna [the ancient or great customs]; and were payable by every merchant, as well native as stranger; with this difference, that merchant-strangers paid an additional toll, viz. half as much again as was paid by natives. The custuma parva et nova [the new and small customs] were an impost of 3d. in the pound, due from merchant-strangers only, for all commodities as well imported as exported; which was usually called the alien's duty, and was first granted in 31 Edw. I.<sup>x</sup> But these antient hereditary customs, especially those on wool and woolfells, came to be of little account when the nation became sensible of the advantages of a home manufacture, and prohibited the exportation of wool by statute 11 Edw. III. c. 1.

THERE is also (46) another antient hereditary duty belonging to the crown, called the prisage or butlerage of wines. Prisage was a right of taking two tons of wine from (47) every ship importing into England twenty tons or more; which by Edward I was

<sup>r</sup> Dyer. 165.

<sup>s</sup> [Anon. (1538)] Dyer. 43. pl. 24.

<sup>t</sup> 2 Inst. 58, 59.

<sup>u</sup> [Case of customs] Dav. 9.

<sup>w</sup> This appellation seems to be derived from the French word coustum, or coûtum, which signifies toll or tribute, and owes its own etymology to the word coust, which signifies price, charge, or, as we have adopted it in English, cost.

<sup>x</sup> 4 Inst. 29.

<sup>8</sup> Carta Mercatoria (1303): a royal grant to foreign merchants.

exchanged into a duty of 2s. for every ton imported by merchant-strangers; which is called butlerage, because paid to the king's butler<sup>y</sup>.

OTHER customs payable upon exports and (49) imports are distinguished into subsidies, tonnage, poundage, and other imposts. (50) Subsidies are such as were imposed by parliament upon any of the staple commodities before mentioned, over and above the custuma antiqua et magna: tonnage was a duty upon all wines imported, over and above the prisage and butlerage aforesaid: poundage was a duty imposed ad valorem [according to the value], at the rate of 12*d.* in the pound, on all other merchandize whatsoever: and the other imposts were such as were occasionally laid on by parliament, as circumstances and times required<sup>z</sup>. These distinctions are now in a manner forgotten, except by the officers immediately concerned in this department; their produce being in effect all blended together, under the one denomination of the customs. 305

By these we understand, at present, a duty or subsidy paid by the merchant, at the quay, upon all imported as well as exported commodities, by authority of parliament; unless where, for particular national reasons, certain rewards, bounties, or drawbacks, are allowed for particular exports or imports. Those of tonnage and poundage, in particular, were at first granted, as the old statutes, and particularly 1 Eliz. c. 19 express it, for the defence of the realm, and the keeping and safeguard of the seas, and for the intercourse of merchandize safely to come into and pass out of the same. They were at first usually granted only for a stated term of years, as, for two years in 5 Ric. II<sup>a</sup>; but (50) in Henry the fifth's time, they were granted him for life by a statute in the third year of his reign; and again to Edward IV for the term of his life also: since which time they were regularly granted to all his successors, for life, (51) sometimes at their first, sometimes at other subsequent parliaments, till the reign of Charles the first; when, (52) as had before happened in the reign of Henry VIII<sup>b</sup> and other princes, they were neglected to be asked. (54) And yet they were imprudently and unconstitutionally levied and taken without consent of (55) parliament, (though more than one had been assembled) for fifteen years together; which was one of the causes of those unhappy discontents, justifiable at first in too many instances, but which degenerated at last into causeless rebellion and murder. For, as in every other, so in this particular case, the king (previous to the commencement of hostilities) gave the nation ample satisfaction for the errors of his former conduct, by passing an act<sup>c</sup>, whereby he renounced all power in the crown of levying the duty of tonnage and poundage, without the express consent of parliament; and also all power of imposition upon any merchandizes whatever. Upon the restoration this duty was granted to king Charles the second for life, and so it was to his two immediate successors; but now by three several statutes, 9 Ann. c. 6. 1 Geo. I. c. 12. and 3 Geo. I. c. 7. it is made perpetual and mortgaged for the debt of the publick. The customs, thus imposed by parliament, 306

<sup>y</sup> [Case of customs] Dav. 8. b. [Kennycott v Bogen] (48) 2 Bulstr. 254.

<sup>z</sup> [Case of customs] Dav. 11, 12.

<sup>a</sup> [Case of customs] Dav. 12.

<sup>b</sup> (53) Stat. 6 Hen. VIII. c. 14.

<sup>c</sup> 16 Car. I. c. 8.

are chiefly contained in two books of rates, set forth by parliamentary authority<sup>d</sup>; one signed by sir Harbottle Grimston, speaker of the house of commons in Charles the second's time; and the other an additional one signed by sir Spenser Compton, speaker in the reign of George the first; to which also subsequent additions have been made. Aliens pay a larger proportion than natural subjects, which is what is now generally understood by the aliens' duty; to be exempted from which is one principal cause of the frequent applications to parliament for acts of naturalization.

THESE customs are then, we see, a tax immediately paid by the merchant, although ultimately by the consumer. And yet these are the duties felt least by the people; and, if prudently managed, the people hardly consider that they pay them at all. For the merchant is easy, being sensible he does not pay them for himself; and the consumer, who really pays them, confounds them with the price of the commodity: in the same manner as Tacitus observes, that the emperor Nero gained the reputation of abolishing the <56> tax on the sale of slaves, though he only transferred it from the buyer to the seller; so that it was, as he expresses it, "remissum magis specie, quam vi: quia cum venditor pendere juberetur, in partem pretii emptoribus accrescebat [remitted rather in appearance than reality, for when the seller was ordered to pay it, he increased proportionally the price to the buyers]<sup>e</sup>." But this inconvenience attends it on the other hand, that these imposts, if too heavy, are a check and cramp upon trade; and especially when the value of the commodity bears little or no proportion to the quantity of the duty imposed. This in consequence gives rise also to smuggling, which 307 then becomes a very lucrative employment: and its natural and most reasonable punishment, viz. confiscation of the commodity, is in such cases quite ineffectual; the intrinsic value of the goods, which is all that the smuggler has paid, and therefore all that he can lose, being very inconsiderable when compared with his prospect of advantage in evading the duty. Recourse must therefore be had to extraordinary punishments to prevent it; perhaps even to capital ones: which destroys all proportion of punishment<sup>f</sup>, and puts murderers upon an equal footing with such as are really guilty of no natural, but merely a positive offence.

THERE is also another ill consequence attending high imposts on merchandize, not frequently considered, but indisputably certain; that the earlier any tax is laid on a commodity, the heavier it falls upon the consumer in the end: for every trader, through whose hands it passes, must have a profit, not only upon the raw material and his own labour and time in preparing it, but also upon the very tax itself, which he advances to the government; otherwise he loses the use and interest of the money which he so advances. To instance in the article of foreign paper. The merchant pays a duty upon importation, which he does not receive again till he sells the commodity, perhaps at the end of three months. He is therefore equally entitled to a profit upon that duty which he pays at the customhouse, as to a profit upon the original price which he pays to the manufacturer abroad; and considers it accordingly in the price he demands of the stationer. When the stationer sells it again, he requires a profit of the printer or bookseller upon the whole sum advanced by him to the merchant: and the bookseller does not forget to charge the full proportion to the student or ultimate consumer; who therefore does not only pay the original duty, but the profits of these three intermediate traders, who have successively advanced it for him. This might be carried much farther in any mechanical, or more complicated, branch of trade.

<sup>d</sup> Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 4. 11 Geo. I. c. 7.

<sup>e</sup> Hist. l. 13.

<sup>f</sup> Montesqu. Sp. L. b. 13. c. 8.

II. DIRECTLY opposite in its nature to this is the excise duty; which is an inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail sale, which is the last stage before the consumption. This is doubtless, impartially speaking, the most oeconomical way of taxing the subject: the charges of levying, collecting, and managing the excise duties being considerably less in proportion, than <57> in any other branch of the revenue. It also renders the commodity cheaper to the consumer, than charging it with customs to the same amount would do; for the reason just now given, because generally paid in a much later stage of it. But, at the same time, the rigour and arbitrary proceedings of excise-laws seem hardly compatible with the temper of a free nation. For the frauds that might be committed in this branch of the revenue, unless a strict watch is kept, make it necessary, wherever it is established, to give the officers a power of entring and searching the houses of such as deal in excisable commodities, at any hour of the day, and, in many cases, of the night likewise. And the proceedings in case of transgressions are so summary and sudden, that a man may be convicted in two days time in the penalty of many thousand pounds by two commissioners or justices of the peace; to the total exclusion of the trial by jury, and disregard of the common law. For which reason, though lord Clarendon tells us<sup>g</sup>, that to his knowlege the earl of Bedford (who was made lord treasurer by king Charles the first, to oblige his parliament) intended to have set up the excise in England, yet it never made a part of that unfortunate prince's revenue; being first introduced, on the model of the Dutch prototype, by the parliament itself after its rupture with the crown. Yet such was the opinion of its general unpopularity, that when in 1642 "aspersions were cast by malignant persons upon the house of commons, that they intended to introduce excises, the house for its vindication therein did declare, that these rumours were false and scandalous; and that their authors should be apprehended and brought to condign punishment<sup>h</sup>." 308
<58> Its original establishment was in 1643, and its progress was gradual<sup>i</sup>; being at first laid upon those persons and commodities, where it was supposed the hardship would be least perceivable, viz. the makers and venders of beer, ale, cyder, and perry<sup>k</sup>; and the royalists at Oxford soon followed the example of their brethren at Westminster 309

<sup>g</sup> Hist. b. 3.

<sup>h</sup> Com. Journ. 8 Oct. 1642.

<sup>i</sup> The translator and continuator ['R.P.'] of Petavius's chronological history <59> (Lond. 1659.) informs us, that it was first moved for, 28 Mar. 1643, by Mr [William] Prynne. And it appears from the journals of the commons that on that day the house resolved itself into a committee to consider of raising money, in consequence of which the excise was afterwards voted. But Mr. Prynne was not a member of parliament till 7 Nov. 1648; and published in 1654 "A protestation against the illegal, detestable, and oft-condemned tax and extortion of excise in general." It is probably therefore a mistake of the printer for Mr Pymme, who was intended for chancellor of the exchequer under the earl of Bedford. (Lord Clar. b. 7.).

<sup>k</sup> Com. Journ. 17 May 1643.

by imposing a similar duty; both sides protesting that it should be continued no longer than to the end of the war, and then be utterly abolished<sup>1</sup>. But the parliament at Westminster soon after imposed it on flesh, wine, tobacco, sugar, and such a multitude of other commodities that it might fairly be denominated general; in pursuance of the plan laid down by Mr Pymme (who seems to have been the father of the excise) in his letter to sir John Hotham<sup>m</sup>, signifying, “that they had proceeded in the excise to many particulars, and intended to go on farther; but that it would be necessary to use the people to it by little and little.” And afterwards, when (60) the people had been accustomed to it for a series of years, the succeeding champions of liberty boldly and openly declared, “the impost of excise to be the most easy and indifferent levy that could be laid upon the people<sup>n</sup>.” and accordingly continued it during the whole usurpation. Upon king Charles’s return, it having then been long established and its produce well known, some part of it was given to the crown, in the 12 Car. II, by way of purchase (as was before observed) for the feudal tenures and 310 other oppressive parts of the hereditary revenue. But, from its first original to the present time, its very name has been odious to the people of England. It has nevertheless been imposed on abundance of other commodities in the reigns of king William III, and every succeeding prince, to support the enormous expenses occasioned by our wars on the continent. Thus brandies and other spirits are now excised at the distillery; printed silks and linens, at the printers; starch and hair powder, at the maker’s; gold and silver wire, at the wiredrawer’s; (61) all plate whatsoever, first in the hands of the vendor, who pays yearly for a licence to sell it, and afterwards in the hands of the occupier, who also pays an annual duty for having it in his custody; and coaches and other wheel carriages, for which the occupier is excised; though not with the same circumstances of arbitrary strictness with regard to plate and coaches, as in the other instances. To these we may add coffee and tea, chocolate, and cocoa paste, for which the duty is paid by the retailer; all artificial wines, commonly called sweets;<sup>9</sup> paper and pasteboard, first when made, and again if stained or printed; malt as before-mentioned; vinegars; and the manufacture of glass; for all which the duty is paid by the manufacturer; hops, for which the person that gathers them is answerable; candles and soap, which are paid for at the maker’s; malt liquors brewed for sale, which are excised at the brewery; cyder and perry, (62) at the mill; and leather and skins, at the tanner’s. A list, which no friend to his country would wish to see farther encreased.

III. I PROCEED therefore to a third duty, namely that upon salt; which is another distinct branch of his majesty’s extraordinary revenue, and consists in an excise of 3s. 4d. per bushel imposed upon all salt, by several statutes of king William and other subsequent reigns. This is not generally called an excise, because under the management of different commissioners: but the commissioners of the salt duties

<sup>1</sup> Lord Clar. b. 7.

<sup>m</sup> 30 May 1643. Dugdale of the troubles, 120.

<sup>n</sup> Ord[inance of Parliament]. 14 Aug. 1649. c. 50. Scobell. 72. Stat. 1656. c. 19. Scobell. 453.

<sup>9</sup> ‘mixed Liquors commonly called or knowne by the Name of Sweets’ (7 & 8 Will. III. c. 30).

have by statute 1 Ann. c. 21. the same powers, and must observe the same regulations, as those of other excises. This tax had usually been only temporary; but by statute 26 Geo. II. c. 3. was made <63> perpetual.

311

IV. ANOTHER very considerable branch of the revenue is levied with greater cheerfulness, as, instead of being a burden, it is a manifest advantage to the public. I mean the post-office, or duty for the carriage of letters. As we have traced the original of the excise to the parliament of 1643, so it is but justice to observe that this useful invention <64> owes its birth to the same assembly. It is true, there existed postmasters in much earlier times: but I apprehend their business was confined to the furnishing of posthorses to persons who were desirous to travel expeditiously, and to the dispatching extraordinary packets upon <65> special occasions. The outline of the present plan seems to have been originally conceived by Mr Edmond Prideaux, who was appointed attorney general to the commonwealth after the murder of king Charles.<sup>10</sup> He was a chairman of a committee in 1642 for considering what rates should be set upon inland letters<sup>o</sup>; and afterwards appointed postmaster by an ordinance of both the houses<sup>p</sup>, in the execution of which office he first established a weekly conveyance of letters into all parts of the nation<sup>q</sup>; thereby saving to the public the charge of maintaining postmasters, to the amount of 7000*l.* per annum. And, his own emoluments being <66> probably considerable, the common council of London endeavoured to erect another post-office in opposition to his, till checked by <67> a resolution of the commons<sup>r</sup>, declaring, that the office of postmaster is and ought to be in the sole power and disposal of the parliament. This office was afterwards farmed by one Manley in 1654<sup>s</sup>. But, in 1657, a regular post-office was erected by the authority of the protector and his parliament, upon nearly the same model as has been ever since adopted, with the same rates of postage as were continued till the reign of queen Anne<sup>t</sup>. After the restoration a similar office, with some improvements, was established by statute 12 Car. II. c. 35. but the rates of letters were altered, and some farther regulations added, by the statutes 9 Ann. c. 10. 6 Geo. I. c. 21. 26 Geo. II. c. 12 and 5 Geo. III. c. 25. and penalties were enacted, in order to confine the carriage of letters to the public office only, except in some few cases: a provision, which is absolutely necessary; for nothing but an exclusive right can support an office of this sort: many rival independent offices would only serve to ruin one another. The privilege of letters coming free of postage, to and from members of parliament, was claimed by the house of commons in 1660, when the first legal settlement of the present post-office was made<sup>u</sup>; but afterwards dropped<sup>w</sup> upon a private assurance from the crown,

312

<sup>o</sup> Com. Journ. 28 Mar. 1642.

<sup>p</sup> Ibid. 7 Sept. 1644.

<sup>q</sup> Ibid. 21 Mar. 1649.

<sup>r</sup> <68> Ibid.

<sup>s</sup> Scobell. 358.

<sup>t</sup> Com. Journ. 9 Jun. 1657. Scobell. 511.

<sup>u</sup> Com. Journ. 17 Dec. 1660.

<sup>w</sup> Ibid. 22 Dec. 1660.

<sup>10</sup> The Commonwealth: broadly, the republic established in England during the interregnum (1649–60), including the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell (1653–58).

that this privilege should be allowed the members<sup>x</sup>. And accordingly a warrant was constantly issued to the postmaster-general<sup>y</sup>, directing the allowance thereof, to the extent of two ounces in weight: till at length it was expressly confirmed by statute 4 Geo. III. c. 24; which adds many new regulations, rendered necessary by the great abuses crept into the practice of franking; whereby the annual amount of franked letters had gradually increased, from 23600*l.* in the year 1715, to 170700*l.* in the year 1763<sup>z</sup>. There cannot be devised a more eligible method, than this, of raising money upon the subject: for therein both the government and the people find a mutual benefit. The government acquires a large revenue; and the people do their business with greater ease, expedition, and cheapness, than they would be able to do if no such tax (and of course no such office) existed.

V. A FIFTH branch of the perpetual revenue consists in the stamp duties, which are a tax imposed upon all parchment and paper whereon any legal proceedings, or private instruments of almost any nature whatsoever, are written; and also upon licences for retailing <70> wines, of all denominations; upon all almanacks, newspapers, advertisements, cards, dice, and pamphlets containing less than six sheets of paper.

313 These imposts are very various, according to the nature of the thing stamped, rising gradually from a penny to ten pounds. This is also a tax, which though in some instances it may be heavily felt, by greatly increasing the expence of all mercantile as well as legal proceedings, yet (if moderately imposed) is of service to the public in general, by authenticating instruments, and rendering it much more difficult than formerly to forge deeds of any standing; since, as the officers of this branch of the revenue vary their stamps frequently, by marks perceptible to none but themselves, a man that would forge a deed of king William's time, must know and be able to counterfeit the stamp of that date also. In France and some other countries the duty is laid on the contract itself, not on the instrument in which it is <71> contained: but this draws the subject into a thousand nice disquisitions and disputes concerning the nature of his contract, and whether taxable or not; in which the farmers of the revenue are sure to have the <72> advantage. <73> Our method answers the purposes of the state as well, and consults the ease of the subject much better. The first institution of the stamp duties was by statute 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 21. and they have since in many instances been <74> encreased to five times their original amount.

VI. A SIXTH branch is the duty upon houses and windows. As early as the conquest mention is made in domesday book of fumage or fuage, vulgarly called smoke farthings; which were paid by custom to the king for every chimney in the house. And we read that Edward the black prince (soon after his successes in France) in imitation of the English custom, imposed a tax of a florin upon every hearth in his French dominions<sup>a</sup>. But the first parliamentary establishment of it in England was by statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 10. whereby an hereditary revenue of 2*s.* for every hearth, in all houses paying to church and poor, was granted to the king for ever. And, by subsequent

<sup>x</sup> Ibid. 16 Apr. 1735.

<sup>y</sup> Ibid. 26 Feb. 1734.

<sup>z</sup> Ibid. 28 Mar. 1764.

<sup>a</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xxiii. 463. Spelm. Gloss. tit. Fuage.

statutes, for the more regular assessment of this tax, the constable and two other substantial inhabitants of the parish, to be <75> appointed yearly, were, once in every year, empowered to view the inside of every house in the parish. But, upon the revolution, by statute 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 10. hearth-money was declared to be “not only a great oppression to the poorer sort, but a badge of slavery upon the whole people, exposing every man’s house to be entered into, and searched at pleasure, by persons unknown to him; and therefore, to erect a lasting monument of their majesties’ goodness in every house in the kingdom, the duty of hearth-money was taken away and abolished.” This monument of goodness remains among us to this day: but the prospect of it was somewhat darkened when, in six years afterwards, by statute 7 W. III. c. 18. a tax was laid upon all houses (except cottages) of 2s. now advanced to <76> 3s. per house, and a tax also upon all windows, if they <77> exceed nine, in such house. Which rates have been <78> from time to time varied, <79> (particularly by statutes 20 Geo. II. c. 3. and 31 Geo. II. c. 22.) and power is given to surveyors, appointed by the crown, to inspect the outside of houses, and also to pass through any house two days in the year, into any court or yard to inspect the windows <80> there.

<81> VII. THE seventh branch of the extraordinary perpetual revenue is the duty arising from licences to hackney coaches and chairs in London, and the parts adjacent. In 1654 two hundred hackney coaches were allowed within London, Westminster, and six miles round, under the direction of the court of aldermen<sup>b</sup>. By statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 2. four hundred were licensed; and the money arising thereby was applied to repairing the streets<sup>c</sup>. This number was increased to seven hundred by statute 5 W. & M. c. 22. and the duties vested in the crown: and by the statute 9 Ann. c. 23. and other <82> subsequent statutes<sup>d</sup>, there are now eight hundred licensed coaches and four hundred chairs. This revenue is governed by commissioners of its own, and is, in truth, a benefit to the subject; as the expense of it is felt by no individual, and its necessary regulations have established a competent jurisdiction, whereby a very refractory race of men may be kept in some tolerable order.

<84> VIII. THE eighth and last branch of the king’s extraordinary perpetual revenue is the duty upon offices and pensions; <85> consisting in a payment of 1s. in the pound (over and above all other <86> duties) out of all salaries, fees, and perquisites, of offices and pensions payable by the <87> crown. This highly popular taxation was imposed by statute 31 Geo. II. c. 22. and is under the direction of the commissioners of the land tax.

THE clear neat produce of these several branches of the revenue, after all charges of collecting and management paid, <88> amounts annually to about seven millions and three quarters sterling; <89> besides two millions and a quarter raised annually, at an average, by the land and malt tax. How these immense sums are appropriated, is next to be considered. And this is, first and principally, to the payment of the interest of the national debt.

IN order to take a clear and comprehensive view of the nature of this national debt, it must first be premised, that after the revolution, when our new connections with

<sup>b</sup> Scobell. 313.

<sup>c</sup> Com. Journ. 14 Feb. 1661.

<sup>d</sup> <83> 10 Ann. c. 19. §. 158. 12 Geo. I. c. 15. 33 Geo. II. c. 25.

Europe introduced a new system of foreign politics, the expenses of the nation, not only in settling the new establishment, but in maintaining long wars, as principals, on the continent, for the security of the Dutch barrier, reducing the French monarchy, settling the Spanish succession, supporting the house of Austria, maintaining the liberties of the Germanic body, and other purposes, increased to an unusual degree: insomuch that it was not thought advisable to raise all the expenses of any one year by taxes to be levied within that year, lest the unaccustomed weight of them should create murmurs among the people. It was therefore the policy of the times, to anticipate the revenues of their posterity, by borrowing immense sums for the current service of the state, and to lay no more taxes upon the subject than would suffice to 316 pay the annual interest of the sums so borrowed: by this means converting the principal debt into a new species of property, transferrable from one man to another at any time and in any quantity. A system which seems to have had its original in the state of Florence, A.D. 1344: which government then owed about 60000*l.* sterling; and, being unable to pay it, formed the principal into an aggregate sum, called metaphorically a mount or bank, the shares whereof were transferrable like our stocks, with interest at 5 per cent. the prices varying according to the exigencies of the state<sup>e</sup>. (90) This laid the foundation of what is called the national debt: for a few long annuities created in the reign of Charles II will hardly deserve that name. And the example then set has been so closely followed during the long wars in the reign of queen Anne, and since, that the capital of the national debt, (funded and unfunded) (91) amounted in January 1765 to upwards of 145,000,000*l.* to pay the interest of which, and the charges for management, amounting annually to about four millions and three quarters, (92) the revenues just enumerated are in the first place mortgaged, and made perpetual by parliament. Perpetual, I say; but still redeemable by the same authority that imposed them: which, if it at any time can pay off the capital, will abolish those taxes which are raised to discharge the interest.

By this means the quantity of property in the kingdom is greatly encreased in idea, compared with former times; yet, if we coolly consider it, not at all encreased in reality. We may boast of large fortunes, and quantities of money in the funds. But where does this money exist? It exists only in name, in paper, in public faith, in parliamentary security: and that is undoubtedly sufficient for the creditors of the public to rely on. But then what is the pledge which the public faith has pawned for the security of these debts? The land, the trade, and the personal industry of the subject; from which the money must arise that supplies the several taxes. In these therefore, and these only, the property of the public creditors does really and 317 intrinsically exist: and of course the land, the trade, and the personal industry of individuals, are diminished in their true value just so much as they are pledged to answer. If A's income amounts to 100*l.* per annum; and he is so far indebted to B, that he pays him 50*l.* per annum for his interest; one half of the value of A's property is transferred to B the creditor. The creditor's property exists in the demand which he has upon the debtor, and no where else; and the debtor is only a trustee to his creditor for one half of the value of his income. In short, the property of a creditor of the publick, consists in a certain portion of the national taxes: by how much therefore he is the richer, by so much the nation, which pays these taxes, is the poorer.

<sup>e</sup> Pro tempore, pro spe, pro commodo, minuitur eorum pretium atque augecit. [Their price was lessened and increased according to time, expectation, or advantage.] Aretin. See Mod. Un. Hist. xxxvi. 116.

THE only advantage, that can result to a nation from public debts, is the encrease of circulation by multiplying the cash of the kingdom, and (93) creating a new species of money, always ready to be employed in any beneficial undertaking, by means of its transferrable quality; and yet (94) productive of some profit, even when it lies idle and unemployed. A certain proportion of debt seems therefore to be highly useful to a trading people; but what that proportion is, it is not for me to determine. Thus much is indisputably certain, that the present magnitude of our national incumbrances very far exceeds all calculations of commercial benefit, and is productive of the greatest inconveniences. For, first, the enormous taxes, that are raised upon the necessities of life for the payment of the interest of this debt, are a hurt both to trade and manufactures, by raising the price as well of the artificer's subsistence, as of the raw material, and of course, in a much greater proportion, the price of the commodity (95) itself. Secondly, if part of this debt be owing to foreigners, either they draw out of the kingdom annually a considerable quantity of specie for the interest; or else it is made an argument to grant them unreasonable privileges in order to induce them to reside here. Thirdly, if the whole be owing to subjects only, it is then charging the active and industrious subject, who pays his share of the taxes, to maintain the indolent and idle creditor who receives them. Lastly, and principally, it weakens the internal strength of a state, by anticipating those resources which should be reserved to defend it in case of necessity. The interest we now pay for our debts would be nearly sufficient to maintain any war, that any national motives could require. And if our ancestors in king William's time had annually paid, so long as their exigences lasted, even a less sum than we now annually raise upon their accounts, they would in the time of war have borne no greater burdens, than they have bequeathed to and settled upon their posterity in time of peace; and might have been eased the instant the exigence was over. 318

(96) The produce of the several taxes beforementioned were originally separate and distinct funds; being securities for the sums advanced on each several tax, and for them only. But at last it became necessary, in order to avoid confusion, as they multiplied yearly, to reduce the number of these separate funds, by uniting and blending them together; superadding the faith of parliament for the general security of the whole. So that there are now only three capital funds of any account, the aggregate fund, and the general fund, so called from such union and addition; and the south sea fund, being the produce of the taxes appropriated to pay the interest of such part of the national debt as was advanced by that company and its annuitants. Whereby the separate funds, which were thus united, are become mutual securities for each other; and the whole produce of them, thus aggregated, is liable to pay such interest or annuities as were formerly charged upon each distinct fund; the faith of the legislature being moreover engaged to supply any casual deficiencies.

THE customs, excises, and other taxes, which are to support these funds, depending on contingencies, upon exports, imports, and consumptions, must necessarily be of a very uncertain amount; <97> but they have always been considerably more than was sufficient to answer the charge upon them. The surplusses therefore of the three great 319 national funds, the aggregate, general, and south sea funds, over and above the interest and annuities charged upon them, are directed by statute 3 Geo. I. c. 7. to be carried together, and to attend the disposition of parliament; and are usually denominated the sinking fund, because originally destined to sink and lower the national debt. To this have been since added many other intire duties, granted in subsequent years; and the annual interest of the sums borrowed on their respective credits is charged on and payable out of the produce of the sinking fund. However the neat surplusses and savings, after all deductions paid, <98> amount annually to a very considerable sum; particularly in the year ending at Christmas 1764, to about two millions and a quarter. For, as the interest on the national debt has been at several times reduced, (by the consent of the proprietors, who had their option either to lower their interest or be paid their principal) the savings from the appropriated revenues <99> must needs be extremely large. This sinking fund is the last resort of the nation; <100> on which alone depend all the hopes we can entertain of ever discharging or moderating our incumbrances. And therefore <101> the prudent application of the large sums, now arising from this fund, is a point of the utmost importance, and well worthy the serious attention of parliament; <102> which has thereby been enabled, in this present year 1765, to reduce above two millions sterling of the <103> public debt.

BUT, before any part of the aggregate fund (the surplusses whereof are one of the chief ingredients that form the sinking fund) can be applied to diminish the principal of the public debt, it stands mortgaged by parliament to raise an annual sum for the maintenance of the king's houshold and the civil list. For this purpose, in the late reigns, the produce of certain branches of the excise and customs, the post-office, the duty on wine licences, the revenues of the remaining crown lands, the profits arising from courts of justice, (which articles include all the hereditary revenues of the crown) and also a clear annuity of 120000*l.* in money, were settled on the king for life, 320 for the support of his majesty's houshold, and the honour and dignity of the crown. And, as the amount of these several branches was uncertain, (though in the last reign<sup>11</sup> they <104> were generally computed to raise almost a million) if they did not arise annually to 800,000*l.* the parliament engaged to make up the deficiency. But his present majesty having, soon after his accession, spontaneously signified his consent, that his own hereditary revenues might be so disposed of as might best conduce to the utility and satisfaction of the public, and having graciously accepted the limited sum of 800000*l. per annum* for the support of his <105> civil list (and that also charged with three life annuities, to the princess of Wales,<sup>12</sup> the duke of Cumberland, and the princess Amalie, to the amount of 77000*l.*) the said hereditary and other revenues are now carried into and made a part of the aggregate fund, and the aggregate fund is charged with the payment of the whole annuity to the crown of 800000*l. per annum*<sup>f</sup>. Hereby the revenues themselves, being put under the same care and management as the other branches of the public patrimony, <106> will produce more and be better collected than heretofore; and <107> the public is a gainer of upwards of 100000*l.* per annum by this disinterested bounty of his majesty. The civil list, thus liquidated, together with the <108> four millions and three quarters, interest of the national debt, and the two millions and a quarter produced from the sinking fund, make up the seven millions and three quarters per annum, neat money, which were before stated to be the annual produce of our perpetual taxes; besides the immense, though uncertain, sums arising from the annual taxes on land and malt, but which, at an average, may be calculated at more than two millions and a quarter; and, added to the preceding sum, make the clear produce of the taxes, exclusive of the charge of collecting, which are raised yearly on the people of this <109> country, and returned into the king's exchequer, amount to <110> upwards of ten millions sterling.

<sup>f</sup> Stat. 1 Geo. III. c. 1.

<sup>11</sup> Of George II.

<sup>12</sup> Augusta, princess of Wales.

THE expences defrayed by the civil list are those that in any shape relate to civil government; as, the <111> expenses of the household; all salaries to officers of state, to the judges, and every of the king's servants; the appointments to foreign ambassadors; 321 the <112> maintenance of the royal family; the king's private expenses, or privy purse; and other very numerous outgoings, as secret service money, pensions, and other bounties: which sometimes have so far exceeded the revenues appointed for that purpose, that application has been made to parliament to discharge the debts contracted on the civil list; as particularly in 1724, when one <113> million was granted for that purpose by the statute <114> 11 Geo. I. c. 17.

THE civil list is indeed properly the whole of the king's revenue in his own distinct capacity; the rest being rather the revenue of the public, or its creditors, though collected, and distributed again, in the name and by the officers of the crown: it now standing in the same place, as the hereditary income did formerly; and, as that has gradually diminished, the parliamentary appointments have encreased. The whole revenue of queen Elizabeth did not amount to more than 600000*l.* a year<sup>g</sup>: that of king Charles I was<sup>h</sup> 800000*l.* and the revenue voted for king Charles II was<sup>i</sup> 1200000*l.* <115> though it never in fact amounted to quite so much<sup>k</sup>. But it must be observed, that under these sums were included all manner of public expenses, among which lord Clarendon in his speech to the parliament computed that the charge of the navy and land forces amounted annually to 800000*l.* which was ten times more than before the former troubles<sup>l</sup>. The same revenue, subject to the same charges, was settled on king James II<sup>m</sup>: but by the encrease of trade, and more frugal management, it amounted on an average to a million and half per annum, (besides other additional customs, granted by parliament<sup>n</sup>, which produced an annual revenue of 400000*l.*) out of which his fleet and army were maintained at the yearly expense of<sup>o</sup> 1100000*l.* After the revolution, when the parliament took into its own hands the annual support

<sup>g</sup> Lord Clar. continuation. 163.

<sup>h</sup> Com. Journ. 4 Sept. 1660.

<sup>i</sup> Ibid.

<sup>k</sup> Ibid. 4 Jun. 1663. Lord Clar. ibid.

<sup>l</sup> Ibid. 165.

<sup>m</sup> Stat. 1 Jac. II. c. 1.

<sup>n</sup> Stat. 1 Jac. II. c. 3 & 4.

<sup>o</sup> Com. Journ. 1 Mar. 20 Mar. 1688.

322 of the forces, both maritime and military, a civil list revenue was settled on the new king and queen, amounting, with the hereditary duties, to 700000*l.* per annum<sup>p</sup>; and the same was continued to queen Anne and king George I<sup>q</sup>. That of king George II, we have seen, was nominally augmented to <sup>r</sup> 800000*l.* and in fact <116> was considerably more. But that of his present majesty is expressly limited to that <117> sum; and, by reason of the charges upon it, amounts at present to little more than 700000*l.* And upon the whole it is doubtless much better for the crown, and also for the people, to have the revenue settled upon the modern footing rather than the antient. For the crown; because it is more certain, and collected with greater ease: for the people; because they are now delivered from the feudal hardships, and other odious branches of the prerogative. And though complaints have sometimes been made of the encrease of the civil list, yet if we consider the sums that have been formerly granted, the limited extent under which it is now established, the revenues and prerogatives given up in lieu of it by the <118> crown, and (above all) the diminution of the value of money compared with what it was worth in the last century, we must acknowledge these complaints to be void of any rational foundation; and that it is impossible to support that dignity, which a king of Great Britain should maintain, with an income in any degree less than what is now established by parliament.

THIS finishes our enquiries into the fiscal prerogatives of the king; or his revenue, both ordinary and extraordinary. We have therefore now chalked out all the principal outlines of this vast title of the law, the supreme executive magistrate, or the king's majesty, considered in his several capacities and points of view. But, before we intirely dismiss this subject, it may not be improper to take a short comparative review of the power of the executive magistrate, or prerogative of the crown, as it stood in former days, and as it stands at present. And we cannot but observe, that most of the laws for ascertaining, limiting, and restraining this prerogative have been made within the 323 compass of little more than a century past; from the petition of right in 3 Car. I. to the present time. So that the powers of the crown are now to all appearance greatly curtailed and diminished since the reign of king James the first: particularly, by the abolition of the star chamber and high commission courts in the reign of Charles the first, and by the disclaiming of martial law, and the power of levying taxes on the subject, by the same prince: by the disuse of forest laws for a century past: and by the many excellent provisions enacted under Charles the second; especially, the abolition of military tenures, purveyance, and preemption; the habeas corpus act; and the act to prevent the discontinuance of parliaments for above three years: and, since the revolution, by the strong and emphatical words in which our liberties are asserted in the bill of rights, and act of settlement; by the act for triennial, since turned into septennial, elections; by the exclusion of certain officers from the house of commons; by rendering the seats of the judges permanent, and their <119> salaries independent; and by restraining the king's pardon <120> from operating on parliamentary impeachments. Besides all this, if we consider how the crown is impoverished and stripped of all its antient revenues, <121> so that it greatly depends on the liberality of parliament for its necessary support and maintenance, we may perhaps be led to think, that the ballance is enclined pretty strongly to the popular scale, and that the executive magistrate has neither independence nor power enough left, to form that check upon the lords and commons, which the founders of our constitution intended.

<sup>p</sup> Ibid. 14 Mar. 1701.

<sup>q</sup> Ibid. 17 Mar. 1701. 11 Aug. 1714.

<sup>r</sup> Stat. 1 Geo. II. c. 1.

BUT, on the other hand, it is to be considered, that every prince, in the first parliament after his accession, has by long usage a truly royal addition to his hereditary revenue settled upon him for his life; and has never any occasion to apply to parliament for supplies, but upon some public necessity of the whole realm. This restores to him that constitutional independence, which at his first accession seems, it must be owned, to be wanting. And then, with regard to power, we may find perhaps that the hands of government are at least sufficiently strengthened; and that an English monarch is now in no danger of being overborne by either the nobility or the people. The instruments of power are not perhaps so open and avowed as they formerly were, and therefore are the less liable to jealous and invidious reflections; but they are not the weaker upon that account. In short, our national debt and taxes (besides the inconveniences before-mentioned) have also in their natural consequences thrown such a weight of power into the executive scale of government, as we cannot think was intended by our patriot ancestors; who gloriously struggled for the abolition of the then formidable parts of the prerogative; and by an unaccountable want of foresight established this system in their stead. The entire collection and management of so vast a revenue, being placed in the hands of the crown, have given rise to such a multitude of new officers, created by and removeable at the royal pleasure, that they have extended the influence of government to every corner of the nation. Witness the commissioners, and the multitude of dependents on the customs, in every port of the kingdom; the commissioners of excise, and their numerous subalterns, in every inland district; the postmasters, and their servants, planted in every town, and upon every public road; the commissioners of the stamps, and their distributors, which are full as scattered and full as numerous; the officers of the salt duty, which, though a species of excise and conducted in the same manner, are yet made a distinct corps from the ordinary managers of that revenue; the surveyors of houses and windows; the receivers of the land tax; the managers of lotteries; and the commissioners of hackney coaches; all which are either mediately or immediately appointed by the crown, and removeable at pleasure without any reason assigned: these, it requires but little penetration to see, must give that power, on which they depend for subsistence, an influence most amazingly extensive. To this may be added the frequent opportunities of conferring particular obligations, by preference in loans, subscriptions, tickets, remittances, and other money-transactions, which will greatly encrease this influence; and that over those persons whose attachment, on account of their wealth, is frequently the most desirable. All this is the natural, though perhaps the unforeseen, consequence of erecting our funds of credit, and to support them establishing our present perpetual taxes: the whole of which is entirely new since the restoration in 1660; and by far the greatest part since the revolution in 1688. And the same may be said with regard to the officers in our numerous army, and the places which the army has created. All which put together <122> gives the executive power so persuasive an energy with respect to the persons themselves, and so prevailing an interest with their friends and families, as will amply make amends for the loss of external prerogative.

BUT, though this profusion of offices should have no effect on individuals, there is still another newly acquired branch of power; and that is, not the influence only, but the force of a disciplined army: paid indeed ultimately by the people, but immediately by the crown; raised by the crown, officered by the crown, commanded by the crown. They are kept on foot it is true only from year to year, and that by the power of parliament: but during that year they must, by the nature of our constitution, if raised at all, be at the absolute disposal of the crown. And there need but few words to demonstrate how great a trust is thereby reposed in the prince by his people. A trust, that is more than equivalent to a thousand little troublesome prerogatives.

ADD to all this, that, besides the civil list, the immense revenue of <123> seven millions sterling, which is annually paid to the creditors of the publick, or carried to the sinking fund, is first deposited in the royal exchequer, and thence issued out to the respective offices of payment. This revenue the people can never refuse to raise, because it is made perpetual by act of parliament: which also, when well considered, will appear to be a trust of great delicacy and high importance.

UPON the whole therefore I think it is clear, that, whatever may have become of the nominal, the real power of the crown has not been too far weakened by any transactions
 326 in the last century. Much is indeed given up; but much is also acquired. The stern commands of prerogative have yielded to the milder voice of influence; the slavish and exploded doctrine of non-resistance has given way to a military establishment by law; and to the disuse of parliaments has succeeded a parliamentary trust of an immense perpetual revenue. When, indeed, by the free operation of the sinking fund, our national debts shall be lessened; when the posture of foreign affairs, and the universal introduction of a well planned and national militia, will suffer our formidable army to be thinned and regulated; and when (in consequence of all) our taxes shall be gradually reduced; this adventitious power of the crown will slowly and imperceptibly diminish, as it slowly and imperceptibly rose. But, till that shall happen, it will be our especial duty, as good subjects and good Englishmen, to reverence the crown, and yet guard against corrupt and servile influence from those who are intrusted with its authority; to be loyal, yet free; obedient, and yet independent: and, above every thing, to hope that we may long, very long, continue to be governed by a sovereign, who, in all those public acts that have personally proceeded from himself, hath manifested the highest veneration for the free constitution of Britain; hath already in more than one instance remarkably strengthened its outworks; and will therefore never harbour a thought, or adopt a persuasion, in any the remotest degree detrimental to public liberty.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>13</sup> Blackstone was patronized by George III from 1759, when the (then) Prince of Wales solicited copies of his lectures, and in parliament he was usually listed as a 'King's Friend' (see Prest, Blackstone, 162–3, 227).

OF SUBORDINATE MAGISTRATES.

IN a former chapter of these commentaries<sup>a</sup> we distinguished magistrates into two kinds; supreme, or those in whom the sovereign power of the state resides; and subordinate, or those who act in an inferior secondary sphere. We have hitherto considered the former kind only, namely, the supreme legislative power or parliament, and the supreme executive power, which is the king: and are now to proceed to enquire into the rights and duties of the principal subordinate magistrates.

AND herein we are not to investigate the powers and duties of his majesty's great officers of state, the lord treasurer, lord chamberlain, the principal secretaries, or the like; because I do not know that they are in that capacity in any considerable degree the objects of our laws, or have any very important share of magistracy conferred upon them: except that the secretaries of state are allowed the power of commitment, in order to bring offenders to trial<sup>b</sup>. Neither shall I here treat of the office and authority of the lord chancellor, or the other judges of the superior courts of justice; because they will find a more proper place in the third part of these commentaries. Nor shall I enter into any minute disquisitions, with regard to the rights and dignities of mayors and aldermen, or other magistrates of particular corporations; because these 328 are mere private and strictly municipal rights, depending entirely upon the domestic constitution of their respective franchises. But the magistrates and officers, whose rights and duties it will be proper in this chapter to consider, are such as are generally in use and have a jurisdiction and authority dispersedly throughout the kingdom: which are, principally, sheriffs; coroners; justices of the peace; constables; surveyors of highways; and overseers of the poor. In treating of all which I shall enquire into, first, their antiquity and original; next, the manner in which they are appointed and may be removed; and, lastly, their rights and duties. And first of sheriffs.

I. THE sheriff is an officer of very great antiquity in this kingdom, his name being derived from (2) two Saxon words, shire reeve, the bailiff or officer of the shire. He is called in Latin vice-comes, as being the deputy of the earl or comes; to whom the custody of the shire is said to have been committed at the first division of this kingdom into counties. But the earls in process of time, by reason of their high employments and attendance on the king's person, not being able to transact the business of the county, were delivered of that burden<sup>c</sup>; reserving to themselves the honour, but the labour was laid on the sheriff. So that now the sheriff does all the king's business in the county; and though he be still called vice-comes, yet he is entirely independent of, and not subject to the earl; the king by his letters patent committing custodiam comitatus [the custody of the county] to the sheriff, and him alone.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 2. pag. 142 [I. 98].

<sup>b</sup> [Search's case] 1 Leon. 70. [Hellyard's case] 2 Leon. 175. [R. v Kendal & Rowe] Comb. 343. [Case of Kendal and Others] 5 Mod. 84. [R. v Kendal & Roe] [1] (1) Salk. 347.

<sup>c</sup> Dalton of sheriffs, c. 1.

SHERIFFS were formerly chosen by the inhabitants of the several counties. In confirmation of which it was ordained by statute 28 Edw. I. c. 8. that the people should have election of sheriffs in every shire, where the shrievalty is not of inheritance. (3) For antiently in some counties, particularly on the borders, the sheriffs were hereditary; as I apprehend they are in Scotland, and in the county of Westmorland, to this day: and the city of London has also the inheritance of the shrievalty of Middlesex vested in their body by charter<sup>d</sup>. The reason of these popular elections is assigned in the same statute, c. 13. "that the commons might chuse such as would not be a burthen to them." And herein appears plainly a strong trace of the democratical part of our constitution; in which form of government it is an indispensable requisite, that the people should chuse their own magistrates<sup>e</sup>. This election was in all probability not absolutely vested in the commons, but required the royal approbation. For in the Gothic constitution, (4) the judges of their county courts (which office is executed by our sheriff) were elected by the people, but confirmed by the king; and the form of their election was thus managed; the people, or incolae territorii [inhabitants of the territory], chose twelve electors, and they nominated three persons, ex quibus rex unum confirmabat<sup>f</sup> [of whom the king confirmed one]. But, with us in England, these popular elections, growing tumultuous, were put an end to by the statute 9 Edw. II. st. 2. which enacted, that the sheriffs should from thenceforth be assigned by (5) the lord chancellor, treasurer, and the judges; as being persons in whom the same trust might with confidence be reposed. By statutes 14 Edw. III. c. 7. and (6) 23 Hen. VI. c. 8. the chancellor, treasurer, chief justices, and chief baron, are to make this election; and that on the morrow of All Souls<sup>1</sup> in the (7) exchequer. But the custom now is (and has been at least ever since the time of Fortescue<sup>g</sup>, who was chief justice and chancellor to Henry the sixth) that all the (8) judges, and certain other great officers, meet in the exchequer chamber on the morrow of All Souls yearly, (which day is now altered to the morrow of St. Martin<sup>2</sup> (9) by the act for abbreviating Michaelmas term)<sup>3</sup> (10) and then and there nominate three persons to the king, who afterwards appoints one of them to be sheriff. This custom, of the twelve (11) judges nominating three persons, seems borrowed from the Gothic constitution before-mentioned; with this difference, that among the Goths the twelve nominors were first elected by the people themselves. And this usage of ours at its first introduction, I am apt to believe, was founded upon some statute, though not now to be found among our printed laws: first, because it is materially different from the (12) directions of all the

<sup>d</sup> [Westby's case] 3 Rep. 72.

<sup>e</sup> Montesq. Sp. L. b. 2. c. 2.

<sup>f</sup> Stiernhook de jure Goth. l. 1. c. 3.

<sup>g</sup> [Fortescue] de L. L. c. 24.

<sup>1</sup> The morrow or second day of the feast of All Souls, i.e. 3 November.

<sup>2</sup> The second day of the feast of St. Martin, i.e. 12 November.

<sup>3</sup> 24 Geo. II. c. 48, s. 12.

statutes beforementioned; which it is hard to conceive that the judges would have countenanced by their concurrence, or that Fortescue would have inserted in his book, unless by the authority of some statute: and also, because a statute is expressly referred to in the record, which sir Edward Coke tells us<sup>h</sup> he transcribed from the council book of 3 Mar. 34 Hen. VI. and which is in substance as follows. The king had of his own authority appointed a man sheriff of Lincolnshire, which office he refused to take upon him: whereupon the opinions of the judges were taken, what should be done in this behalf. And the two chief justices, sir John Fortescue and sir John Prisot, delivered the unanimous opinion of them all; “that the king did an error when he made a person sheriff, that was not chosen and presented to him according to the statute; that the person refusing was liable to no fine for disobedience, as if he had been one of the three persons chosen according to the tenor of the statute; that they would advise the king to have recourse to the three persons that were chosen according to the statute, or that some other thrifty man be intreated to occupy the office for this year; and that, the next year, to eschew such inconveniences, the order of the statute in this behalf made be observed.” But, notwithstanding this unanimous resolution of all the judges of England, thus entered in the <13> council book, some of our writers<sup>i</sup> have affirmed, that the king, by his prerogative, may name whom he pleases to be sheriff, whether chosen by the judges or no. This is grounded on a very particular case in the fifth year of queen Elizabeth, when, by reason of the plague, there was no Michaelmas term kept at Westminster; so that the judges could not meet there in crastino Animarum [on the morrow of All Souls] to nominate the sheriffs: whereupon the queen named them herself, without such previous assembly, appointing for the most part one of the two remaining in the last year’s list<sup>k</sup>. And this case, thus circumstanced, is <14> the only precedent in our books for the making these extraordinary sheriffs. It is true, the reporter adds, that it was held that the queen by her prerogative might make a sheriff without the election of the judges, non obstante aliquo statuto in contrarium [notwithstanding any statute to the contrary]: but the doctrine of non obstante’s [notwithstandings], which sets the prerogative above the laws, was effectually demolished by the bill of rights at the revolution, and abdicated Westminster-hall when king James abdicated the <15> kingdom. So that sheriffs cannot now be legally appointed, otherwise than according to the known and established law.

331

SHERIFFS, by virtue of several old statutes, are to continue in their office no longer than one year; and yet it hath been said<sup>l</sup> that a sheriff may be appointed durante bene placito, or during the king’s pleasure; and so is the form of the royal writ<sup>m</sup>. Therefore, till a new sheriff be named, his office cannot be determined, unless by his own death, or the demise of the king; in which last case it was usual for the successor to send a new writ to the old sheriff<sup>n</sup>: but now by statute 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 8. all officers appointed

<sup>h</sup> 2 Inst. 559.

<sup>i</sup> [Century 5, case xcvi] Jenkins. 229.

<sup>k</sup> Dyer 225.

<sup>l</sup> [Mitton’s case] 4 Rep. 32.

<sup>m</sup> Dalt. of sheriffs. 8.

<sup>n</sup> Dalt. 7.

by the preceding king may hold their offices for six months after the king's demise, unless sooner displaced by the successor. We may farther observe, that by statute 1 Ric. II. c. 11. no man, that has served the office of sheriff for one year, can be compelled to serve the same again within three years after.

We shall find it is of the utmost importance to have the sheriff appointed according to law, when we consider his power and duty. These are either as a judge, as the keeper of the king's peace, as a ministerial officer of the superior courts of justice, or as the king's bailiff.

332 In his judicial capacity he is to hear and determine all cause of forty shillings value and under, in his county court, of which more in its proper place: and he has also judicial power in divers other civil cases<sup>o</sup>. He is likewise to decide the elections of knights of the shire, (subject to the control of the house of commons) of coroners, and of verderors;<sup>4</sup> to judge of the qualification of voters, and to return such as he shall determine to be duly elected.

As the keeper of the king's peace, both by common law and special commission, he is the first man in the county, and superior in rank to any nobleman therein, during his office<sup>p</sup>. He may apprehend, and commit to prison, all persons who break the peace, or attempt to break it: and may bind any one in a recognizance to keep the king's peace. He may, and is bound ex officio [by virtue of his office] to, pursue and take all traitors, murderers, felons, and other misdoers, and commit them to gaol for safe custody. He is also to defend his county against any of the king's enemies when they come into the land: and for this purpose, as well as for keeping the peace and pursuing felons, he may command all the people of his county to attend him; which is called the posse comitatus, or power of the county<sup>q</sup>: which summons every person above fifteen years old, and under the degree of a peer, is bound to attend upon warning<sup>r</sup>, under pain of fine and imprisonment<sup>s</sup>. But though the sheriff is thus the principal conservator of the peace in his county, yet, by the express directions of the great charter<sup>t</sup>, he, together with the constable, coroner, and certain other officers of the king, are forbidden to hold any pleas of the crown, or, in other words, to try any criminal offence. For it would be highly unbecoming, that the executioners of justice should be also the judges; should impose, as well as levy, fines and amercements; should one day condemn a man to death, and personally execute him the next. Neither may he act as an ordinary justice of the peace during the time of his office<sup>u</sup>: for this would be equally inconsistent; he being in many respects the servant of the justices.

<sup>o</sup> Dalt. c. 4.

<sup>p</sup> [Chune v Pyot] 1 Roll. Rep. 237.

<sup>q</sup> Dalt. c. 95.

<sup>r</sup> Lamb. Eiren. 315.

<sup>s</sup> Stat. 2 Hen. V. c. 8.

<sup>t</sup> cap. 17.

<sup>u</sup> Stat. 1 Mar. st. 2. c. 8.

<sup>4</sup> verderors: officers of the king's forest, responsible for enforcing its laws. See also I. 222.

IN his ministerial capacity the sheriff is bound to execute all process issuing from the king's courts of justice. In the commencement of civil causes, he is to serve the writ, to arrest, and to take bail; when the cause comes to trial, he must summon and return the jury; when it is determined, he must see the judgment of the court carried into execution. In criminal matters, he also arrests and imprisons, he returns the jury, he has the custody of the delinquent, and he executes the sentence of the court, though it extend to death itself. 333

As the king's bailiff, it is his business to preserve the rights of the king within his bailiwick; for so his county is frequently called in the writs: a word introduced by the princes of the Norman line; in imitation of the French, whose territory is divided into bailiwicks, as that of England into counties<sup>w</sup>. He must seise to the king's use all lands devolved to the crown by attainder or escheat; must levy all fines and forfeitures; must seise and keep all waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, unless they be granted to some subject; and must also collect the king's rents within his bailiwick, if commanded by process from the exchequer<sup>x</sup>.

To execute these various offices, the sheriff has under him many inferior officers; an under-sheriff, bailiffs, and gaolers; who must neither buy, sell, nor farm their offices, on forfeiture of 500*l.*<sup>y</sup>.

THE under-sheriff usually performs all the duties of the office; a very few only excepted, where the personal presence of the high-sheriff is necessary. But no under-sheriff shall abide in his office above one year<sup>z</sup>; and if he does, by statute 23 Hen. VI. c. 8. he forfeits 200*l.* a very large penalty in those early days. And no under-sheriff or sheriff's officer shall practice as an attorney, during the time he continues in such office<sup>a</sup>: for this would be a great inlet to partiality and oppression. But these salutary regulations are shamefully evaded, by practising in the names of other attorneys, and putting in sham deputies by way of nominal under-sheriffs: by reason of which, says Dalton<sup>b</sup>, the under-sheriffs and bailiffs do grow so cunning in their several places, that they are able to deceive, and it may be well feared that many of them do deceive, both the king, the high-sheriff, and the county. 334

BAILIFFS, or sheriff's officers, are either bailiffs of hundreds, or special bailiffs. Bailiffs of hundreds are officers appointed over those respective districts by the sheriffs, to collect fines therein; to summon juries; to attend the judges and justices at the assises, and quarter sessions; and also to execute writs and process in the several hundreds. But, as these are generally plain men, and not thoroughly skilful in this latter part of their office, that of serving writs, and making arrests and executions, it is now usual to join special bailiffs with them; who are generally mean persons employed by the sheriffs on account only of their adroitness and dexterity in hunting and seising their prey. The sheriff being answerable for the misdemeanors of these

<sup>w</sup> Fortesc. de L. L. c. 24.

<sup>x</sup> Dalt. c. 9.

<sup>y</sup> Stat. 3 Geo. I. c. 15.

<sup>z</sup> Stat. 42 Edw. III. c. 9.

<sup>a</sup> Stat. 1 Hen. V. c. 4.

<sup>b</sup> of sheriffs, c. 115.

bailiffs, they are therefore usually (16) bound in a bond for the due execution of their office, and thence are called bound-bailiffs; which the common people have corrupted into a much more homely appellation.<sup>5</sup>

GAOLERS are also the servants of the sheriff, and he must be responsible for their conduct. Their business is to keep safely all such persons as are committed to them by lawful warrant: and, if they suffer any such to escape, the sheriff shall answer it to the king, if it be a criminal matter; or, in a civil case, to the party injured<sup>c</sup>. And to this end the sheriff must<sup>d</sup> have lands sufficient within the county to answer the king and 335 his people. The abuses of gaolers and sheriff's officers toward the unfortunate persons in their custody are well restrained and guarded against by (18) statute 32 Geo. II. c. 28.

THE vast expense, which custom had introduced in serving the office of high-sheriff, was grown such a burthen to the subject, that it was enacted, by statute 14 Car. II. c. 21. that (19) no sheriff should keep any table at the assises, except for his own family, or give any presents to the judges or their servants, or have more than forty men in livery; yet, for the sake of safety and decency, he may not have less than twenty men in England and twelve in Wales; upon forfeiture, in any of these cases, of 200*l*.

II. THE coroner's is also a very antient office at the common law. He is called coroner, coronator, because he hath principally to do with pleas of the crown, or such wherein the king is more immediately concerned<sup>e</sup>. And in this light the lord chief justice of the king's bench is the principal coroner in the kingdom, and may (if he pleases) exercise the jurisdiction of a coroner in any part of the realm<sup>f</sup>. But there are also particular coroners for every county of England; usually four, but sometimes six, and sometimes fewer<sup>g</sup>. This officer<sup>h</sup> is of equal antiquity with the sheriff; and was ordained together with him to keep the peace, when the earls gave up the wardship of the county.

HE is still chosen by all the freeholders in the county court, as by the policy of our antient laws the sheriffs, and conservators of the peace, and all other officers were, who were concerned in matters that affected the liberty of the people<sup>i</sup>; and as (20) verderors of the forests still are, whose business it is to stand between the prerogative and the subject in the execution of the forest laws. For this purpose there is a writ at 336 common law de coronatore eligendo [of choosing a coroner]<sup>k</sup>: in which it is expressly commanded the sheriff, "quod talem eligi faciat, qui melius et sciat, et velit, et possit, officio illi intendere [that he cause such one to be chosen as is the best informed, and most willing and able to execute that office]." And, in order to effect this the more surely, it was enacted by the statute of Westm. I<sup>l</sup>, that none but lawful and discreet

<sup>c</sup> Dalt. c. 118. [Mitton's case] 4 Rep. 34.

<sup>d</sup> (17) Stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 21.

<sup>e</sup> 2 Inst. 31. 4 Inst. 271.

<sup>f</sup> [Wardens and Commonalty of Saddlers' Case] 4 Rep. 57.

<sup>g</sup> F. N. B. 163.

<sup>h</sup> Mirror, c. 1. §. 3.

<sup>i</sup> 2 Inst. 558.

<sup>k</sup> F. N. B. 163.

<sup>l</sup> 3 Edw. I. c. 10.

<sup>5</sup> i.e. bum-bailiffs.

knights <21> should be chosen. But it seems it is now sufficient if a man have lands enough to be made a knight, whether he be really knighted or not<sup>m</sup>: and there was an instance in the 5 Edw. III. of a man being removed from this office, because he was only a merchant<sup>n</sup>. The coroner ought also to have estate sufficient to maintain the dignity of his office, and answer any fines that may be set upon him for his misbehaviour<sup>o</sup>: and if he have not enough to answer, his fine shall be levied on the county, as a punishment for electing an insufficient officer<sup>p</sup>. Now indeed, through the culpable neglect of gentlemen of property, this office has been suffered to fall into disrepute, and get into low and indigent hands: so that, although formerly <22> no coroner would condescend to be paid for serving his country, and they were by the aforesaid statute of Westm. I. expressly forbidden to take a reward, under pain of great forfeiture to the king; yet for many years past they have only desired to be chosen for the sake of their perquisites; being allowed fees for their attendance by the statute 3 Hen. VII. c. 1. which sir Edward Coke complains of heavily<sup>q</sup>; <23> though they have since his time been much enlarged<sup>r</sup>.

THE coroner is chosen for life: but may be removed, either by being made sheriff, or chosen verderor, which are offices incompatible with the other; or by the king's writ de coronatore exonerando [of discharging the coroner], for a cause to be therein assigned, as that he is engaged in other business, is incapacitated by years or sickness, hath not a sufficient estate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it<sup>s</sup>. And by the statute 25 Geo. II. c. 29. extortion, neglect, or misbehaviour, are also made causes of removal.

THE office and power of a coroner are also, like those of a sheriff, either judicial or ministerial; but principally judicial. This is in great measure ascertained by statute 4 Edw. I. de officio coronatoris [of the office of coroner]; and consists, first, in <24> enquiring (when any person is slain or dies suddenly) concerning the manner of his death. And this must be "super visum corporis [on the view of the body]"; for, if the body be not found, the coroner cannot sit<sup>u</sup>. He must also sit at the very place where the death happened; and his enquiry is made by a jury from four, five, or six of the neighbouring towns, over whom he is to preside. If any be found guilty by this <25> inquest of murder, he is to commit to prison for further trial, and is also to enquire concerning their lands, goods and chattels, which are forfeited thereby: but, <26> whether it be murder or not, he must enquire whether any deodand has accrued to the king, or the lord of the franchise, by this death: and must certify the whole of

337

<sup>m</sup> F. N. B. 163, 164.

<sup>n</sup> 2 Inst. 32.

<sup>o</sup> F. N. B. 163, 164.

<sup>p</sup> Mirr. c. 1. §. 3. 2 Inst. 175.

<sup>q</sup> 2 Inst. 210.

<sup>r</sup> Stat. 25 Geo. II. c. 29.

<sup>s</sup> F. N. B. 163, 164.

<sup>t</sup> 4 Inst. 271.

<sup>u</sup> Thus, in the Gothic constitution, before any fine was payable by the neighbourhood, for the slaughter of a man therein, "de corpore delicti constare oportebat; i.e. non tam fuisse aliquem in territorio isto mortuum inventum, quam vulneratum et caesum. Potest enim homo etiam ex alia causa subito mori." [It was necessary to gain information about the body of the deceased: that is, not so much that a person was found dead in that district, as that he was wounded and slain. For a man may die suddenly from other causes.] Stiernhook de jure Gothor. l. 3. c. 4.

this <27> inquisition to the court of king's bench, or the next assises. Another branch of his office is to enquire concerning shipwrecks; and certify whether wreck or not, and who is in possession of the goods. Concerning treasure trove, he is also to enquire who were the finders, and where it is, and whether any one be suspected of having found and concealed a treasure; "and that may be well perceived (saith the old statute of Edw. I.) where one liveth riotously, haunting taverns, and hath done so of long time:" whereupon he might be attached, and held to bail, upon this suspicion only.

THE ministerial office of the coroner is only as the sheriff's substitute. For when just exception can be taken to the sheriff, for suspicion of partiality, (as that he is interested in the suit, or of kindred to either plaintiff or defendant) the process must then be awarded to the coroner, instead of the sheriff, for execution of the king's writs<sup>w</sup>.

338 III. THE next species of subordinate magistrates, whom I am to consider, are justices of the peace; the principal of whom is the custos rotulorum, or keeper of the records of the county. The common law hath ever had a special care and regard for the conservation of the peace; for peace is the very end and foundation of civil society. And therefore, before the present constitution of justices was invented, there were peculiar officers appointed by the common law for the maintenance of the public peace. Of these some had, and still have, this power annexed to other offices which they hold; others had it merely by itself, and were thence named custodes [keepers] or conservatores pacis [keepers of the peace]. Those that were so virtute officii [by virtue of their office] still continue; but the latter sort are superseded by the modern justices.

THE king's majesty<sup>x</sup> is, by his office and dignity royal, the principal conservator of the peace within all his dominions; and may give authority to any other to see the peace kept, and to punish such as break it: hence it is usually called the king's peace. The lord chancellor or keeper, the lord treasurer, the lord high steward of England, the lord mareschal, and lord high constable of England (when any such officers are in being) and all the justices of the court of king's bench (by virtue of their offices) and the master of the rolls (by prescription) are general conservators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it<sup>y</sup>: the other judges are only so in their own courts. The coroner is also a conservator of the peace within his own county<sup>z</sup>; as is also the sheriff<sup>a</sup>; and both of them may take a recognizance or security for the peace. Constables, tythingmen, and the like, are also conservators of the peace within their own jurisdictions; and may apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them till they find sureties for their keeping it<sup>b</sup>.

<sup>w</sup> 4 Inst. 271.

<sup>x</sup> Lambard. Eirenarch. 12.

<sup>y</sup> Lamb. 12.

<sup>z</sup> Britton. 3.

<sup>a</sup> F. N. B. 81.

<sup>b</sup> Lamb. 14.

THOSE that were, without any office, simply and merely <28> conservators of the peace, were chosen by the freeholders in full county court before the sheriff; the writ for their election directing them to be chosen “de probioribus et melioribus in comitatu suo in custodes pacis [from the most upright and the better sort of his county as keepers of the peace]<sup>c</sup>.” But when queen Isabel, the wife of Edward II, had contrived to depose her husband by a forced resignation of the crown, and had set up his son Edward III in his place; this, being a thing then without example in England, it was feared would much alarm the people; especially as the old king was living, though hurried about from castle to castle; till at last he met with an untimely death. To prevent therefore any risings, or other disturbance of the peace, the new king sent writs to all the sheriffs in England, the form of which is preserved by Thomas Walsingham<sup>d</sup>, giving a plausible account of the manner of his obtaining the crown; to wit, that it was done ipsius patris beneplacito [with the agreement of his father]: and withal commanding each sheriff that the peace be kept throughout his bailiwick, on pain and peril of disinheritation and loss of life and limb. And in a few weeks after the date of these writs, it was ordained in parliament<sup>e</sup>, that, for the better maintaining and keeping of the peace in every county, good men and lawful, which were no maintainers of evil, or barretors<sup>6</sup> in the country, should be assigned to keep the peace. And in this manner, and upon this occasion, was the election of the conservators of the peace taken from the people, and given to the king<sup>f</sup>; this assignment being construed to be by the king’s commission<sup>g</sup>. But still they were called only conservators, wardens, or keepers of the peace, till the statute 34 Edw. III. c. 1. gave them the power of trying felonies; and then they acquired the more honorable appellation of justices<sup>h</sup>.

THESE justices are appointed by the king’s special commission under the great seal, the form of which was settled by all the judges, A.D. 1590<sup>i</sup>. This appoints them all<sup>k</sup>, jointly and severally, to keep the peace, and any two or more of them to enquire of and determine felonies, and other misdemeanors: in which number some particular justices, or one of them, are directed to be always included, and no business to be done without their presence; the words of the commission running thus, “quorum aliquem vestrum, A. B. C. D. &c. unum esse volumus [of whom we will that some one of you, A, B, C, D, etc. be one];” whence the persons so named are usually called justices of the quorum. And formerly it was customary to appoint only a select number of justices, eminent for their skill and discretion, to be of the quorum; but now the practice is to advance almost all of them to that dignity, naming them all

<sup>c</sup> Lamb. 16.

<sup>d</sup> Hist. A.D. 1327.

<sup>e</sup> Stat. 1 Edw. III. c. 16.

<sup>f</sup> Lamb. 20.

<sup>g</sup> Stat. 4 Edw. III. c. 2. and 18 Edw. III. st. 2. c. 2.

<sup>h</sup> Lamb. 23.

<sup>i</sup> Lamb. 43.

<sup>k</sup> See the form itself, Lamb. 35. Burn. tit. justices, §. 1.

<sup>6</sup> Barretor: a quarrelsome person, or vexatious litigant.

over again in the quorum clause, except perhaps only some one inconsiderable person for the sake of propriety: and no exception is now allowable, for not expressing in the form of warrants, &c, that the justice who issued them is of the ⟨29⟩ quorum<sup>1</sup>.

TOUCHING the number and qualifications of these justices; it was ordained by statute 18 Edw. III. c. 2. that two, or three, of the best reputation in each county shall be assigned to be keepers of the peace. But these being found rather too few for that purpose, it was provided by statute 34 Edw. III. c. 1. that one lord, and three, or four, of the most worthy men in the county, with some learned in the law, shall be made justices in every county. But afterwards the number of justices, through the ambition of private persons, became so large, that it was thought necessary by statute 12 Ric. II. c. 10. and 14 Ric. II. c. 11. to restrain them at first to six, and afterwards to eight only. But this rule is now disregarded, and the cause seems to be (as Lambard observed 341 long ago<sup>m</sup>) that the growing number of statute laws, committed from time to time to the charge of justices of the peace, have occasioned also (and very reasonably) their encrease to a larger number. And, as to their qualifications, the statutes just cited direct them to be of the best reputation, and most worthy men in the county: and the statute 13 Ric. II. c. 10 orders them to be of the most sufficient knights, esquires, and gentlemen of the law. Also by statute 2 Hen. V. st. 1. c. 4. and st. 2. c. 1. they must be resident in their several counties. And because, contrary to these statutes, men of small substance had crept into the commission, whose poverty made them both covetous and contemptible, it was enacted by statute 18 Hen. VI. c. 11. that no justice should be put in commission, if he had not lands to the value of 20*l. per annum*. And, the rate of money being greatly altered since that time, it is now enacted by statute 5 Geo. II. c. 11. that every justice, except as is therein excepted, shall have 100*l. per annum* clear of all deductions; and, if he acts without such qualification, he shall forfeit ⟨31⟩ 100*l.* which<sup>n</sup> is almost an equivalent to the 20*l. per annum* required in Henry the sixth's time: and of this qualification<sup>o</sup> the justice must now make oath. Also it is provided by the act 5 Geo. II. that no practising attorney, solicitor, or proctor, shall be capable of acting as a justice of the peace.

As the office of these justices is conferred by the king, so it subsists only during his pleasure; and is determinable, 1. By the demise of the crown; that is, in six months ⟨32⟩ after<sup>p</sup>. 2. By express writ under the great seal<sup>q</sup>, discharging any particular person from being any longer justice. 3. By superseding the commission by writ of supersedeas [that you forbear], which suspends the power of all the justices, but does not totally destroy it; seeing it may be revived again by another writ, called a procedendo [for proceeding]. 4. By a new commission, which virtually, though silently, discharges all the former justices that are not included therein; for two commissions 342 cannot subsist at once. 5. By accession of the office of sheriff or coroner<sup>r</sup>. Formerly

<sup>1</sup> ⟨30⟩ Stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 27.

<sup>m</sup> Lamb. 34.

<sup>n</sup> See bishop Fleetwood's calculations in his chronicon pretiosum.

<sup>o</sup> Stat. 18 Geo. II. c. 20.

<sup>p</sup> Stat. 1 Ann. c. 8.

<sup>q</sup> Lamb. 67.

<sup>r</sup> Stat. 1 Mar. st. 1. c. 8.

it was thought, that if a man was named in any commission of the peace, and had afterwards a new dignity conferred upon him, that this determined his office; he no longer answering the description of the commission: but now<sup>s</sup> it is provided, that notwithstanding a new title of dignity, the justice on whom it is conferred shall still continue a justice.

THE power, office, and duty of a justice of the peace depend on his commission, and on the several statutes, which have created objects of his jurisdiction. His commission, first, empowers him singly to conserve the peace; and thereby gives him all the power of the antient conservators at the common law, in suppressing riots and affrays, in taking securities for the peace, and in apprehending and committing felons and other inferior criminals. It also empowers any two or more of them to hear and determine all felonies and other offences; which is the ground of their jurisdiction at sessions, of which more will be said in its proper place. And as to the powers given to one, two, or more justices by the several statutes, that from time to time have heaped upon them such an infinite variety of business, that few care to undertake, and fewer understand, the office; they are such and of so great importance to the public, that the country is greatly obliged to any worthy magistrate, that without sinister views of his own will engage in this troublesome service. And therefore, if a well meaning justice makes any undesigned slip in his practice, <33> great lenity and indulgence is shewn to him in the courts of law; and there are many statutes made to protect him in the upright discharge of his office<sup>t</sup>: which, among other privileges, prohibit such justices from being sued for any oversights without notice beforehand; and stop all suits begun, on tender made of sufficient amends. But, on the other hand, any malicious or tyrannical abuse of their office <34> is sure to be severely punished; and all persons who recover a verdict against a justice, for any wilful or malicious injury, are entitled to double costs.

It is impossible upon our present plan to enter minutely into the particulars of the accumulated authority, thus committed to the charge of these magistrates. I must therefore refer myself at present to such <35> subsequent parts of these commentaries, as will in their turns comprize almost every object of the justices' jurisdiction: and in the mean time recommend to the student the perusal of Mr Lambard's eirenarcha, and Dr Burn's justice of the peace; wherein he will find every thing relative to this subject, both in antient and modern practice, collected with great care and accuracy, and disposed in a most clear and judicious method. 343

I SHALL next consider some officers of lower rank than those which have gone before, and of more confined jurisdiction; but still such as are universally in use through every part of the kingdom.

IV. FOURTHLY, then, of the constable. The word constable is frequently said to be derived from the Saxon, koning-staple, and to signify the support of the king. But, as we borrowed the name as well as the office of constable from the French, I am rather inclined to deduce it, with sir H. Spelman<sup>7</sup> and Dr Cowel,<sup>8</sup> from that language, wherein it is plainly derived from the Latin comes stabuli [count of the stable], an officer well known in the empire; so called because, like the great constable of France, as well as the lord high constable of England, he was to regulate all matters of chivalry, tilts, tournaments, and feats of arms, which were performed on horseback. This great office of lord high constable hath been disused in England, except only upon great and solemn occasions, as the king's coronation and the like, ever since the attainder of Stafford duke of Buckingham under king Henry VIII; as in France it was suppressed about a century after by an edict of Louis XIII<sup>u</sup>: but from his office, says Lambard<sup>w</sup>, this lower constableness was at first drawn and fetched, and is as it were a very finger 344 of that hand. For the statute of Winchester<sup>x</sup>, which first appoints them, directs that, for the better keeping of the peace, two constables in every hundred and franchise shall inspect all matters relating to arms and armour.

<sup>s</sup> Stat. 1 Edw. VI. c. 7.

<sup>t</sup> Stat. 7 Jac. I. c. 5. 21 Jac. I. c. 12. 24 Geo. II. c. 44.

CONSTABLES are of two sorts, high constables, and petty constables. The former were first ordained by the statute of Winchester, as before-mentioned; and are appointed at the court leets of the franchise or hundred over which they preside, or, in default of that, by the justices at their quarter sessions; and are removeable by the same authority that appoints them<sup>y</sup>. The petty constables are inferior officers in every town and parish, subordinate to the high constable of the hundred, first instituted about the reign of Edward III<sup>z</sup>. These petty constables have two offices united in them; the one antient, the other modern. Their antient office is that of headborough, tithing-man, or borsholder; of whom we formerly spoke<sup>a</sup>, and who are as antient as the time of king Alfred: their more modern office is that of constable merely; which was appointed (as was observed) so lately as the reign of Edward III, in order to assist the high constable<sup>b</sup>. And in general the antient headboroughs, tithing-men, and borsholders, were made use of to serve as petty constables; though not so generally, but that in many places they still continue distinct officers from the constable. They are all chosen by the jury at the court leet; or, if no court leet be held, are appointed by two justices of the peace<sup>c</sup>.

THE general duty of all constables, both high and petty, as well as of the other officers, is to keep the king's peace in their several districts; and to that purpose they are armed with very large powers, of arresting, and imprisoning, of breaking open houses, and the like: of the extent of which powers, considering what manner of men

<sup>u</sup> Philips's life of Pole. ii. 111.

<sup>w</sup> of constables, 5.

<sup>x</sup> 13 Edw. I. c. 6.

<sup>y</sup> [R. v White] [1] Salk. 150.

<sup>z</sup> Spelm. Gloss. 148.

<sup>a</sup> pag. 110 [I. 79].

<sup>b</sup> Lamb. 9.

<sup>c</sup> Stat. 14 & 15 Car. II. c. 12.

<sup>7</sup> Spelman, Glossarium Archaiologicum (1687), 146.

<sup>8</sup> J. Cowell, Interpreter (Cambridge, 1607), under constable.

are for the most part <36> put upon these offices, it is perhaps very well that they are generally kept in ignorance. One of their principal duties, arising from the statute of Winchester, which appoints them, is to keep watch and ward in their respective jurisdictions. Ward, guard, or custodia, is <37> chiefly intended of the day time, in order to apprehend rioters, and robbers on the highways; the manner of doing which is left to the discretion of the justices of the peace and the constable<sup>d</sup>, the hundred being however answerable for all robberies committed therein, by day light, for having kept negligent guard. Watch is properly applicable to the night only, (being called among our Teutonic ancestors wacht or wacta<sup>e</sup>) and it begins at the time when ward ends, and ends when that begins; for, by the statute of Winchester, in walled towns the gates shall be closed from sunsetting to sunrising, and watch shall be kept in every borough and town, especially in the summer season, to apprehend all rogues, vagabonds, and night-walkers, and make them give an account of themselves. The constable may appoint watchmen at his discretion, regulated by the custom of the place; and these, being his deputies, have for the time being the authority of their principal. But, with regard to the infinite number of other minute duties, that are laid upon constables by a diversity of statutes, I must again refer to Mr Lambard and Dr Burn; in whose compilations may be also seen, <38> what duties belong to the constable or tything-man indifferently, and what to the constable only: for the constable may do whatever the tything-man may; but it does not hold e converso [conversely]; <39> for the tithing-man has not an equal power with the constable. 345

V. WE are next to consider the surveyors of the highways. Every parish is bound of common right to keep the high roads, that go through it, in good and sufficient repair; unless by reason of the tenure of lands, or otherwise, this care is consigned to some particular private person. From this burthen no man was exempt by our antient laws, whatever other immunities he might enjoy: this being part of the trinoda necessitas [the threefold obligation], to which every man's estate was subject; viz. expeditio contra hostem, arcium constructio, et pontium reparatio [going against the enemy, construction of fortifications and repair of bridges]: for, though the reparation of bridges only is expressed, yet that of roads also must be understood; as in the Roman law, ad instructiones reparationesque itinerum et pontium, nullum genus hominum, nulliusque dignitatis ac venerationis meritis, cessare oportet [with respect to the construction and repairing of roads and bridges no class of men of whatever rank or dignity should be exempted]<sup>f</sup>. And indeed now, for the most part, the care of the roads only seems to be left to parishes; that of bridges being in great measure devolved upon the county at large, by statute 22 Hen. VIII. c. 5. If the parish neglected these repairs, they might formerly, as they may still, be indicted for such their neglect: but it was not then incumbent on any particular officer to call the parish together, 346 and set them upon this work; for which reason by the statute 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 8. surveyors of the highways were ordered to be chosen in every parish<sup>g</sup>.

<sup>d</sup> Dalt. just. c. 104.

<sup>e</sup> Excubias et explorationes quas wactas vocant. [Watches and searches which they call wactas.] Capitular. Hludovic. Pii. cap. 1. A.D. 815.

<sup>f</sup> C. 11. 74. 4.

THESE surveyors were originally, according to the statute of Philip and Mary, to be appointed by the constable and church-wardens of the parish; but now<sup>h</sup> they are constituted by two neighbouring justices, <41> out of such substantial inhabitants as have either 10*l.* per annum of their own, or rent 30*l.* a year, or are worth in personal estate 100*l.*

THEIR office and duty consists in putting in execution <42> a variety of statutes for the repairs of the highways; that is, of ways leading from one town to another: by which it is enacted, 1. That they may remove all annoyances in the highways, or give notice to the owner to remove them; who is liable to penalties on noncompliance. 2. They are to call together all the <43> inhabitants of the parish, six days in every year, to labour in repairing the highways; all persons keeping draughts,<sup>9</sup> or occupying 347 lands, being obliged to send a team for every draught, and for every 50*l.* a year, which they keep or occupy; and all other persons to work or find a <44> labourer. The work must be completed before harvest; as well for providing a good road for carrying in the corn, as also because all hands are then supposed to be employed in harvest work. And every <45> cartway must be made eight feet wide at the least<sup>i</sup>; and may be increased by the quarter sessions to the breadth of four and twenty feet. 3. The surveyors may lay out their own money in purchasing materials for <47> repairs, where there is not sufficient within the parish, and shall be reimbursed by a rate, to be allowed at a special sessions. 4. In case the personal labour of the parish be not sufficient, the surveyors, with the consent of the quarter sessions, may <48> levy a rate (not exceeding 6*d.* in the pound) on the parish, in aid of the personal duty; for the due application of which they are to account upon oath. As for turnpikes, which are <49> now universally introduced in aid of such rates, and the law relating to them, <50> these depend entirely on the particular powers granted in the several road acts, and therefore have nothing to do with this compendium of general law.

VI. I PROCEED therefore, lastly, to consider the overseers of the poor; their original, appointment, and duty.

THE poor of England, till the time of Henry VIII, subsisted entirely upon private benevolence, and the charity of welldisposed christians. For, though it appears by the mirror<sup>k</sup>, that by the common law the poor were to be “sustained by parsons, rectors of the church, and the parishioners; so that none of them dye for default of sustenance;” and though by the statutes 12 Ric. II. c. 7. and 19 Hen. VII. c. 12. the poor are <51>

<sup>g</sup> This office, Mr Dalton (just. cap. 50.) says, exactly answers that of the curatores viarum [keepers of the ways] of the Romans: but, I should guess that theirs was an office of rather more dignity and authority than ours, not only from comparing the method of making and mending the Roman ways with those of our country parishes; but also because one Thermus, who was the curator of the Flaminian way, was candidate for the consulship with Julius Caesar. (Cic. ad Attic. l. 1. ep. 1.)

<sup>h</sup> <40> Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12.

<sup>i</sup> <46> This, by the laws of the twelve tables at Rome, was the standard for roads that were straight; but, in winding ways, the breadth was directed to be sixteen feet. Ff. 8. 3. 8.

<sup>k</sup> c. 1. §. 3.

<sup>9</sup> i.e. teams of horses.

directed to be sustained in the cities or towns wherein they were born, or such wherein they had dwelt for three years (which seem to be the first rudiments of parish settlements) yet till the statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26. I find no compulsory method 348 chalked out for this purpose: but the poor seem to have been left to such relief as the humanity of their neighbours would afford them. The monasteries were, in particular, their principal resource; and, among other bad effects which attended the monastic institutions, it was not perhaps one of the least (though frequently esteemed quite otherwise) that they supported and fed a very numerous and very idle poor, whose sustenance depended upon what was daily distributed in alms at the gates of the religious houses. But, upon the total dissolution of these, the inconvenience of thus encouraging the poor in habits of indolence and beggary was quickly felt throughout the kingdom: and abundance of statutes were made in the reign of <52> king Henry the eighth, for providing for the poor and impotent; which, the preambles to some of them recite, <53> had of late years strangely increased. These poor were principally of two sorts: sick and impotent, and therefore unable to work; idle and sturdy, and therefore able, but not willing, to exercise any honest employment. To provide in some measure for both of these, in and about the metropolis, <54> his son Edward the sixth founded three royal hospitals; Christ's, and St. Thomas's, for the relief of the impotent through infancy or sickness; and Bridewell for the punishment and employment of the vigorous and idle.<sup>10</sup> But these were far from being sufficient for the care of the poor throughout the kingdom at large; and therefore, after many other fruitless experiments, by statute 43 Eliz. c. 2. overseers of the poor were appointed in every parish.

By virtue of the statute last mentioned, these overseers are to be nominated yearly in Easter-week, or within <55> one month after, by two justices dwelling near the parish. They must be substantial householders, and so expressed to be in the appointment of the justices<sup>1</sup>.

THEIR office and duty, according to the same statute, are principally these: first, to raise competent sums for the necessary relief of the poor, impotent, old, blind, and 349 such other, being poor and not able to work: and, secondly, to provide work for such as are able, and cannot otherwise get employment: but this latter part of their duty, which, according to the wise regulations of that salutary statute, should go hand in hand with the other, is now most shamefully neglected. However, for these joint purposes, they are empowered to make and levy rates upon the several inhabitants of the parish, by the same act of parliament; which has been farther explained and enforced by several subsequent statutes.

THE two great objects of this statute seem to have been, 1. To relieve the impotent poor, and them only. 2. To find employment for such as are able to work: and this principally by providing <56> stocks to be worked up at home, which perhaps might be more beneficial than accumulating all the poor in one common work-house; <57> a practice which tends to destroy all domestic connexions (the only felicity of the honest and industrious labourer) and to put the sober and diligent upon a level, in point of their earnings, with those who are dissolute and idle. Whereas, <58> if none were to be relieved but those who are incapable to get their livings, and that in proportion to their incapacity; <59> if no children were to be removed from their parents, but such as are brought up in rags and idleness; and if every poor man and his family <60> were employed whenever they requested it, and were allowed the whole profits of their labour;—<61> a spirit of chearful industry would soon diffuse itself through every cottage; work would become easy and habitual, when absolutely <62> necessary to their daily subsistence, and the most indigent peasant would go through his task without a murmur, if assured that he and his children (when incapable of work through infancy, age, or infirmity) would then, and then only, be intitled to support from his opulent neighbours.

<sup>1</sup> [R. v Sheringbrook] 2 Lord Raym. 1394.

<sup>10</sup> Christ's Hospital, London, for orphans; St Thomas's (or the King's) Hospital, Southwark, for the sick and injured; Bridewell Hospital, London, for the disorderly poor.

THIS appears to have been the plan of the statute of queen Elizabeth; in which the only defect was confining the management of the poor to small, parochial, districts; 350 which are frequently incapable of furnishing proper work, or providing an able director. However, the laborious poor were then at liberty to seek employment wherever it was to be had; none being obliged to reside in the places of their settlement, but such as were unable or unwilling to work; and those places of settlement being only such where they were born, or had made their abode, originally for three years<sup>m</sup>, and afterwards (in the case of vagabonds) for one year<sup>n</sup>.

AFTER the restoration, a very different plan was adopted, which has rendered the employment of the poor more difficult, by authorizing the subdivision of parishes; has greatly increased their number, by confining them all to their respective districts; has given birth to the intricacy of our poor-laws, by multiplying and rendering more easy the methods of gaining settlements; and, in consequence, has created an infinity of expensive law-suits between contending neighbourhoods, concerning those settlements and removals. By the statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12. a legal settlement was declared to be gained <63> by birth, inhabitancy, apprenticeship, or service for forty days; within which period all intruders were made removeable from any parish by two justices of the peace, unless they settled in a tenement of the annual value of 10*l*. The frauds, naturally consequent upon this provision, which gave a settlement by so short a residence, produced the statute 1 Jac. II. c. 17. which directed notice in writing to be delivered to the parish officers, before a settlement could be gained by such residence. Subsequent provisions allowed other circumstances of notoriety to be equivalent to such notice given; and those circumstances have from time to time been altered, enlarged, or restrained, whenever the experience of new inconveniences, arising daily from new regulations, suggested the necessity of a remedy. And the doctrine of certificates was invented, by way of counterpoise, to restrain a man and his family from acquiring a 351 new settlement by any length of residence whatever, unless in two particular excepted cases; which makes parishes very cautious of giving such certificates, and of course confines the poor at home, where frequently no adequate employment can be had.

<sup>m</sup> Stat. 19 Hen. VII. c. 12. 1 Edw. VI. c. 3. 3 Edw. VI. c. 16. 14 Eliz. c. 5.

<sup>n</sup> Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 4.

THE law of settlements may be therefore now reduced to the following general heads; or, a settlement in a parish may be acquired, 1. <64> By birth; which is always prima facie the place of settlement, until some other can be shewn<sup>o</sup>. <66> This is also always the place of settlement of a bastard <67> child; for a bastard, having in the eye of the law no father, cannot be referred to his settlement, as other children may<sup>p</sup>. But, in legitimate children, though the place of birth be prima facie the settlement, yet it is not conclusively so; for there are, 2. Settlements by parentage, being the settlement of one's father or mother: <68> all children being really settled in the parish where their parents are settled, until they get a new settlement for themselves<sup>q</sup>. A new settlement may be acquired several ways; as, 3. By marriage. For a woman, marrying a man that is settled in another parish, <69> changes her own: the law not permitting the separation of husband and wife<sup>r</sup>. <70> But if the man be a foreigner, and has no settlement, her's is suspended during his life, if he be able to maintain her; but after his death she may return again to her old settlement<sup>s</sup>. The other methods of acquiring settlements in any parish are all reducible to this one, of forty days residence therein: but this forty days residence (which is construed to be lodging or lying there) must not be by fraud, or stealth, or in any clandestine manner; <72> but accompanied with one or other of the following concomitant circumstances. The next method therefore of gaining a settlement, is, 4. By forty days residence, and notice. For if a stranger comes into a parish, and delivers notice in writing of his place of abode, and number of his family, to one of the overseers (which must be read in the church and registered) and resides there unmolested for forty days after such notice, he is legally settled thereby<sup>t</sup>. For the law presumes that such a one at the time of notice is not likely to become chargeable, else he would not venture to give it; or that, in such case, the parish would take care to remove him. But there are also other circumstances equivalent to such notice: therefore, 5. Renting for a year a tenement of the yearly value of ten pounds, and residing forty days in the parish, gains a settlement without notice<sup>u</sup>; upon the principle of having substance enough to gain credit for such a house. 6. Being charged to and paying the public taxes and <73> levies of the parish; and, 7. <74> Executing any public parochial office for a whole year in the parish, as churchwarden, &c; are both of them equivalent to notice, and gain a settlement<sup>w</sup>, when coupled with a residence of forty days. 8. Being hired for a year, when <75> unmarried, and serving a year in the same service; and 9. Being bound <76> an apprentice for seven years; give the servant and apprentice a settlement, without notice<sup>x</sup>, in that place wherein they serve the last forty days. This is meant to encourage

352

<sup>o</sup> <65> [Spitalfields Hamlet v St. Andrew Parish] 1 Lord Raym. 567.

<sup>p</sup> [Hard's case] [2] Salk. 427.

<sup>q</sup> [Cumner (i.e. Cumnor) Parish v Milton Parish] [2] Salk. 528. [Inhabitants of Woodend v Inhabitants of Paulspury] 2 Lord Raym. 1473.

<sup>r</sup> [St. Michael Parish, Bath v Nunny Parish] [1] Stra. 544.

<sup>s</sup> <71> Foley. 249.

<sup>t</sup> Stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12. 1 Jac. II. c. 17. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11.

<sup>u</sup> Stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12.

<sup>w</sup> Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11.

<sup>x</sup> Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. 8 & 9 W. III. c. 10. and 31 Geo. II. c. 11.

application to trades, and going out to reputable services. 10. Lastly, the having an estate of one's own, and residing thereon forty days, however small the value may be, in case it be acquired by act of law or of a third person, as by descent, gift, devise, &c, is a sufficient settlement<sup>y</sup>: but if a man acquire it by his own act, as by purchase, (in its popular sense, in consideration of money paid) then<sup>z</sup> unless the consideration advanced, bona fide, be 30*l.* it is no settlement for any longer time, than the person shall inhabit thereon. He is in no case removeable from his own property; but he shall not, by any trifling or fraudulent purchase of his own, acquire a permanent and lasting settlement.

353 ALL persons, not so settled, may be removed to their own parishes, on complaint of the overseers, by two justices of the peace, if they shall adjudge them likely to become chargeable to the parish, into which they have intruded: unless they are in a way of getting a legal settlement, as by having hired a house of 10*l. per annum*, or living in an annual service; for then they are not removeable<sup>a</sup>. And in all other cases, if the parish to which they belong, will grant them a certificate, acknowledging them to be their parishioners, they cannot be removed merely because likely to become chargeable, but only when they become actually chargeable<sup>b</sup>. But such certificated persons can gain no settlement by any of the means above-mentioned; unless by renting a tenement of 10*l. per annum*, or by serving an annual office in the parish, being legally placed therein: neither can an apprentice or servant to such certificated person gain a settlement by such their service<sup>c</sup>.

THESE are the general heads of the laws relating to the poor, which, by the resolutions of the courts of justice thereon within a century past, are branched into a great variety. And yet, notwithstanding the <77> pains that has been taken about them, they still remain very imperfect, and inadequate to the purposes they are designed for: a fate, that has generally attended most of our statute laws, where they have not the foundation of the common law to build on. When the shires, the hundreds, and the tithings, were kept in the same admirable order that they were disposed in by the great Alfred, there were no persons idle, consequently none but the impotent that needed relief: and the statute of 43 Eliz. seems entirely founded on the same principle. But when this excellent scheme was neglected and departed from, we cannot but observe with concern, what miserable shifts and lame expedients have from time to time been adopted, in order to patch up the flaws occasioned by this neglect. There is not a more necessary or more certain maxim in the frame and constitution of society, than that every individual must contribute his share, in order to the well-being of the community: and surely they must be very deficient in sound policy, who suffer one half of a parish to continue idle, dissolute, and unemployed; <78> and then form visionary schemes, and at length are amazed to find, that the industry of the other half is not able to maintain the whole.

<sup>y</sup> [Ryslip Parish v Harrow Parish] [2] Salk. 524.

<sup>z</sup> Stat. 9 Geo. I. c. 7.

<sup>a</sup> [St. Nicholas Parish v St. Helen Parish] [2] Salk. 472.

<sup>b</sup> Stat. 8 & 9 W. III. c. 30.

<sup>c</sup> Stat. 12 Ann. c. 18.

OF THE PEOPLE, WHETHER ALIENS, DENIZENS, OR NATIVES.

HAVING, in the eight preceding chapters, treated of persons as they stand in the public relations of magistrates, I now proceed to consider such persons as fall under the denomination of the people. And herein all the inferior and subordinate magistrates, treated of in the last chapter, are included.

THE first and most obvious division of the people is into aliens and natural-born subjects. Natural-born subjects are such as are born within the dominions of the crown of England, that is, within the ligeance, or as it is generally called, the allegiance of the king; and aliens, such as are born out of it. Allegiance is the tie, or ligamen [binding], which binds the subject to the king, in return for that protection which the king affords the subject. The thing itself, or substantial part of it, is founded in reason and the nature of government; the name and the form are derived to us from our Gothic ancestors. Under the feudal system,<sup>1</sup> every owner of lands held them in subjection to some superior or lord, from whom or whose ancestors the tenant or vassal had received them: and there was a mutual trust or confidence subsisting between the lord and vassal, that the lord should protect the vassal in the enjoyment of the territory he had granted him, and, on the other hand, that the vassal should be faithful to the lord and defend him against all his enemies. This obligation on the part of the vassal was called his fidelitas [faithfulness] or fealty; and an oath of fealty was required, by the feudal law, to be taken by all tenants to their landlord, which is couched in almost the same terms as our antient oath of allegiance<sup>a</sup>: except that in the usual oath of fealty there was frequently a saving or exception of the faith due to a superior lord by name, under whom the landlord himself was perhaps only a tenant or vassal. But when the acknowledgement was made to the absolute superior himself, who was vassal to no man, it was no longer called the oath of fealty, but the oath of allegiance; and therein the tenant swore to bear faith to his sovereign lord, in opposition to all men, without any saving or exception: “contra omnes homines fidelitatem fecit”<sup>b</sup> [He did fealty as against all men.] Land held by this exalted species of fealty was called feudum ligium, a liege fee; the vassals homines ligii, or liege men; and the sovereign their dominus ligius, or liege lord. And when sovereign princes did homage to each other, for lands held under their respective sovereignties, a distinction was always made between simple homage, which was only an acknowledgement of tenure<sup>c</sup>; and liege homage, which included the fealty before-mentioned, and the services consequent upon it. Thus (1) when Edward III, in 1329, did homage to Philip

<sup>a</sup> 2 Feud. 5, 6, 7.

<sup>b</sup> 2 Feud. 99.

<sup>c</sup> 7 Rep. Calvin's case. 7.

<sup>1</sup> For a fuller account of the feudal system as Blackstone conceived of it, see further II, ch. 4.

VI of France, for his ducal dominions on that continent, it was warmly disputed of what species the homage was to be, whether liege or simple homage<sup>d</sup>. <2> With us in England, it becoming a settled principle of tenure, that all lands in the kingdom are holden of the king as their sovereign and lord paramount, no oath but that of fealty could ever be taken to inferior lords, and the oath of allegiance was necessarily confined to the person of the king alone. By an easy analogy the term of allegiance was soon brought to signify all other engagements, which are due from subjects to their prince, as well as those duties which were simply and merely territorial. And the oath of allegiance, as administred for upwards of six hundred years<sup>e</sup>, contained a promise “to be true and faithful to the king and his heirs, and truth and faith to bear of life and limb and terrene honour, and not to know or hear of any ill or damage intended him, without defending him therefrom.” Upon which sir Matthew Hale<sup>f</sup> makes this remark; that it was short and plain, not entangled with long or intricate clauses or declarations, and yet is comprehensive of the whole duty from the subject to his sovereign. But, at the revolution, the terms of this oath being thought perhaps to savour too much the notion of non-resistance, the present form was introduced by the convention parliament, which is more general and indeterminate than the former; the subject only promising “that he will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the king,” without mentioning “his heirs,” or specifying in the least wherein that allegiance consists. The oath of supremacy is principally calculated as a renuntiation of the pope’s pretended authority: and the oath of abjuration, introduced in the reign of king William<sup>g</sup>, very amply supplies the loose and general texture of the oath of allegiance; it recognizing the right of his majesty, derived under the act of settlement; engaging to support him to the utmost of the juror’s<sup>2</sup> power; promising to disclose all traitorous conspiracies against him; and expressly renouncing any <3> claim of the pretender, by name, in as clear and explicit terms as the English language can furnish. This oath must be taken by all persons in any office, trust, or employment; and may be tendered by two justices of the peace to any person, whom they shall suspect of disaffection<sup>h</sup>. <5> But the oath of allegiance may be tendered<sup>i</sup> to all persons above the age of twelve years, whether natives, denizens, or aliens, either in the court-leet of the manor, or in the sheriff’s tourn, which is the court-leet of the county.

357 BUT, besides these express engagements, the law also holds that there is an implied, original, and virtual allegiance, owing from every subject to his sovereign, antecedently to any express promise; and although the subject never swore any faith or allegiance in form. For as the king, by the very descent of the crown, is fully invested with all the rights and bound to all the duties of sovereignty, before his coronation; so the subject is bound to his prince by an intrinsic allegiance, before the super-induction of those outward bonds of oath, homage, and fealty; which were only instituted to remind the subject of this his previous duty, and for the better

<sup>d</sup> 2 Carte 401. Mod. Un. Hist. xxiii. 420.

<sup>e</sup> Mirror. c. 3. §. 35. Fleta. 3. 16. Britton. c. 29. 7 Rep. Calvin’s case. 6.

<sup>f</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 63.

<sup>g</sup> Stat. 13 W. III. c. 6.

<sup>h</sup> <4> Stat. 1 Geo. I. c. 13.

<sup>i</sup> 2 Inst. 121. 1 Hal. P. C. 64.

<sup>2</sup> Blackstone is using the term ‘juror’ in the sense of one who swears an oath.

securing its performance<sup>k</sup>. The formal profession therefore, or oath of subjection, is nothing more than a declaration in words of what was before implied in law. Which occasions sir Edward Coke very justly to observe<sup>l</sup>, that “all subjects are equally bounden to their allegiance, as if they had taken the oath; because it is written by the finger of the law in their hearts, and the taking of the corporal oath is but an outward declaration of the same.” The sanction of an oath, it is true, in case of violation of duty, makes the guilt still more accumulated, by superadding perjury to treason; but it does not encrease the civil obligation to loyalty; it only strengthens the social tie by uniting it with that of religion.

ALLEGIANCE, both express and implied, is however distinguished by the law into two sorts or species, the one natural, the other local; the former being also perpetual, the latter temporary. Natural allegiance is such as is due from all men born within the king’s dominions immediately upon their birth<sup>m</sup>. For, immediately upon their birth, they are under the king’s protection; at a time too, when (during their infancy) they are incapable of protecting themselves. Natural allegiance is therefore a debt of gratitude; which cannot be forfeited, cancelled, or altered, by any change of time, place, or circumstance, nor by any thing but the united concurrence of the legislature<sup>n</sup>. An Englishman who removes to France, or to China, owes the same allegiance to the king of England there as at home, and twenty years hence as well as now. For it is a principle of universal law<sup>o</sup>, that the natural-born subject of one prince cannot by any act of his own, no, not by swearing allegiance to another, put off or discharge his natural allegiance to the former: for this natural allegiance was intrinsic, and primitive, and antecedent to the other; and cannot be divested without the concurrent act of that prince to whom it was first due. Indeed the natural-born subject of one prince, to whom he owes allegiance, may be entangled by subjecting himself absolutely to another; but it is his own act that brings him into these straits and difficulties, of owing service to two masters; and it is unreasonable that, by such voluntary act of his own, he should be able at pleasure to unloose those bands, by which he is connected to his natural prince. 358

LOCAL allegiance is such as is due from an alien, or stranger born, for so long time as he continues within the king’s dominion and protection<sup>p</sup>: and it ceases, the instant such stranger transfers himself from this kingdom to another. Natural allegiance is therefore perpetual, and local temporary only: and that for this reason, evidently founded upon the nature of government; that allegiance is a debt due from the subject, upon an implied contract with the prince, that so long as the one affords protection, so long the other will demean himself faithfully. As therefore the prince is always under a constant tie to protect his natural-born subjects, at all times and in all countries, for this reason their allegiance due to him is equally universal and

<sup>k</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 61.

<sup>l</sup> 2 Inst. 121.

<sup>m</sup> [Calvin’s case] 7 Rep. 7.

<sup>n</sup> [Eyre v Countess of Shaftsbury] 2 P. Wms. 124.

<sup>o</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 68.

<sup>p</sup> [Calvin’s case] 7 Rep. 6.

permanent. But, on the other hand, as the prince affords his protection to an alien, only during his residence in this realm, the allegiance of an alien is confined (in point of time) to the duration of such his residence, and (in point of locality) to the dominions of the British empire. From which considerations sir Matthew Hale<sup>q</sup> deduces this consequence, that, though there be an usurper of the crown, yet it is treason for any subject, while the usurper is in full possession of the sovereignty, to practice any thing against his crown and dignity: wherefore, although the true prince regain the sovereignty, yet such attempts against the usurper (unless in defence or aid of the rightful king) have been afterwards punished with death; because of the breach of that temporary allegiance, which was due to him as king de facto [in fact]. And upon this footing, after Edward IV recovered the crown, which had been long detained from his house by the line of Lancaster, treasons committed against Henry VI were capitally punished, though Henry had been declared an usurper by parliament.

THIS oath of allegiance, or rather the allegiance itself, is held to be applicable not only to the political capacity of the king, or regal office, but to his natural person, and blood-royal: and for the misapplication of their allegiance, viz. to the regal capacity or crown, exclusive of the person of the king, were the Spencers banished<sup>3</sup> in the reign of Edward II<sup>r</sup>. And from hence arose that principle of personal attachment, and affectionate loyalty, which induced our forefathers (and, if occasion required, would doubtless induce their sons) to hazard all that was dear to them, life, fortune, and family, in defence and support of their liege lord and sovereign.

THIS allegiance then, both express and implied, is the duty of all the king's subjects, under the distinctions here laid down, of local and temporary, or universal and perpetual. Their rights are also distinguishable by the same criterions of time and locality; natural-born subjects having a great variety of rights, which they acquire by being born within the king's ligeance, and can never forfeit by any distance of place or time, but only by their own misbehaviour: the explanation of which rights is the principal subject of the two first books of these commentaries. The same is also in some degree the case of aliens; though their rights are much more circumscribed, being acquired only by residence here, and lost whenever they remove. I shall however here endeavour to chalk out some of the principal lines, whereby they are distinguished from natives, descending to farther particulars when they come in course.

AN alien born may purchase lands, or other estates: but not for his own use; for the king is thereupon entitled to them<sup>s</sup>. If an alien could acquire a permanent property in lands, he must owe an allegiance, equally permanent with that property, to the king of England; which would probably be inconsistent with that, which he owes to his own natural liege lord: besides that thereby the nation might in time be subject to

<sup>q</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 60.

<sup>r</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 67.

<sup>s</sup> Co. Litt. 2.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. I. 148.

foreign influence, and feel many other inconveniences. Wherefore by the civil law such contracts were also made void<sup>1</sup>: but the prince had no such (6) advantage of escheat thereby, as with us in England. Among other reasons, which might be given for our constitution, it seems to be intended by way of punishment for the alien's presumption, in attempting to acquire any landed property: for the vendor is not affected by it, he having resigned his right, and received an equivalent in exchange. Yet an alien may acquire a property in goods, money, and other personal estate, or may hire a house for his habitation<sup>2</sup>: for personal estate is of a transitory and moveable nature; and, besides, this indulgence to strangers is necessary for the advancement of trade. Aliens also may trade as freely as other people; only they are subject to certain higher duties at the custom-house: and there are also some obsolete statutes of Henry VIII,<sup>4</sup> prohibiting alien artificers to work for themselves in this kingdom; but it is generally held they were virtually repealed by statute 5 Eliz. c. 7. Also an alien may bring an action concerning personal property, and may make a will, and dispose of his personal estate<sup>3</sup>: not as it is in France, where the king at the death of an alien is entitled to all he is worth, by the droit d'aubaine or jus albinatus [right of alienage]<sup>x</sup>, unless he has a peculiar exemption. When I mention these rights of an alien, I must be understood of alien-friends only, or such whose countries are in peace with ours; for alien-enemies have no rights, no privileges, unless by the king's special favour, 361 during the time of war.

WHEN I say, that an alien is one who is born out of the king's dominions, or allegiance, this also must be understood with some restrictions. The common law indeed stood absolutely so; with only a very few exceptions: so that a particular act of parliament became necessary after the restoration<sup>y</sup>, for the naturalization of children of his majesty's English subjects, born in foreign countries during the late troubles. And this maxim of the law proceeded upon a general principle, that every man owes natural allegiance where he is born, and cannot owe two such allegiances, or serve two masters, at once. Yet the children of the king's ambassadors born abroad were always held to be natural subjects<sup>z</sup>: for as the father, though in a foreign country, owes not even a local allegiance to the prince to whom he is sent; so, with regard to the son also, he was held (by a kind of postliminium<sup>5</sup>) to be born under the king of England's allegiance, represented by his father, the ambassador. To encourage also foreign commerce, it was enacted by statute 25 Edw. III. st. 2. that all children born abroad, provided both their parents were at the time of the birth in allegiance to the

<sup>1</sup> Cod. l. 11. tit. 55.

<sup>2</sup> [Calvin's case] 7 Rep. 17.

<sup>3</sup> [Wells v Williams] Lutw. 34.

<sup>x</sup> The word is derived from alibi natus [born elsewhere]; Spelm. Gl. 24.

<sup>y</sup> Stat. 29 Car. II. c. 6.

<sup>z</sup> [Calvin's case] 7 Rep. 18.

<sup>4</sup> The reference is presumably to 21 Hen. VIII c. 16 (1529): 'Aliens exercising Handycrafts, etc. liable to Penalties'; and 32 Hen. VIII c. 16 (1540): 'no personne not born under the ... Kinges obeisance ... shulde ... exercise or occupie any crafte or manual occupation within the ... Realme'.

<sup>5</sup> Postliminium: the right of a banished person or captive to resume civic rights on return from exile; recovery, restoration.

king, and the mother had passed the seas by her husband's consent, might inherit as if born in England: and accordingly it hath been so adjudged in behalf of merchants<sup>a</sup>. But by several more modern statutes<sup>b</sup> these restrictions are still farther taken off: so that all children, born out of the king's ligeance, <8> whose fathers were natural-born subjects, are now natural-born subjects themselves, to all intents and purposes, without any exception; unless their said fathers were attainted, or banished beyond sea, for high treason; or <9> were then in the service of a prince at enmity with Great Britain.

362 THE children of aliens, born here in England, are, generally speaking, natural-born subjects, and entitled to all the privileges of such. In which the constitution of France differs from ours; for there, by their jus albinatus, if a child be born of foreign parents, it is an alien<sup>c</sup>.

A DENIZEN is an alien born, but who has obtained ex donatione regis [by the gift of the king] letters patent to make him an English subject: a high and incommunicable branch of the royal prerogative<sup>d</sup>. A denizen is in a kind of middle state between an alien, and natural-born subject, and partakes of both of them. He may take lands by purchase or devise, which an alien may not; but cannot take by inheritance<sup>e</sup>: for his parent, through whom he must claim, being an alien had no inheritable blood, and therefore could convey none to the son. And, upon a like defect of hereditary blood, the issue of a denizen, born before denization, cannot inherit to him; but his issue born after, may<sup>f</sup>. A denizen is not excused<sup>g</sup> from paying the alien's duty, and some other mercantile burthens. And no denizen can be of the privy council, or either house of parliament, or have any office of trust, civil or military, or be capable of <10> any grant from the crown<sup>h</sup>.

NATURALIZATION cannot be performed but by act of parliament: for by this an alien is put in exactly the same state as if he had been born in the king's ligeance; except only that he is incapable, as well as a denizen, of being a member of <11> the privy council, or parliament, &c<sup>i</sup>. No bill for naturalization can be received in either house of parliament, <12> without such disabling clause in it<sup>k</sup>. Neither can any person be naturalized or restored in blood, unless he hath received the sacrament of the Lord's supper within one month before the bringing in of the bill; and unless he also takes the oaths of allegiance and supremacy in the presence of the <13> parliament<sup>l</sup>.

363 THESE are the principal distinctions between aliens, denizens, and natives: distinctions, <14> which endeavors have been frequently used since the commencement of this century to lay almost totally aside, by one general naturalization-act for all

<sup>a</sup> [Bacon v Bacon] Cro. Car. 601. Mar. 91. Jenk. Cent. 3.

<sup>b</sup> <7> 7 Ann. c. 5. and 4 Geo. II. c. 21.

<sup>c</sup> Jenk. Cent. 3. cites treasure françois, 312.

<sup>d</sup> 7 Rep. Calvin's case. 25.

<sup>e</sup> [Magdalen College case] 11 Rep. 67.

<sup>f</sup> Co. Litt. 8. [Craw v Ramsey] Vaugh. 285.

<sup>g</sup> Stat. 22 Hen. VIII. c. 8.

<sup>h</sup> Stat. 12 W. III. c. 2.

<sup>i</sup> Ibid.

<sup>k</sup> Stat. 1 Geo. I. c. 4.

<sup>l</sup> Stat. 7 Jac. I. c. 2.

foreign protestants. An attempt which was once carried into execution by the statute 7 Ann. c. 5. but this, after three years experience of it, was repealed by the statute 10 Ann. c. 5 except one clause, which was just now mentioned, for naturalizing the children of English parents born abroad. However, every foreign seaman who in time of war serves two years on board <15> an English ship is ipso facto naturalized<sup>m</sup>; and all foreign protestants, and Jews, upon their residing seven years in any of the American colonies, without being absent above two months at a <16> time, are upon taking the oaths naturalized to all intents and purposes, as if they had been <17> born in this kingdom<sup>n</sup>; and therefore are admissible to all such privileges, and no other, as protestants or Jews born in this kingdom are entitled to. <19> What those privileges are<sup>o</sup>, was the subject of very high debates about the time of the famous Jew-bill<sup>p</sup>; which enabled all Jews to prefer bills of naturalization in parliament, without receiving the sacrament, as ordained by statute 7 Jac. I. c. 2. It is not my intention to revive this controversy again; for the act lived only a few months, and was then repealed<sup>q</sup>: therefore peace be now to its manes.

<sup>m</sup> Stat. 13 Geo. II. c. 3.

<sup>n</sup> <18> Stat. 13 Geo. II. c. 7. 20 Geo. II. c. 24. 2 Geo. III. c. 25.

<sup>o</sup> A pretty accurate account of the Jews, till their banishment in 8 Edw. I. may be <20> found in Molloy de jure maritimo, b. 3. c. 6.

<sup>p</sup> Stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 26.

<sup>q</sup> Stat. 27 Geo. II. c. 1.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

OF THE CLERGY.

THE people, whether aliens, denizens, or natural-born subjects, are divisible into two kinds; the clergy and laity: the clergy, comprehending all persons in holy orders, and in ecclesiastical offices, will be the subject of the following chapter.

THIS venerable body of men, being separate and set apart from the rest of the people, in order to attend the more closely to the service of almighty God, have thereupon large privileges allowed them by our municipal laws: and had formerly much greater, which were abridged at the time of the reformation, on account of the ill use which the popish clergy had endeavoured to make of them. For, the laws having exempted them from almost every personal duty, they attempted a total exemption from every secular tie. But it is observed by sir Edward Coke<sup>a</sup>, that, as the overflowing of waters doth many times make the river to lose its proper chanel, so in times past ecclesiastical persons, seeking to extend their liberties beyond their true bounds, either lost or enjoyed not those which of right belonged to them. The personal exemptions do indeed for the most part continue. A clergyman cannot be compelled to serve on a jury, nor to appear at a court-leet or view of frank pledge; which almost every other person is obliged to do<sup>b</sup>: but, if a layman is summoned on 365 a jury, and before the trial takes orders, he shall notwithstanding appear and be sworn<sup>c</sup>. Neither can he be chosen to any temporal office; as bailiff, reeve, constable, or the like: in regard of his own continual attendance on the sacred function<sup>d</sup>. During his attendance on divine service he is privileged from arrests in civil suits<sup>e</sup>. In cases also of felony, a clerk in orders shall have the benefit of his clergy, without being branded in the hand; and may likewise have it more than once: in both which particulars he is distinguished from a layman<sup>f</sup>. But as they have their privileges, so also they have their disabilities, on account of their spiritual avocations. Clergymen, we have seen<sup>g</sup>, are incapable of sitting in the house of commons; and by statute 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13. 〈1〉 are not allowed to take any lands or tenements to farm, upon pain of 10*l.* per month, and total 〈2〉 avoidance of the lease; nor shall engage in any manner of trade, nor sell any merchandize, under forfeiture of the treble value. Which prohibition is consonant to the canon law.

IN the frame and constitution of ecclesiastical polity there are divers ranks and degrees: which I shall consider in their respective order, merely as they are taken

<sup>a</sup> 2 Inst. 4.

<sup>b</sup> F. N. B. 160. 2 Inst. 4.

<sup>c</sup> [Beecher's case] 4 Leon. 190.

<sup>d</sup> Finch. L. 88.

<sup>e</sup> Stat. 50 Edw. III. c. 5. 1 Ric II. c. 16.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Inst. 637. Stat. 4 Hen. VII. c. 13. & 1 Edw. VI c. 12.

<sup>g</sup> page 169 [I. 115].

notice of by the secular laws of England; without intermeddling with the canons and constitutions, <3> by which they have bound themselves. And under each division I shall consider, 1. The method of their appointment; 2. Their rights and duties; and 3. The manner wherein their character or office may cease.

I. AN arch-bishop or bishop is elected by the chapter of his cathedral church, by virtue of a licence from the crown. Election was, in very early times, the usual mode of elevation to the episcopal chair throughout all christendom; and this was promiscuously performed by the laity as well as the clergy<sup>h</sup>: till at length, it becoming tumultuous, the emperors and other sovereigns of the respective kingdoms of Europe <4> took the election in some degree into their own hands; by reserving to themselves the right of confirming these elections, and of granting investiture of the temporalities, which now began almost universally to be annexed to this spiritual dignity; without which confirmation and investiture, the elected bishop could neither be consecrated, nor receive any secular profits. This right was acknowledged in the emperor Charlemagne, A.D. 773, by pope Hadrian I, and the council of Lateran<sup>i</sup>,<sup>1</sup> and universally exercised by other christian princes: but the policy of the court of Rome at the same time began by degrees to exclude the laity from any share in these elections, and to confine them wholly to the clergy, which at length was completely effected; the mere form of election appearing to the people to be a thing of little consequence, while the crown was in possession of an absolute negative, which was almost equivalent to a direct right of nomination. Hence the right of appointing to bishopricks is said to have been in the crown of England<sup>k</sup> (as well as other kingdoms in Europe) even in the Saxon times, because the rights of confirmation and investiture were in effect (though not in form) a right of complete donation<sup>l</sup>. But when, by length of time, the custom of making elections by the clergy only was fully established, the popes began to except to the usual method of granting these investitures, which was per annulum et baculum [by the ring and staff], by the prince's delivering to the prelate a ring, and a pastoral staff or crosier; pretending, that this was an encroachment on the church's authority, and an attempt by these symbols to confer a spiritual jurisdiction: and pope Gregory VII, towards the close of the eleventh century, published a bulle of excommunication against all princes who should dare to confer investitures, and all prelates who should venture to receive them<sup>m</sup>. This was a bold step towards effecting the plan then adopted by the Roman see, of rendering the

366

367

<sup>h</sup> per clerum et populum [by clergy and people]. [Bishop of Ossory's case] Palm. 25. [Sobreen and Teige v Kevan] 2 Roll. Rep. 102. M. Paris. A.D. 1095.

<sup>i</sup> Decret. 1. dist. 63. c. 22.

<sup>k</sup> [Bishop of Ossory's case] Palm. 28.

<sup>l</sup> "Nulla electio praelatorum (sunt verba Ingulphi) erat mere libera et canonica; sed omnes dignitates, tam episcoporum, quam abbatum, per annulum et baculum regis curia pro sua complacentia conferebat." Penes clericos et monachos fuit electio, sed electum a rege postulabant. ["There was no election of prelates (says Ingulf) purely free and canonical, but the king's court granted all dignities at its pleasure, as well of bishops as of abbots, by the ring and the staff. The election was in the power of the clergy and monks, but they asked the king for his choice.] Selden. Jan. Angl. I. 1. §. 39.

<sup>m</sup> Decret. 2. caus. 16. qu. 7. c. 12 & 13.

<sup>1</sup> Blackstone appears to be referring to an early council at the Lateran palace, Rome, and cites a canon recording Hadrian I's decision in a synod called by Charlemagne before he became Holy Roman emperor.

clergy intirely independent of the civil authority: and long and eager were the contests occasioned (5) by this dispute. But at length when the emperor Henry V agreed to remove all suspicion of encroachment on the spiritual character, by conferring investitures for the future per sceptrum [by the sceptre] and not per annulum et baculum; and when the kings of England and France consented also to alter the form in their kingdoms, and receive only homage from the bishops for their temporalities, instead of investing them by the ring and crosier; the court of Rome found it prudent to suspend for a while its other pretensions<sup>a</sup>.

THIS concession was obtained from king Henry the first in England, by means of that obstinate and arrogant prelate, archbishop Anselm<sup>o</sup>: but king John (about a century afterwards) in order to obtain the protection of the pope against his discontented barons, (6) was prevailed upon to give up by a charter, to all the monasteries and cathedrals in the kingdom, the free right of electing their prelates, whether abbots or bishops: reserving only to the crown the custody of the temporalities during the vacancy; the form of granting a licence to elect, (which is the original of our conge d'eslire [permission to elect]) on refusal whereof the electors might proceed without it; and the right of approbation afterwards, which was not to be denied without a reasonable and lawful cause<sup>p</sup>. This grant was expressly recognized and confirmed in king John's magna carta<sup>q</sup>, and was again established by statute 25 Edw. III. st. 6. §. 3.

368 BUT by statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 20. the antient right of nomination was, in effect, restored to the crown: it being enacted that, at every future avoidance of a bishoprick, the king may send the dean and chapter his usual licence to proceed to election; which is always to be accompanied with a letter missive from the king, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect: and, if the dean and chapter delay their election above twelve days, the nomination shall devolve to the king, who may by letters patent appoint such person as he pleases. This election or nomination, if it be of a bishop, must be signified by the king's letters patent to the arch-bishop of the province; if it be of an arch-bishop, to the other arch-bishop and two bishops, or to four bishops; requiring them to confirm, invest, and consecrate the person so elected: which they are bound to perform immediately, without any application to the see of Rome. After which the bishop elect shall sue to the king for his temporalities, shall make oath to the king and none other, and shall take restitution of his secular possessions out of the king's hands only. And if such dean and chapter do not elect in the manner by this act appointed, or if such arch-bishop or bishop do refuse to confirm, invest, and consecrate such bishop elect, they shall incur all the penalties of a praemunire.

AN arch-bishop is the chief of the clergy in a whole province; and has the inspection of the bishops of that province, as well as of the inferior clergy, and may deprive them on notorious cause<sup>r</sup>. The arch-bishop has also his own diocese, wherein he exercises episcopal jurisdiction; as in his province he exercises archiepiscopal. As arch-bishop,

<sup>a</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xxv. 363. xxix. 115.

<sup>o</sup> M. Paris. A.D. 1107.

<sup>p</sup> M. Paris. A.D. 1214. 1 Rym. Foed 198.

<sup>q</sup> cap. 1. edit. Oxon. 1759.

<sup>r</sup> [Bishop of St. David's v Lucy] [1] Lord Raym. 541.

he, upon receipt of the king's writ, calls the bishops and clergy of his province to meet in convocation: but without the king's writ he cannot assemble them<sup>s</sup>. To him all appeals are made from inferior jurisdictions within his province; and, as an appeal lies from the bishops in person to him in person, so it also lies from the consistory courts of each diocese to his archiepiscopal court. During the vacancy of any see in his province, he is guardian of the spiritualties thereof, as the king is of the temporalities; and he executes all ecclesiastical jurisdiction therein. If an archiepiscopal see be vacant, the dean and chapter are the spiritual guardians, ever since the office of prior of Canterbury was abolished at the reformation<sup>t</sup>. The arch-bishop is entitled to present by lapse to all the ecclesiastical livings in the disposal of his diocesan bishops, if not filled within six months. And the arch-bishop has a customary prerogative, when a bishop is consecrated by him, to name a clerk or chaplain of his own to be provided for by such suffragan bishop; in lieu of which it is now usual for the bishop to make over by deed to the arch-bishop, his executors and assigns, the next presentation of such dignity or benefice in the bishop's disposal within that see, as the arch-bishop himself shall choose; which is therefore called his option<sup>u</sup>: which options are only binding on the bishop himself who grants them, (8) and not his successors. The prerogative itself seems to be derived from the legatine power formerly annexed by the popes to the metropolitan of Canterbury<sup>w</sup>. And we may add, that the papal claim itself (like most others of that encroaching see) was probably set up in imitation of the imperial prerogative called primae or primariae preces [first requests]; whereby the emperor exercises, and hath immemorially exercised<sup>x</sup>, a right of naming to the first prebend that becomes vacant after his accession in every church of the empire<sup>y</sup>. A right, that was also exercised by the crown of England in the reign of Edward I<sup>z</sup>; and which probably gave rise to the royal corodies, which were mentioned in a former chapter<sup>a</sup>. (9) It is also the privilege, by custom, of the arch-bishop of Canterbury, to crown the kings and queens of this kingdom. And he hath also by the statute 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21. the power of granting dispensations in any case, not contrary to the holy scriptures and the law of God, where the pope used formerly to grant them: which is the foundation of his granting special licences, to marry at any place or time, to hold two livings, and the like: and on this also is founded the right he exercises of conferring degrees, in prejudice of the two universities<sup>b</sup>.

<sup>s</sup> 4 Inst. 322, 323.

<sup>t</sup> (7) 2 Roll. Abr. 223.

<sup>u</sup> Cowel's interpr. tit. option.

<sup>w</sup> Sherlock of options. 1.

<sup>x</sup> Goldast. constit. imper. tom. 3. pag. 406.

<sup>y</sup> Dufresne. V. 806. Mod. Un. Hist. xxix. 5.

<sup>z</sup> Rex, &c, salutem. Scribatis episcopo Karl. quod—Roberto de Icard pensionem suam, quam ad preces regis praedicto Roberto concessit, de caetero solvat; et de proxima ecclesia vacatura de collatione praedicti episcopi, quam ipse Robertus acceptaverit, respiciat. [The king, etc. sends greetings. You are to write to the Bishop of Carlisle, that he henceforth pay to Robert de Icard, the pension which he granted to the said Robert at the request of the king, and that he reward the said Robert with the next vacant church belonging to the collation of the said bishop which is acceptable to the said Robert.] Brev. 11 Edw. 1. 3 Pryn. 1264.

<sup>a</sup> ch. 8. pag. 273 [I. 182].

<sup>b</sup> See the bishop of Chester's case. Oxon. 1721.

370 THE power and authority of a bishop, besides the administration of certain holy ordinances peculiar to that sacred order, (10) consists principally in inspecting the manners of the people and clergy, and punishing them, in order to reformation, by ecclesiastical censures. To this purpose he has several courts under him, and may visit at pleasure every part of his diocese. His chancellor is appointed to hold his courts for him, and to assist him in matters of ecclesiastical law; who, as well as all other ecclesiastical officers, if lay or married, must be a doctor of the civil law, so created in some university<sup>c</sup>. It is also the business of a bishop to institute and to direct induction to all ecclesiastical livings in his diocese.

ARCHBISHOPRICKS and bishopricks may become void by death, deprivation for any very gross and notorious crime, and also by resignation. All resignations must be made to some superior<sup>d</sup>. Therefore a bishop must resign to his metropolitan; but the arch-bishop can resign to none but the king himself.

II. A DEAN and chapter are the council of the bishop, to assist him with their advice in affairs of religion, and also in the temporal concerns of his see<sup>e</sup>. When the rest of the clergy were settled in the several parishes of each diocese (as hath formerly<sup>f</sup> been mentioned) these were reserved for the celebration of divine service in the bishop's own cathedral; and the chief of them, who presided over the rest, obtained the name of decanus [chief of ten] or dean, being probably at first appointed to superintend ten canons or prebendaries.

371 ALL antient deans are elected by the chapter, by conge d'eslire [permission to elect] from the king, and letters missive of recommendation; in the same manner as bishops: but in those chapters, that were founded by Henry VIII out of the spoils of the dissolved monasteries, the deanery is donative, and the installation merely by the king's letters patent<sup>g</sup>. The chapter, consisting of canons or prebendaries, are sometimes appointed by the king, sometimes by the bishop, and sometimes elected by each other.

THE dean and chapter are, as was before observed, the nominal electors of a bishop. The bishop is their ordinary and immediate superior; and has, generally speaking, the power of visiting them, and correcting their excesses and enormities. They had also a check on the bishop at common law: for till the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28. his grant or lease would not have bound his successors, unless confirmed by the dean and chapter<sup>h</sup>.

DEANERIES and prebends may become void, like a bishoprick, by death, by deprivation, or by resignation to either the king or the bishop<sup>i</sup>. Also I may here mention, once for all, that if a dean, prebendary, or other spiritual person be made a bishop, all the preferments he was before possessed of are void; and the king may present to them in right of his prerogative royal. But they are not void by the election, but only by the consecration<sup>k</sup>.

<sup>c</sup> Stat. 37 Hen. VIII. c. 17.

<sup>d</sup> Gibs. cod. 822.

<sup>e</sup> [Case of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich] 3 Rep. 75. Co. Litt. 103, 300.

<sup>f</sup> pag. 108, 109 [I. 77–8].

<sup>g</sup> Gibs. cod. 173.

<sup>h</sup> Co. Litt. 103.

<sup>i</sup> [Grendon v Bishop of Lincoln] [2] Plowd. 498.

<sup>k</sup> (11) 2 Roll. Abr. 352. [Bishop of St. David's v Lucy] [1] Salk. 137.

III. AN arch-deacon hath an ecclesiastical jurisdiction, immediately subordinate to the bishop, throughout the whole of his diocese, or in some particular part of it. He is usually appointed by the bishop himself; and hath a kind of episcopal authority, originally derived from the bishop, but now independent and distinct from his<sup>1</sup>. He therefore visits the clergy; and has his separate court for punishment of offenders by spiritual censures, and for hearing all other causes of ecclesiastical cognizance.

IV. THE rural deans are very antient officers of the church<sup>m</sup>, but almost grown out of use; though their deaneries still subsist as an ecclesiastical division of the diocese, or archdeaconry. They seem to have been deputies of the bishop, planted all round his diocese, the better to inspect the conduct of the parochial <12> clergy, and therefore armed with an inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority<sup>n</sup>. 372

V. THE next, and indeed the most numerous order of men in the system of ecclesiastical polity, are the parsons and <14> vicars of parishes: in treating of whom I shall first mark out the distinction between them; shall next observe the method by which one may become a parson or vicar; shall then briefly touch upon their rights and duties; and shall, lastly, shew how one may cease to be either.

A PARSON, persona ecclesiae [person of the church], is one that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. He is called parson, persona, because by his person the church, which is an invisible body, is represented; and he is in himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the rights of the church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession<sup>o</sup>. He is sometimes called the rector, or governor, of the church: but the appellation of parson, (however it may be depreciated by familiar, clownish, and indiscriminate use) is the most legal, most beneficial, and most honourable title that a parish priest can enjoy; because such a one, (sir Edward Coke observes) and he only, is said vicem seu personam ecclesiae gerere [to take the place or person of the church]. A parson has, during his life, the freehold in himself of the parsonage house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues. But these are sometimes appropriated; that is to say, the benefice is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living; <15> whom the law esteems equally capable of providing for the service of the church, as any single private clergyman. This contrivance seems to have sprung from the policy of the monastic orders, who have never been deficient in subtle inventions for the increase of their own power and emoluments. At the first establishment of parochial clergy, the tithes of the parish were distributed in a fourfold division; one for the use of the bishop, another for maintaining the fabrick of the church, a third for the poor, and the fourth to provide for the incumbent. When the sees of the bishops became otherwise amply endowed, they were prohibited from demanding their usual share of these tithes, and the division was into three parts only. And hence it was inferred by the monasteries, that a small part was sufficient for the officiating priest, and that 373

<sup>1</sup> 1 Burn. eccl. law. 68, 69.

<sup>m</sup> Kennet. par. antiq. 633.

<sup>n</sup> <13> Gibs. cod. 972.

<sup>o</sup> Co. Litt. 300.

the remainder might well be applied to the use of their own fraternities, (the endowment of which was construed to be a work of the most exalted piety) subject to the burthen of repairing the church and providing for its constant supply. And therefore they begged and bought, for masses and obits, and sometimes even for money, all the advowsons within their reach, and then appropriated the benefices to the use of their own corporation. But, in order to complete such appropriation effectually, the king's licence, and consent of the bishop, must first be obtained; because both the king and the bishop may sometime or other have an interest, by lapse, in the presentation to the benefice; which can never happen if it be appropriated to the use of a corporation, which never dies: and also because the law reposes a confidence in them, that they will not consent to any thing that shall be to the prejudice of the church. The consent of the patron also is necessarily implied, because (as was before observed) the appropriation can be originally made to none, but to such spiritual corporation, as is also the patron of the church; the whole being indeed nothing else, but an allowance for the patrons to retain the tithes and glebe in their own hands, without presenting any clerk, they themselves undertaking to provide for the service of the church<sup>p</sup>. When the appropriation is thus made, the appropriators and their successors are perpetual parsons of the church; and must sue and be sued, in all matters concerning the rights of the church, by the name of parsons<sup>q</sup>.

374 THIS appropriation may be severed, and the church become disappropriate, two ways: as, first, if the patron or appropriator presents a clerk, who is instituted and inducted to the parsonage: for the incumbent so instituted and inducted is to all intents and purposes complete parson; and the appropriation, being once severed, can never be re-united again, unless by a repetition of the same solemnities<sup>r</sup>. And when the clerk so presented is distinct from the vicar, the rectory thus vested in him becomes what is called a sine-cure [without responsibility]; because he hath no cure of souls, having a vicar under him to whom that cure is committed<sup>s</sup>. Also, if the corporation which has the appropriation is dissolved, the parsonage becomes disappropriate at common law; because the perpetuity of person is gone, which is necessary to support the appropriation.

In this manner, and subject to these conditions, may appropriations be made at this day: and thus were most, if not all, of the appropriations at present existing originally made; being annexed to bishopricks, prebends, religious houses, nay, even to nunneries, and certain military orders, all of which were spiritual corporations. At the dissolution of monasteries by statutes 27 Hen. VIII. c. 28. and 31 Hen. VIII. c. 13. the appropriations of the several parsonages, which belonged to those respective religious houses, (amounting to more than one third of all the parishes in England<sup>t</sup>) would have been by the rules of the common law disappropriated; had not a clause in those statutes intervened, to give them to the king in as ample a manner as the abbots, &c, formerly held the same, at the time of their dissolution. This, though

<sup>p</sup> [Grendon v Bishop of Lincoln] [2] Plowd. 496–500.

<sup>q</sup> [Wright v Gerrard and Hildersham] Hob. 307.

<sup>r</sup> Co. Litt. 46.

<sup>s</sup> Sine-cures might also be created by other means. 2 Burn. eccl. law. 347.

<sup>t</sup> Seld. review of tith. c. 9. Spelm. Apology. 35.

perhaps scarcely defensible, was not without example; for the same was done in former reigns, when the alien priories, (that is, such as were filled by foreigners only) were dissolved and given to the crown<sup>u</sup>. And from these two roots have sprung all the lay appropriations or secular parsonages, which we now see in the kingdom; they having been afterwards granted out from time to time by the crown<sup>w</sup>.

THESE appropriating corporations, or religious houses, were wont to depute one of their own body to perform divine service, and administer the sacraments, in those parishes of which the society was thus the parson. This officiating minister was in reality no more than a curate, deputy, or vicegerent of the appropriator, and therefore called vicarius, or vicar. His stipend was at the discretion of the appropriator, who was however bound of common right to find somebody, qui illi de temporalibus, episcopo de spiritualibus, debeat respondere [who should answer to him concerning temporal and to the bishop about spiritual matters]<sup>x</sup>. But this was done in so scandalous a manner, and the parishes suffered so much by the neglect of the appropriators, that the legislature was forced to interpose: and accordingly it is enacted by statute 15 Ric. II. c. 6. that in all appropriations of churches, the diocesan bishop shall ordain (in proportion to the value of the church) a competent sum to be distributed among the poor parishioners annually; and that the vicarage shall be sufficiently endowed. It seems the parish were frequently sufferers, not only by the want of divine service, but also by withholding those alms, for which, among other purposes, the payment of tithes was originally imposed: and therefore in this act a pension is directed to be distributed among the poor parochians, as well as a sufficient stipend to the vicar. But he, being liable to be removed at the pleasure of the appropriator, was not likely to insist too rigidly on the legal sufficiency of the stipend: and therefore by statute 4 Hen. IV. c. 12. it is ordained, that the vicar shall be a secular person, not a member of any religious house; that he shall be vicar perpetual, not removeable at the caprice of the monastery; and that he shall be canonically instituted and inducted, and be sufficiently endowed, at the discretion of the ordinary, for these three express purposes, to do divine service, to inform the people, and to keep hospitality. The endowments in consequence of these statutes have usually been by a portion of the glebe, or land, belonging to the parsonage, and a particular share of the tithes, which the appropriators found it most troublesome to collect, and which are therefore generally <16> called privy, small, or vicarial, tithes; the greater, or predial, tithes being still reserved to their own use. But one and the same rule was not observed in the endowment of all vicarages. Hence some are more liberally, and some more scantily, endowed; and <17> hence many things, as wood in particular, is in some countries a rectorial, and in some a vicarial tithe. 376

THE distinction therefore of a parson and vicar is this; that the parson has for the most part the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish; but a vicar has generally an appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom he is in effect perpetual curate, with a standing salary. Though in some places the vicarage has been considerably augmented by a large share of the great tithes; which augmentations were greatly assisted by the statute 29 Car. II. c. 8. enacted in favour of poor vicars and curates, which rendered such temporary augmentations (when made by the appropriators) perpetual.

<sup>u</sup> 2 Inst. 584.

<sup>w</sup> Sir H. Spelman (of tythes, c. 29.) says these are now called impropriations, as being improperly in the hands of laymen.

<sup>x</sup> Seld. tith. c. 11. 1.

THE method of becoming a parson or vicar is much the same. To both there are four requisites necessary: holy orders; presentation; institution; and induction. The method of conferring the holy orders of deacon and priest, according to the liturgy and canons<sup>y</sup>, is foreign to the purpose of these commentaries; any farther than as they are necessary requisites to make a complete parson or vicar. By common law a deacon, of any age, might be instituted and inducted to a parsonage or vicarage: but it was ordained by statute 13 Eliz. c. 12. that no person under twenty three years of age, and in deacon's orders, should be presented to any benefice with cure; and if he were not ordained priest within one year after his induction, he should be ipso facto deprived: and now, by statute 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4. no person is capable to be admitted to any benefice, unless he hath been first ordained a priest; and then he is, in the language of the law, a clerk in orders. But if he obtains orders, or a licence to preach, by money or corrupt practices (which seems to be the true, though not the common notion of simony) the person giving such orders forfeits<sup>z</sup> 40*l.* and the person receiving 10*l.* and is incapable of any ecclesiastical preferment for seven years afterwards.

ANY clerk may be presented<sup>a</sup> to a parsonage or vicarage; that is, the patron, to whom the advowson of the church belongs, may offer his clerk to the bishop of the diocese to be instituted. Of advowsons, or the right of presentation, being a species of private property, we shall find a more convenient place to treat in the second part of these commentaries. But when a clerk is presented, the bishop may refuse him upon many accounts. As, 1. If the patron is excommunicated, and remains in contempt forty days<sup>b</sup>. Or, 2. If the clerk be unfit<sup>c</sup>: which unfitness is of several kinds. First, with regard to his person; as if he be a bastard, an outlaw, an excommunicate, an alien, under age, or the like<sup>d</sup>. Next, with regard to his faith or morals; as for any particular heresy, or vice that is malum in se [wrong in itself]: but if the bishop alleges only in generals, as that he is schismaticus inveteratus [an inveterate schismatic], or objects a fault that is malum prohibitum [wrong because forbidden] merely, as haunting taverns, playing at unlawful games, or the like; it is not good cause of refusal<sup>e</sup>. Or, lastly, the clerk may be unfit to discharge the pastoral office for want of learning. In any of which cases the bishop may refuse the clerk. In case the refusal is for heresy, schism, inability of learning, or other matter of ecclesiastical cognizance, there the bishop must give notice to the patron of such his cause of refusal, who,

<sup>y</sup> See 2 Burn. eccl. law. 103.

<sup>z</sup> Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6.

<sup>a</sup> A layman may also be presented; but he must take priests orders before his admission. 1 Burn. 103.

<sup>b</sup> 2 Roll. Abr. 355.

<sup>c</sup> Glanv. l. 13. c. 20.

<sup>d</sup> [YB 15 Hen. 7, f. 7, pl. 2; Specot's case] 2 Roll. Abr. 356. 2 Inst. 632. Stat. 3 Ric. II. c. 3. 7 Ric. II. c. 12.

<sup>e</sup> [Specot's case] 5 Rep. 58.

being usually a layman, is not supposed to have knowlege of it; else he cannot present by lapse: but if the cause be temporal, there he is not bound to give notice<sup>f</sup>.

IF an action at law be brought by the patron against the bishop, for refusing his clerk, the bishop must assign the cause. If the cause be of a temporal nature and the fact admitted, (as, for instance, outlawry) the judges of the king's courts must determine its validity, or, whether it be sufficient cause of refusal: but if the fact be denied, it must be determined by a jury. If the cause be of a spiritual nature, (as, heresy, particularly alleged) the fact if denied shall also be determined by a jury; and if the fact be admitted or found, the court upon consultation and advice of learned divines shall decide its sufficiency<sup>g</sup>. If the cause be want of learning, the bishop need not specify in what points the clerk is deficient, but only allege that he is deficient<sup>h</sup>: for the statute 9 Edw. II. st. 1. c. 13. is express, that the examination of the fitness of a person presented to a benefice belongs to the ecclesiastical judge. But because it would be nugatory in this case to demand the reason of refusal from the ordinary, if the patron were bound to abide by his determination, who has already pronounced his clerk unfit; therefore if the bishop returns the clerk to be minus sufficiens in literatura [deficient in learning], the court shall write to the metropolitan, to reexamine him, and certify his qualifications; which certificate of the arch-bishop is final<sup>i</sup>. 378

IF the bishop hath no objections, but admits the patron's presentation, the clerk so admitted is next to be instituted by him; which is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice: for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk. When a vicar is instituted, he (besides the usual forms) takes, if required by the bishop, an oath of perpetual residence; for the maxim of law is, that vicarius non habet vicarium [a vicar has no deputy]: and as the non-residence of the appropriators was the cause of the perpetual establishment of vicarages, the law judges it very improper for them to defeat the end of their constitution, and by absence to create the very mischiefs which they were appointed to remedy: especially as, if any profits are to arise from putting in a curate and living at a distance from the parish, the appropriator, who is the real parson, has undoubtedly the elder title to them. When the ordinary is also the patron, and confers the living, the presentation and institution are one and the same act, and are called a collation to a benefice. By institution or collation the church is full, so that there can be no fresh presentation till another vacancy, at least in the case of a common patron; but the church is not full against the king, till induction: nay, even if a clerk is instituted upon the king's presentation, the crown may revoke it before induction, and present another clerk<sup>k</sup>. Upon institution also the clerk may enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant or let them, 〈18〉 or bring any action for them, till induction. 379

INDUCTION is performed by a mandate from the bishop to the arch-deacon, who usually issues out a precept to other clergymen to perform it for him. It is done by

<sup>f</sup> 2 Inst. 632.

<sup>g</sup> 2 Inst. 632.

<sup>h</sup> [Specot's case] 5 Rep. 58. [Hele v Bishop of Exeter and Hayman] 3 Lev. 313.

<sup>i</sup> 2 Inst. 632.

<sup>k</sup> Co. Litt. 344.

giving the clerk corporal possession of the church, as by holding the ring of the door, tolling a bell, or the like; and is a form required by law, with intent to give all the parishioners due notice, and sufficient certainty of their new minister, to whom their tithes are to be paid. This therefore is the investiture of the temporal part of the benefice, as institution is of the spiritual. And when a clerk is thus presented, instituted, and inducted into a rectory, he is then, and not before, in full and complete possession, and is called in law persona impersonata [a parson in possession], or parson imparsonee<sup>1</sup>.

THE rights of a parson or vicar, in his tithes and ecclesiastical dues, fall more properly under the second book of these commentaries: and as to his duties, they are principally of ecclesiastical cognizance; those only excepted which are laid upon him by statute. And those are indeed so numerous that it is impracticable to recite them here with any tolerable conciseness or accuracy. Some of them we may remark, as 380 they arise in the progress of our enquiries, but for the rest I must refer myself to such authors as have compiled treatises expressly upon this subject<sup>m</sup>. I shall only just mention the article of residence, upon the supposition of which the law doth stile every parochial minister an incumbent. By statute 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13. persons wilfully absenting themselves from their benefices, for one month together, or two months in the year, incur a penalty of 5*l.* to the king, and 5*l.* to any person that will sue for the same: except chaplains to the king, or others therein mentioned<sup>n</sup>, during their attendance in the houshold of such as retain them: and also except<sup>o</sup> all heads of houses, magistrates, and professors in the universities, and all students under forty years of age residing there, bona fide, for study. Legal residence is not only in the parish, but also in the <20> parsonage house: for it hath been resolved<sup>p</sup>, that the statute intended residence, not only for serving the cure, and for hospitality; <21> but also for maintaining the house, that the successor also may keep hospitality there.

WE have seen that there is but one way, whereby one may become a parson or vicar: there are many ways, by which one may cease to be so. 1. By death. 2. By cession, in taking another benefice. For by statute 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13. if any one having a benefice of 8*l. per annum*, <22> or upwards, in the king's books, (according to the present valuation<sup>q</sup>,) accepts any other, the first shall be adjudged void; unless he obtains a dispensation; which no one is entitled to have, but the chaplains of the king and others therein mentioned, the brethren and sons of lords and knights, and doctors and bachelors of divinity and law, admitted by the universities of this realm. And a vacancy thus made, for want of a dispensation, is called cession. 3. By consecration; for, as was <23> mentioned before, when a clerk is promoted to a 381 bishoprick, all his other preferments are void the instant that he is consecrated. But there is a method, by the favour of the crown, of holding such livings in commendam

<sup>1</sup> Co. Litt. 300.

<sup>m</sup> These are very numerous: <19> but there are only two, which can be relied on with any degree of certainty; bishop Gibson's codex, and Dr Burn's ecclesiastical law.

<sup>n</sup> Stat. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 16. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 28.

<sup>o</sup> Stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 13.

<sup>p</sup> [Butler and Goodale's case] 6 Rep. 21.

<sup>q</sup> [Humphrys v Knight] Cro. Car. 456.

[in trust]. Commenda, or ecclesia commendata [a living held in safekeeping], is a living commended by the crown to the care of a clerk, to hold till a proper pastor is provided for it. This may be temporary, for one, two, or three years, or perpetual; being a kind of dispensation to avoid the vacancy of the living, and is called a commenda retinere [to retain a living held in safekeeping]. There is also a commenda recipere [to receive a living held in safekeeping], which is to take a benefice de novo, in the bishop's own gift, or the gift of some other patron consenting to the same; and this is the same to him as institution and induction are to another clerk<sup>r</sup>. 4. By resignation. But this is of no avail, till accepted by the ordinary; into whose hands the resignation must be made<sup>s</sup>. 5. (24) By deprivation, either by canonical censures, of which I am not to speak; or in pursuance of divers penal statutes, which declare the benefice void, for some nonfeasance or neglect, or else some malefeasance or crime. As, for simony<sup>t</sup>; for maintaining any doctrine in derogation of the king's supremacy, or of the thirty nine articles,<sup>2</sup> or of the book<sup>3</sup> of common-prayer<sup>u</sup>; for neglecting after institution (25) to read the articles in the church, or make the declarations against popery, or take the abjuration oath<sup>w</sup>; for using any other form of prayer than the liturgy of the church of England<sup>x</sup>; or for absenting himself sixty days in one year from a benefice belonging to a popish patron, to which the clerk was presented by either of the universities<sup>y</sup>; in all which and similar cases<sup>z</sup> the benefice is ipso facto void, without any formal sentence of deprivation.

VI. A CURATE is the lowest degree in the church; being in the same state that a vicar was formerly, an officiating temporary minister, (26) instead of the real incumbent. Though there are what are called perpetual curacies, where all the tithes are appropriated, and no vicarage endowed, (being for some particular reasons<sup>a</sup> exempted 382 from the statute of Hen. IV) but, instead thereof, such perpetual curate is appointed by the appropriator. With regard to the other species of curates, they are the objects of some particular statutes, which ordain, that such as serve a church during its vacancy shall be paid such stipend as the ordinary thinks reasonable, out of the profits of the vacancy; or, if that be not sufficient, by the successor within fourteen days after he takes possession<sup>b</sup>: and that, if any rector or vicar nominates a curate to the ordinary (27) to be licenced, the ordinary shall settle his stipend under his hand and seal, not exceeding 50*l.* per annum, nor less than 20*l.* and on failure of payment may sequester the profits of the benefice<sup>c</sup>.

<sup>r</sup> [Commendam case] Hob. 144.

<sup>s</sup> [Fane's case] Cro. Jac. 198.

<sup>t</sup> Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. and 12 Ann. c. 12

<sup>u</sup> Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1 & 2. and 13 Eliz. c. 12. .

<sup>w</sup> Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12. 14 Car. II. c. 4. and 1 Geo. I. st. 2. c. 6.

<sup>x</sup> Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2.

<sup>y</sup> Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 26.

<sup>z</sup> [Green's case] 6 Rep. 29, 30.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Burn. eccl. law. 427.

<sup>b</sup> Stat. 28 Hen. VIII. c. 11.

<sup>c</sup> Stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 12

<sup>2</sup> The Thirty-Nine Articles: defining doctrinal statement of the Church of England, agreed by convocation in 1571.

<sup>3</sup> The Book of Common Prayer: liturgy or service book of the Church of England, first issued in 1549, with subsequent revisions.

THUS much of the clergy, properly so called. There are also certain inferior ecclesiastical officers of whom the common law takes notice; and that, principally, to assist the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, where it is deficient in powers. On which officers I shall make a few cursory remarks.

VII. CHURCHWARDENS are the guardians or keepers of the church, and representatives of the body of the parish<sup>d</sup>. They are sometimes appointed by the minister, sometimes by the parish, sometimes by both together, as custom directs. They are taken, in favour of the church, to be for some purposes a kind of corporation at the common law; that is, they are enabled by that name to have a property in goods and chattels, and to bring actions for them, for the use and profit of the parish. Yet they may not waste the church goods, but may be removed by the parish, and then called to account by action at the common law: but there is no method of calling them to account, but by first removing them; for none can legally do it, but those who are put in their place. As to lands, or other real property, as the church, church-yard, &c, they have no sort of interest therein; but if any damage is done thereto, the parson only or vicar shall have the action. Their office also is to repair the church, and make rates and levies for that purpose: but these are recoverable only in the ecclesiastical court. They are also joined with the overseers in the care and maintenance of the poor. They are to levy<sup>e</sup> a shilling forfeiture on all such as do not repair to church on sundays and holidays, and are empowered to keep all persons orderly while there; to which end it has been held that a church-warden may justify the pulling off a man's hat, without being guilty of either an assault or trespass<sup>f</sup>. There are also a multitude of other petty parochial powers committed to their charge by divers acts of parliament<sup>g</sup>.

VIII. PARISH clerks and sextons are also regarded by the common law, as persons who have freeholds in their offices; and therefore though they may be punished, yet they cannot be deprived, by ecclesiastical censures<sup>h</sup>. The parish clerk was <28> formerly always in holy orders; and some are so to this day. He is generally appointed by the incumbent, but by custom may be chosen by the inhabitants; and if such custom appears, the court of king's bench will grant a mandamus [we command]<sup>i</sup> to the arch-deacon to swear him in, for the establishment of the custom turns it into a temporal or civil right<sup>i</sup>.

<sup>d</sup> In Sweden they have similar officers, whom they call kiorckiwariandes. Stiernhook. l. 3. c. 7.

<sup>e</sup> Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2.

<sup>f</sup> [Hall v Planner] 1 Lev. 196.

<sup>g</sup> See Lambard of churchwardens, at the end of his eirenarcha; and Dr Burn, tit. church, churchwardens, visitation.

<sup>h</sup> [Orme v Pemberton] 2 Roll. Abr. 234.

<sup>i</sup> [Orme v Pemberton] Cro. Car. 589.

<sup>4</sup> A mandatory writ: see III. 74–5.

OF THE CIVIL STATE.

THE lay part of his majesty's subjects, or such of the people as are not comprehended under the denomination of clergy, may be divided into three distinct states, the civil, the military, and the maritime.

THAT part of the nation which falls under our first and most comprehensive division, the civil state, includes all orders of men, from the highest nobleman to the meanest peasant; that are not included under either our former division, of clergy, or under one of the two latter, the military and maritime states: and it may sometimes include individuals of the other three orders; since a nobleman, a knight, a gentleman, or a peasant, may become either a divine, a soldier, or a seaman.

THE civil state consists of the nobility and the commonalty. Of the nobility, the peerage of Great Britain, or lords temporal, as forming (together with the bishops) one of the supreme branches of the legislature, I have before sufficiently spoken: we are here to consider them according to their several degrees, or titles of honour.

ALL degrees of nobility and honour are derived from the king as their fountain<sup>a</sup>: 385 and he may institute what new titles he pleases. Hence it is that ⟨1⟩ all degrees of honour are not of equal antiquity. Those now in use are dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons<sup>b</sup>.

1. ⟨2⟩ A duke, though it be with us, as a mere title of nobility, inferior in point of antiquity to many others, yet it is superior to all of them in rank; ⟨3⟩ being the first title of dignity after the royal family<sup>c</sup>. Among the Saxons the Latin name of dukes, duces, is very frequent, and signified, as among the Romans, the commanders or leaders of their armies, whom in their own language they called heretoga<sup>d</sup>; and in the laws of Henry I (as translated by Lambard)<sup>1</sup> we find them called heretochii. But after the Norman conquest, which changed the military polity of the nation, the kings themselves continuing for many generations dukes of Normandy, they would not honour ⟨5⟩ any subjects with that title, till the time of Edward III; who, claiming to be king of France, and thereby losing the ducal in the royal dignity, in the eleventh year of his reign created his son, Edward the black prince, duke of Cornwall: and many, of the royal family especially, were afterwards ⟨6⟩ raised to the same honour. However, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, A.D. 1572<sup>e</sup>, the whole order became utterly

<sup>a</sup> 4 Inst. 363.

<sup>b</sup> For the original of these titles on the continent of Europe, and their subsequent introduction into this island, see Mr Selden's titles of honour.

<sup>c</sup> Camden. Britan. tit. ordines.

<sup>d</sup> This is apparently derived from the same root ⟨4⟩ as the German hertzen, the antient appellation of dukes in that country. Seld. tit. hon. 2. 1. 22.

<sup>e</sup> Camden. Britan. tit. ordines. Spelman. Gloss. 191.

<sup>1</sup> Leges Henrici Primi (c. 1115–18): an anonymous legal treatise, the earliest surviving on English law; the antiquary William Lambarde used it as a source for his Archaionomia (1568).

extinct: but it was revived about fifty years afterwards by her successor, who was remarkably prodigal of honours, in the person of George Villiers duke of Buckingham.

2. A marquess, marchio, is the next degree of nobility. His office formerly was (for dignity and duty were never separated by our ancestors) to guard the frontiers and limits of the kingdom; which were called the marches, from the teutonic word, marche, ⟨7⟩ a limit: as, in particular, were the marches of Wales and Scotland, while they continued to be enemies countries. The persons who had command there, were called lords marchers, or marquesses; whose authority was abolished by statute 27 Hen. VIII. c. 27: though the title had long before been made a mere ensign of honour; Robert Vere, earl of Oxford, being created marquess of Dublin, by Richard II in the eighth year of his reign<sup>f</sup>.

3. AN earl is a title of nobility so antient, that its original cannot clearly be traced out. Thus much seems tolerably certain: that among the Saxons they were called ealdormen, quasi elder men, signifying the same as senior or senator among the Romans; and also schiremen, because they had each of them the civil government of a several division or shire. On the irruption of the Danes, they changed the name to eorles, which, according to Camden<sup>g</sup>, signified the same in their language. In Latin they are called comites (a title first used in the empire) from being the king's attendants; "a societate nomen sumpserunt, reges enim tales sibi associant [they received their name from being associates, because they were the king's companions]<sup>h</sup>." After the Norman conquest they were for some time called counts, or countees, from the French; but they did not long retain that name themselves, though their shires are from thence called counties to this day. ⟨9⟩ It is now become a mere title, they having nothing to do with the government of the county; which, as has been more than once observed, is now entirely devolved on the sheriff, the earl's deputy, or vice-comes. ⟨10⟩ In all writs, and commissions, and other formal instruments, the king, when he mentions any peer of the degree of an earl, always stiles him "trusty and well beloved cousin:" an appellation as antient as the reign of Henry IV; who being either by his wife, his mother, or his sisters, actually related or allied to every earl in the kingdom, artfully and constantly acknowledged that connexion in all his letters and other public acts; from whence the usage has descended to his successors, though the reason has long ago failed.

387 4. THE name of vice-comes or viscount was afterwards made use of as an arbitrary title of honour, without any shadow of office pertaining to it, by Henry the sixth; when in the eighteenth year of his reign, he created John Beaumont a peer, by the name of viscount Beaumont, which was the first instance of the kind<sup>i</sup>.

5. A baron's is the most general and universal title of nobility; for originally every one of the peers of superior rank had also a barony annexed to his other titles<sup>k</sup>. But it hath sometimes happened that, when an antient baron hath been raised to a new degree of peerage, in the course of a few generations the two titles have descended

<sup>f</sup> 2 Inst. 5.

<sup>g</sup> ⟨8⟩ [Camden, Britan, tit. ordines] Ibid.

<sup>h</sup> Bracton. l. 1. c. 8. Fleta. l. 1. c. 5.

<sup>i</sup> 2 Inst. 5.

<sup>k</sup> 2 Inst. 5, 6.

differently; one perhaps to the male descendants, the other to the heirs general; whereby the earldom or other superior title hath subsisted without a barony: and there are also modern instances where earls and viscounts have been created without annexing a barony to their other honours: so that now <11> the rule does not hold universally, that all peers are barons. The original and antiquity of baronies <12> has occasioned great enquiries among our English antiquarians. The most probable opinion seems to be, that they were the same with our present lords of manors; to which the name of court baron, (which is the lord's court, and incident to every manor) gives some countenance. It may be collected from king John's magna carta<sup>1</sup>, that originally all lords of manors, or barons, that held of the king in capite [in chief], had seats in the great council or parliament, till about the reign of that prince the conflux of them became so large and troublesome, that the king was obliged to divide them, and summon only the greater barons in person; leaving the small ones to be summoned by the sheriff, and (as it is said) to sit by representation in another house; which gave rise to the separation of the two houses of parliament<sup>m</sup>. By degrees the title came to be confined to the greater barons, or lords of parliament only; and there were no other barons among the peerage but such as were summoned by writ, in respect of the tenure of their lands or baronies, till Richard the second first made it a mere title of honor, by conferring it on divers persons by his letters patent<sup>n</sup>.

388

HAVING made this short enquiry into the original of our several degrees of nobility, I shall next consider the manner in which they may be created. The right of peerage seems to have been originally territorial; that is, annexed to lands, honors, castles, manors, and the like, the proprietors and possessors of which were (in right of those estates) allowed to be peers of the realm, and were summoned to parliament to do suit and service to their sovereign: and, when the land was alienated, the dignity passed with it as appendant. Thus the bishops still sit in the house of lords in right of succession to certain antient baronies annexed, or supposed to be annexed, to their episcopal lands<sup>o</sup>: and thus, in 11 Hen. VI, the possession of the castle of Arundel was adjudged to confer an earldom<sup>2</sup> on its possessor<sup>p</sup>. But afterwards, when alienations grew to be frequent, the dignity of peerage was confined to the lineage of the party ennobled, and instead of territorial became personal. Actual proof of a tenure by barony became no longer necessary to constitute a lord of parliament; but the record of <13> the writ of summons to them or their ancestors was admitted as a sufficient evidence of the tenure.

PEERS are now created either by writ, or by patent: for those who claim by prescription must suppose either a writ or patent made to their ancestors; though by length of time it is lost. The creation by writ, or the king's letter, is a summons to

<sup>1</sup> cap. 14.

<sup>m</sup> Gilb. hist. exch. c. 3. Seld. tit. of hon. 2. 5. 21.

<sup>n</sup> 1 Inst. 9. Seld. Jan. Angl. 2. §. 66.

<sup>o</sup> Glanv. l. 7. c. 1.

<sup>p</sup> Seld. tit. of hon. b. 2. c. 9. §. 5.

<sup>2</sup> Selden relates that John Fitz Alan, lord Mautrevers (or Maltravers), claimed to be earl of Arundel in right of his possession of the castle and lordship of Arundel. His title as earl was confirmed by parliament in 1443.

attend the house of peers, by the stile and title of that barony, which the king is pleased to confer: that by patent is a royal grant to a subject of any dignity and degree of peerage. The creation by writ is the more antient way; but a man is not ennobled thereby, <14> unless he actually takes his seat in the house of <15> lords: and therefore 389 the most usual, because the surest, way is to grant the dignity by patent, which enures to a man and his heirs according to the limitations thereof, though he never himself makes use of it<sup>q</sup>. Yet it is frequent to call up the eldest son of a peer to the house of lords by writ of summons, in the name of his father's barony: because in that case there is no danger of his children's losing the nobility in case he never takes his seat; for they will succeed to their grand-father. Creation by writ has also one advantage over that by patent: for a person created by writ holds the dignity to him and his heirs, without any words to that purport in the writ; but in letters patent there must be words to direct the inheritance, else the dignity enures only to the grantee for life<sup>r</sup>. For a man or woman may be created noble for their own lives, and the dignity not descend to their heirs at all, or descend only to some particular heirs: as where a peerage is limited to a man, and the heirs male of his body by Elizabeth his present lady, and not to such heirs by any former or future wife.

LET us next take a view of a few of the principal incidents attending the nobility, exclusive of their capacity as members of parliament, and as hereditary counsellors of the crown; both of which we have before considered. And first we must observe, that in criminal cases, a nobleman shall be tried by his peers. The great are always obnoxious to popular envy: were they to be judged by the people, they might be in danger from the prejudice of their judges; and would moreover be deprived of the privilege of the meanest subjects, that of being tried by their equals, which is secured to all the realm by magna carta, c. 29. It is said, that this does not extend to bishops; who, though they are lords of parliament, and sit there by virtue of their baronies which they hold jure ecclesiae [by right of their church], yet are not ennobled in blood, and consequently not peers with the nobility<sup>s</sup>. <16> As to peeresses, no 390 provision was made for their trial when accused of treason or felony, till after Eleanor dutchess of Gloucester, wife to the lord protector,<sup>3</sup> had been accused of treason and found guilty of witchcraft, in an ecclesiastical synod, through the intrigues of cardinal Beaufort. This very extraordinary trial gave occasion to a special statute, 20 Hen. VI. c. 9. <17> which enacts that peeresses either in their own right, or by marriage, shall be tried before the same judicature as peers of the realm. If a woman, noble in her own right, marries a commoner, she still remains noble, and shall be tried by her peers: but if she be only noble by marriage, then by a second marriage, with a commoner, she loses her dignity; for as by marriage it is gained, by marriage it is also <18> lost. Yet if a duchess dowager marries a baron, she continues a duchess still; for all the nobility are pares [equals], and therefore it is no degradation<sup>t</sup>. A peer, or <sup>q</sup> Co. Litt. 16.

<sup>r</sup> Co. Litt. 9. 16.

<sup>s</sup> 3 Inst. 30, 31.

<sup>t</sup> 2 Inst. 50.

<sup>3</sup> Humphrey, duke of Gloucester (1390–1447).

peeress (either in her own right or by marriage) cannot be arrested in civil cases<sup>u</sup>; and they have also many peculiar privileges annexed to their peerage in the course of judicial proceedings. A peer, sitting in judgment, gives not his verdict upon oath, like an ordinary jurymen, but upon his honour<sup>w</sup>: he answers also to bills in chancery upon his honour, and not upon his oath<sup>x</sup>; but, when he is examined as a witness either in civil or criminal cases, he must be sworn<sup>y</sup>: for the respect, which the law shews to the honour of a peer, does not extend so far as to overturn a settled maxim, that in judicio non creditur nisi juratis [no one is believed in court but upon his oath]<sup>z</sup>. The honour of peers is however so highly tendered by the law, that it is much more penal to spread false reports of them, and certain other great officers of the realm, than of other men: scandal against them being called by the peculiar name of scandalum magnatum; and (19) subjected to peculiar punishment by divers antient statutes<sup>a</sup>.

A PEER cannot lose his nobility, but by death or attainder; though there was an instance, in the reign of Edward the fourth, of the degradation of George Nevile duke of Bedford by act of parliament<sup>b</sup>, on account of his poverty, which rendered him unable to support his dignity<sup>c</sup>. But this is a singular instance: which serves at the same time, by having happened, to shew the power of parliament; and, by having happened but once, to shew how tender the parliament hath been, in exerting so high a power. It hath been said indeed<sup>d</sup>, that if a baron waste his estate, so that he is not able to support the degree, the king may degrade him: but it is expressly held by later authorities<sup>e</sup>, that a peer cannot be degraded but by act of parliament. 391

THE commonalty, like the nobility, are divided into several degrees; and, as the lords, though different in rank, yet all of them are peers in respect of their nobility, so the commoners, though some are greatly superior to others, yet all are in law peers, in respect of their want of nobility<sup>f</sup>.

THE first name of dignity, next beneath a peer, was antiently that of vidames,<sup>4</sup> vice domini [vice-lords], or valvasors [vavassors]<sup>g</sup>: who are mentioned by our antient lawyers<sup>h</sup> as virī magnae dignitatis [men of great dignity]; and sir Edward

<sup>u</sup> Finch. L. 355. [Anon. (1676)] 1 Ventr. 298.

<sup>w</sup> 2 Inst. 49.

<sup>x</sup> [Meers v Lord Stourton] 1 P. Wms. 146.

<sup>y</sup> [Meers v Lord Stourton] [2] Salk. 512.

<sup>z</sup> [Earl of Lincoln's Case] Cro. Car. 64.

<sup>a</sup> 3 Edw. I. c. 34. 2 Ric. II. st. 1. c. 5. 12 Ric. II. c. 11.

<sup>b</sup> 4 Inst. 355.

<sup>c</sup> The preamble to the act is remarkable: "forasmuch as oftentimes it is seen, that when any lord is called to high estate, and hath not convenient livelihood to support the same dignity, it induceth great poverty and indigence, and causeth oftentimes great extortion, embracery, and maintenance to be had; to the great trouble of all such countries where such estate shall happen to be: therefore, &c."

<sup>d</sup> (20) By lord chancellor Ellesmere. [Tarrant's case] Moor. 678.

<sup>e</sup> [Earl of Shrewsbury's case] 12 Rep. 107. [R. v Knowles] 12 Mod. 56.

<sup>f</sup> 2 Inst. 29.

<sup>g</sup> Camden. ibid. [Britan. tit. ordines.]

<sup>h</sup> Bracton. l. 1. c. 8.

<sup>4</sup> Vidames (Old French plural form): representative of a bishop.

Coke<sup>i</sup> speaks highly of them. Yet they are now quite out of use; and <21> our legal antiquarians are not so much as agreed upon their original or antient office.

<22> Now therefore the first dignity after the nobility, is a knight of the order of St. George, or of the garter; first instituted by Edward III, A.D. 1344<sup>k</sup>. <23> Next follows 392 a knight banneret; who indeed by statutes 5 Ric. II. st. 2. c. 4. and 14 Ric. II. c. 11. is ranked next after barons: <24> and that precedence was confirmed to him by order of king James I, in the tenth year of his reign<sup>l</sup>. But, in order to intitle himself to this rank, he must have been created by the king in person, in the field, under the royal banners, in time of open war<sup>m</sup>. Else he ranks after baronets; who are the next order: which title is a dignity of inheritance, created by letters patent, and usually descendible to the issue male. It was first instituted by king James the first, A.D. 1611, in order to raise a competent sum for the reduction of the province of Ulster in Ireland; for which reason all baronets have the arms of Ulster superadded to their family coat. Next follow knights of the bath; an order instituted by king Henry IV, and revived by king George the first. They are so called from the ceremony of bathing, the night before their creation. The last of these inferior nobility are knights bachelors; the most antient, though the lowest, order of knighthood amongst us: for we have an instance<sup>n</sup> of king Alfred's conferring this order on his son Athelstan. The custom of the antient Germans was to give their young men a shield and a lance in the great council: this was equivalent to the toga virilis [the gown of manhood] of the Romans: before this they were not permitted to bear arms, but were accounted as part of the father's household; after it, <25> as part of the public<sup>o</sup>. Hence some derive the usage of knighting, which has prevailed all over the western world, since its reduction by colonies from those northern heroes. Knights are called in Latin equites aurati [golden knights]; aurati, from the gilt spurs they wore; and equites, because they always served on horseback: for it is observable<sup>p</sup>, that almost all nations call their knights by some appellation derived from an horse. They are also called in our law milites [knights, soldiers], <26> because they formed a part, or indeed the whole of the royal army, in virtue of their feodal tenures; one condition of which was, that every one who held <27> a knights fee (which in Henry the second's time<sup>q</sup> amounted 393 to 20*l. per annum*) was obliged to be knighted, and attend the king in his wars, or fine for his non-compliance. The exertion of this prerogative, as an expedient to raise money in the reign of Charles the first, gave great offence; though warranted by law, and the recent example of queen Elizabeth: <29> but it was, at the restoration, together with all other military branches of the feodal law, abolished; and this kind of knighthood has, since that time, fallen into great disregard.

<sup>i</sup> 2 Inst. 667.

<sup>k</sup> Seld. tit. of hon. 2. 5. 41.

<sup>l</sup> Seld. tit. hon. 2. 11. 3.

<sup>m</sup> 4 Inst. 6.

<sup>n</sup> Will. Malmsb. lib. 2.

<sup>o</sup> Tac. de morib. Germ. 13.

<sup>p</sup> Camden. ibid. Co. Litt. 74.

<sup>q</sup> <28> Glanvil. l. 9. c. 4.

THESE, sir Edward Coke says<sup>r</sup>, are all the names of dignity in this kingdom, esquires and gentlemen being only names of worship. But before these last the heralds rank all colonels, serjeants at law, and doctors in the three <30> learned professions.

ESQUIRES and gentlemen are confounded together by sir Edward Coke, who observes<sup>s</sup>, that every esquire is a gentleman, and a gentleman is defined to be one qui arma gerit [who bears arms], who bears coat armour, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family: in like manner as civil nobility, among the Romans, was founded in the jus imaginum [the right of images], or having the image of one ancestor at least, who had borne some curule office.<sup>5</sup> It is indeed a matter somewhat unsettled, what constitutes the distinction, or who is a real esquire: for it is not an estate, however large, that confers this rank upon its owner. Camden, who was himself a herald, distinguishes them the most accurately; and he reckons up four sorts of them<sup>t</sup>: 1. The eldest sons of knights, and their eldest sons, in perpetual succession<sup>u</sup>. 2. <31> The younger sons of peers, and their eldest sons, in like perpetual succession: both which species of esquires sir H. Spelman entitles armigeri natalitii [esquires by birth]<sup>w</sup>. 3. Esquires created by the king's letters patent, or other investiture; and their eldest sons. 4. Esquires by virtue of their offices; as justices of the peace, and others who bear any office of trust under the crown. To these may be added the esquires of knights of the bath, each of whom constitutes three at his installation; and all foreign, 394 nay, Irish peers; <32> and the eldest sons of peers of Great Britain, who, though generally titular lords, are only esquires in the law, and must so be named in all legal proceedings<sup>x</sup>. As for gentlemen, says sir Thomas Smith<sup>y</sup>, they be made good cheap in this kingdom: for whosoever studieth the laws of the realm, who studieth in the universities, who professeth liberal sciences, and (to be short) who can live idly, and without manual labour, and will bear the port, charge, and countenance of a gentleman, he shall be called master, and shall be taken for a gentleman. A yeoman is he that hath free land of forty shillings by the year; <33> who is thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knights of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is probus et legalis homo [a true and lawful man]<sup>z</sup>.

THE rest of the commonalty are tradesmen, artificers, and labourers; who (as well as all others) must in pursuance of the statute 1 Hen. V. c. 5. be stiled by the name and addition of their estate, degree, <34> or mystery, in all actions and other legal proceedings.

<sup>r</sup> 2 Inst. 667.

<sup>s</sup> 2 Inst. 668.

<sup>t</sup> Ibid.

<sup>u</sup> 2 Inst 667.

<sup>w</sup> Gloss. 43.

<sup>x</sup> 3 Inst. 30. 2 Inst. 667.

<sup>y</sup> Commonw. of Eng. book I. c. 20.

<sup>z</sup> 2 Inst. 668.

<sup>5</sup> Curule: chair used by high magistrates, senators etc. in Rome.

OF THE MILITARY AND MARITIME STATES.

THE military state includes the whole of the soldiery; or, such persons as are peculiarly appointed among the rest of the people, for the safeguard and defence of the realm.

IN a land of liberty it is extremely dangerous to make a distinct order of the profession of arms. In absolute monarchies this is necessary for the safety of the prince, and arises from the main principle of their constitution, which is that of governing by fear: but in free states the profession of a soldier, taken singly and merely as a profession, is justly an object of jealousy. In these no man should take up arms, but with a view to defend his country and its laws: he puts not off the citizen when he enters the camp; but it is because he is a citizen, and would wish to continue so, that he makes himself for a while a soldier. The laws therefore and constitution of these kingdoms know no such state as that of a perpetual standing soldier, bred up to no other profession than that of war: and it was not till the reign of Henry VII, that the kings of England had so much as a guard about their persons.

396 IN the time of our Saxon ancestors, as appears from Edward the confessor's laws<sup>a</sup>, the military force of this kingdom was in the hands of the dukes or heretochs, who were constituted through every province and county in the kingdom; being taken out of the principal nobility, and such as were most remarkable for being "sapientes, fideles, et animosi [wise, faithful, and brave]." Their duty was to lead and regulate the English armies, with a very unlimited power; "prout eis visum fuerit, ad honorem coronae et utilitatem regni [as it should seem to them, for the honour of the crown and the advantage of the kingdom]." And because of this great power they were elected by the people in their full assembly, or folkmote, in the same manner as sheriffs were elected: following still that old fundamental maxim of the Saxon constitution, that where any officer was entrusted with such power, as if abused might tend to the oppression of the people, that power was delegated to him by the vote of the people themselves<sup>b</sup>. So too, among the antient Germans, the ancestors of our Saxon forefathers, they had their dukes, as well as kings, with an independent power over the military, as the kings had over the civil state. The dukes were elective, the kings hereditary: for so only can be consistently understood that passage of Tacitus<sup>c</sup>, "reges ex nobilitate, duces ex virtute sumunt [they chose their kings for their nobility, their leaders for their valour];” in constituting their kings, the family, or blood royal, was regarded, in chusing their dukes or leaders, warlike merit: just as Caesar relates of their ancestors in his time, that whenever they went to war, by way either of attack or defence, they elected leaders to command them<sup>d</sup>. This large share of power, thus conferred by the people, though intended to preserve the liberty of the subject, was perhaps unreasonably detrimental to the prerogative of the crown: and accordingly we find a very ill use made of it by Edric duke of Mercia, in the reign of king Edmond Ironside; who, by his office of duke or heretoch, was entitled to a large command in the king’s army, and by his repeated treacheries at last transferred the crown to Canute the Dane.

<sup>a</sup> [LL. Edw.] c. de heretochiis. [Of heretochs or military commanders]

<sup>b</sup> "Isti vero viri eliguntur per commune consilium, pro communi utilitate regni, per provincias et patrias universas, et per singulos comitatus, in pleno folkmote, sicut et vice-comites provinciarum et comitatuum eligi debent." [These men are chosen for the general benefit of the kingdom, by the common council, by all the provinces and countries and by each county in full assembly [folkote], as also the sheriffs of provinces and counties should be chosen.] LL. Edw. Confess. ibid. See also Bede, eccl. hist. l. 5. c. 10.

<sup>c</sup> De morib. German. 7.

397

It seems universally agreed by all historians, that king Alfred first settled a national militia in this kingdom, and by his prudent discipline made all the subjects of his dominion soldiers but we are unfortunately left in the dark as to the particulars of this his so celebrated regulation; though, from what was last observed, the dukes seem to have been left in possession of too large and independent a power: which enabled duke Harold on the death of Edward the confessor, though a stranger to the royal blood, to mount for a short space the throne of this kingdom, in prejudice of Edgar Atheling, the rightful heir.

UPON the Norman conquest the feudal law was introduced here in all its rigor, the whole of which is built on a military plan. I shall not now enter into the particulars of that constitution, which belongs more properly to the next part of our commentaries: but shall only observe, that, in consequence thereof, all the lands in the kingdom were divided into what were called knight’s fees, in number above sixty thousand; and for every knight’s fee a knight or soldier, miles, was bound to attend the king in his wars, for forty days in a year; in which space of time, before war was reduced to a science, the campaign was generally finished, and a kingdom either conquered or victorious<sup>e</sup>. By this means the king had, without any expense, an army of sixty thousand men always ready at his command. And accordingly we find one, among the laws of William the conqueror<sup>f</sup>, which in the king’s name commands and firmly enjoins the personal attendance of all knights and others; “quod habeant et teneant se semper in armis et equis, ut decet et oportet; et quod semper sint prompti et parati ad servitium suum integrum nobis explendum et peragendum, cum opus adfuerit, secundum quod debent de feodis et tenementis suis de jure nobis facere.”<sup>1</sup> This personal service in process of time degenerated into pecuniary commutations or aids, and at last the military part of the feudal system was abolished at the restoration, by statute 12 Car. II. c. 24.

398

<sup>d</sup> “Quum bellum civitas aut illatum defendit, aut infert, magistratus qui ei bello praesint deliguntur.” [When a city is engaged either in an offensive or defensive war, magistrates qualified to direct that war are chosen.] De bell. Gall. l. 6. c. 22.

<sup>e</sup> The Poles are, even at this day, so tenacious of their antient constitution, that their pospolite, or militia, cannot be compelled to serve above six weeks, or forty days, in a year. Mod. Univ. Hist. xxxiv. 12.

<sup>f</sup> c. 58. See Co. Litt. 75, 76.

<sup>1</sup> ‘that they always keep themselves equipped with arms and horses, as they should, and as is necessary: and that they be always ready to fulfil and perform for us their entire service, whenever occasion requires, as they ought by right to do, on account of their fees and tenures.’

IN the mean time we are not to imagine that the kingdom was left wholly without defence, in case of domestic insurrections, or the prospect of foreign invasions. Besides those, who by their military tenures were bound to perform ⟨1⟩ forty days service in the field, the statute of Winchester<sup>g</sup> obliged every man, according to his estate and degree, to provide a determinate quantity of such arms as were then in use, in order to keep the peace: and constables were appointed ⟨2⟩ in all hundreds to see that such arms were provided. These weapons were changed, by the statute 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 2. into others of more modern service; but both this and the former provision were repealed in the reign of James I<sup>h</sup>. While these continued in force, it was usual from time to time for our princes to issue commissions of array, and send into every county officers in whom they could confide, to muster and array (or set in military order) the inhabitants of every district: and the form of the commission of array was settled in parliament ⟨3⟩ in the 5 Hen. IV<sup>i</sup>. But at the same time it was provided<sup>k</sup>, that no man should be compelled to go out of the kingdom at any rate, nor out of his shire but in cases of urgent necessity; nor should provide soldiers unless by consent of parliament. About the reign of ⟨5⟩ king Henry the eighth, and his children, lord lieutenants began to be ⟨6⟩ introduced, as standing representatives of the crown, to keep the counties in military order; for we find them mentioned as known officers in the statute 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 3. though they had not been then long in use, for Camden speaks of them<sup>l</sup>, in the time of queen Elizabeth, as extraordinary magistrates constituted only in times of difficulty and ⟨7⟩ danger.

399 IN this state things continued, till the repeal of the statutes of armour in the reign of king James the first: after which, when king Charles the first had, during his northern expeditions, issued commissions of lieutenancy and exerted some military powers which, having been long exercised, were thought to belong to the crown, it became a question in the long parliament, how far the power of the militia did inherently reside in the king; being now unsupported by any statute, and founded only upon immemorial usage. This question, long agitated with great heat and resentment on both sides, became at length the immediate cause of the fatal rupture between the king and his parliament: the two houses not only denying this prerogative of the crown, the legality of ⟨8⟩ which right perhaps might be somewhat doubtful; but also seizing into their own hands the intire power of the militia, the illegality of which step could never be any doubt at all.

SOON after the restoration of king Charles the second,<sup>2</sup> when the military tenures were abolished, it was thought proper to ascertain the power of the militia, to recognize the sole right of the crown to govern and command them, and to put the whole into a more regular method of military subordination<sup>m</sup>: and the order, in

<sup>g</sup> 13 Edw. I. c. 6.

<sup>h</sup> Stat. 1 Jac. I. c. 25. 21 Jac. I. c. 28.

<sup>i</sup> ⟨4⟩ Rushworth. part 3. pag. 667.

<sup>k</sup> Stat. 1 Edw. III. st. 2. c. 5 & 7. 25 Edw. III. st. 5. c. 8.

<sup>l</sup> Brit. 103. Edit. 1594.

<sup>m</sup> 13 Car. II. c. 6. 14 Car. II. c. 3. 15 Car. II. c. 4.

<sup>2</sup> In 1660.

which the militia now stands by law, is principally built upon the statutes which were then enacted. It is true the two last of them are apparently repealed; but many of their provisions are re-enacted, with the addition of some new regulations, by the present militia laws: the general scheme of which is to discipline a certain number of the inhabitants of every county, chosen by lot for three years, and officered by the lord lieutenant, the deputy lieutenants, and other principal landholders, under a commission from the crown. They are not compellable to march out of their counties, unless in case of invasion (9) or actual rebellion, nor in any case compellable to march out of the kingdom. They are to be exercised at stated times: and their discipline in general is liberal and easy; but, when drawn out into actual service, they 400 are subject to the rigours of martial law, as necessary to keep them in order. This is the constitutional security, which our laws have provided for the public peace, and for protecting the realm against foreign or (10) domestic violence; and which the statutes<sup>n</sup> declare is essentially necessary to the safety and prosperity of the kingdom.

(12) WHEN the nation is engaged in a foreign war, more veteran troops and more regular discipline may perhaps be necessary, than can be expected from a mere militia. And therefore at such times particular provisions have been usually made for the raising of armies and the due regulation and discipline of the soldiery: which are to be looked upon only as temporary excrescences bred out of the distemper of the state, and not as any part of the permanent and perpetual laws of the kingdom. For martial law, which is built upon no settled principles, but is entirely arbitrary in its decisions, is, as sir Matthew Hale observes<sup>o</sup>, in truth and reality no law, but something indulged, rather than allowed as a law: the necessity of order and discipline in an army is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the king's courts are open for all persons to receive justice according to the laws of the land. (13) Wherefore Edmond earl of Kent being taken at Pontefract, 15 Edw. II. and condemned by martial law, his attainder was reversed 1 Edw. III. because it was done in time of (14) peace. And it is laid down<sup>p</sup>, that if a lieutenant, or other, that hath commission of martial authority, doth in time of peace hang or otherwise execute any man by colour of martial law, this is murder; for it is against magna carta<sup>q</sup>. (15) And the petition of right<sup>r</sup> enacts, that no soldier shall be quartered on the subject without his own consent<sup>s</sup>; and that no commission shall issue to proceed within this land according to martial law. And whereas, after the restoration, king Charles the second kept up about five thousand regular troops, 401 by his own authority, for guards and garrisons; which king James the second by degrees increased to no less than thirty thousand, all paid from his own civil list; it was made one of the articles of the bill of rights<sup>t</sup>, that the raising or keeping a standing <sup>n</sup> (11) 30 Geo. II. c. 25, &c.

<sup>o</sup> Hist. C. L. c. 2.

<sup>p</sup> 3 Inst 52.

<sup>q</sup> [9 Hen. III.] cap. 29.

<sup>r</sup> 3 Car. I. See also stat. 31 Car. II. c. 1.

<sup>s</sup> Thus, in Poland, no soldier can be quartered upon the gentry, the only free-men in that republic. Mod. Univ. Hist. xxxiv. 23.

<sup>t</sup> Stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2.

army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of parliament, is against law.

BUT, as the fashion of keeping (16) standing armies has universally prevailed over all Europe of late years (though some of its potentates, being unable themselves to maintain them, are obliged to have recourse to richer powers, and receive subsidiary pensions for that purpose) it has also for many years past been annually judged necessary by our legislature, for the safety of the kingdom, the defence of the possessions of the crown of Great Britain, and the preservation of the balance of power in Europe, to maintain even in time of peace a standing body of troops, under the command of the crown; who are however ipso facto [by the fact itself] disbanded at the expiration of every year, unless continued by (17) parliament.

To prevent the executive power from being able to oppress, says baron Montesquieu<sup>u</sup>, it is requisite that the armies with which it is entrusted should consist of the people, and have the same spirit with the people; as was the case at Rome, till Marius new-modelled the legions by enlisting the rabble of Italy, and laid the foundation of all the military tyranny that ensued. Nothing then, according to these principles, ought to be more guarded against in a free state, than making the military power, when such a one is necessary to be kept on foot, a body too distinct from the people. (18) Like ours therefore, it should wholly be composed of natural subjects; it ought only to be enlisted for a short and limited time; the soldiers also should live intermixed with the people; no separate camp, no barracks, no inland fortresses should be allowed. And perhaps it might be still better, if, by dismissing a stated 402 number and enlisting others at every renewal of their term, a circulation could be kept up between the army and the people, and the citizen and the soldier be more intimately connected together.

To keep this body of troops in order, an annual act of parliament likewise passes, “to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters.” This regulates the manner in which they are to be dispersed among the several inn-keepers and victuallers throughout the kingdom; and establishes a law martial for their government. By this, among other things, it is enacted, that if any (19) officer and soldier shall excite, or join any mutiny, or, knowing of it, shall not give notice to the commanding officer; or shall desert, or list in any other regiment, or sleep upon his post, or leave it before he is relieved, or hold correspondence with a rebel or enemy, or strike or use violence to his superior officer, or shall disobey his lawful commands; such offender shall suffer such punishment as a court martial shall inflict, though it extend to death itself.

HOWEVER expedient the most strict regulations may be in time of actual war, yet, in times of profound peace, a little relaxation of military rigour would not, one should hope, be productive of much inconvenience. And, upon this principle, though by our standing laws<sup>w</sup> (still remaining in force, though not attended to) desertion in time of war is made felony, without benefit of clergy, and the offence is triable by a jury and (20) before the judges of the common law; yet, by our militia laws beforementioned, a much lighter punishment is inflicted for desertion in time of peace. So, by the Roman law also, desertion in time of war was punished with death, but more mildly in time of tranquillity<sup>x</sup>. But our mutiny act makes no such distinction: for any of (21) the faults therein mentioned are, equally at all times, punishable with death itself, if a court martial shall think proper. This discretionary power of the court martial is indeed to be guided by the directions of the crown; which, with regard to military offences, has almost an absolute legislative (22) power. “His 403 majesty, says the act, may form articles of war, and constitute courts martial, with power to try any crime by such articles, and (23) inflict such penalties as the articles direct.” A vast and most important trust! an unlimited power to create crimes, and annex to them any punishments, not extending to life or limb! These are indeed forbidden to be inflicted, except for crimes declared to be so punishable by this act; which crimes we have just enumerated, and, among which, we may observe that any disobedience to lawful commands is one. Perhaps in some future revision of this act, which is in many respects hastily penned, it may be thought worthy the wisdom of parliament to ascertain the limits of military subjection, and to enact express articles of war for the government of the army, as is done for the government of the navy: especially as, by our present constitution, the nobility and gentry of the kingdom, who serve their country as militia officers, are annually subjected to the same arbitrary rule, during their time of exercise.

<sup>u</sup> Sp. L. II. 6.

<sup>w</sup> Stat. 18 Hen. VI. c. 19. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 2.

ONE of the greatest advantages of our English law is, that not only the crimes themselves which it punishes, but also the penalties which it inflicts, are ascertained and notorious: nothing is left to arbitrary discretion: the king by his judges dispenses what the law has previously ordained; but is not himself the legislator. How much therefore is it to be regretted that a set of men, whose bravery has so often preserved the liberties of their country, should be reduced to a state of servitude in the midst of a nation of freemen! for sir Edward Coke will inform us<sup>y</sup>, that it is one of the genuine marks of servitude, to have the law, which is our rule of action, either concealed or precarious: “misera est servitus, ubi jus est vagum aut incognitum [wretched is the slavery where the law is uncertain or unknown].” Nor is this state of servitude quite consistent with the maxims of sound policy observed by other free nations. For, the greater the general liberty is which any state enjoys, the more cautious has it usually been (24) of introducing slavery in any particular order or profession. These men, as baron Montesquieu observes<sup>z</sup>, seeing the liberty which others possess, and 404 which they themselves are excluded from, are apt (like eunuchs in the eastern seraglios) to live in a state of perpetual envy and hatred towards the rest of the community; and indulge a malignant pleasure in contributing to destroy those privileges, to which they can never be admitted. Hence have many free states, by departing from this rule, been endangered by the revolt of their slaves: while, in absolute and despotic governments (25) where there no real liberty exists, and consequently no invidious comparisons can be formed, such incidents are extremely rare. Two precautions are therefore advised to be observed in all prudent and free governments; 1. To prevent the introduction of slavery at all: or, 2. If it be already introduced, not to intrust those slaves with arms; who will then find themselves an overmatch for the freemen. Much less ought the soldiery to be an exception to the people in general, and the only state of servitude in the nation.

<sup>x</sup> Ff. 49. 16. 5.

<sup>y</sup> 4 Inst. 332.

<sup>z</sup> Sp. L. 15. 12.

BUT as soldiers, by this annual act, are thus put in a worse condition than any other subjects, so, by the humanity of our standing laws, they are in some cases put in a much better. By statute 43 Eliz. c. 3. a weekly allowance is to be raised in every county for the relief of soldiers that are sick, hurt, and maimed: not forgetting the royal hospital at Chelsea for such as are worn out in their duty. Officers and soldiers, that have been in the king's service, are by several statutes, enacted at the close of several wars, at liberty to use any trade or occupation they are fit for, in any town in the kingdom (except the two universities) notwithstanding any statute, custom, or charter to the contrary. And soldiers in actual military service (26) may make their wills, and dispose of their goods, wages, and other personal chattels, without those forms, solemnities, and expenses, which the law requires in other cases<sup>a</sup>. Our law does not indeed extend this privilege so far as the civil law; which carried it to an extreme that borders upon the ridiculous. For if a soldier, in the article of death, wrote any thing in bloody letters on his shield, or in the dust of the field with his sword, it was a very good military testament<sup>b</sup>. And thus much for the military state, as acknowledged by the laws of England.

THE maritime state is nearly related to the former; though much more agreeable to the principles of our free constitution. The royal navy of England hath ever been its greatest defence and ornament: it is its antient and natural strength; the floating bulwark of the island; an army, from which, however strong and powerful, no danger can ever be apprehended to liberty: and accordingly it has been assiduously cultivated, even from the earliest ages. To so much perfection was our naval reputation arrived in the twelfth century, that the code of maritime laws, which are called the laws of Oleron,<sup>3</sup> and are received by all nations in Europe as the ground and substruction of all their marine constitutions, was confessedly compiled by our king Richard the first, at the isle of Oleron on the coast of France, then part of the possessions of the crown of England<sup>c</sup>. And yet, so vastly inferior were our ancestors in this point to the present age, that even in the maritime reign of queen Elizabeth, sir Edward Coke<sup>d</sup> thinks it matter of boast, that the royal navy of England then consisted of three and thirty ships. The present condition of our marine is in great measure owing to the salutary provisions of the statutes, called the navigation-acts; whereby the constant increase of English shipping and seamen was not only encouraged, but rendered unavoidably necessary. By the statute 5 Ric. II. st. 1. c. 3. in order to augment the navy

<sup>a</sup> Stat. 29 Car. II. c. 3. 5 W. & M. c. 21. §. 6.

<sup>b</sup> Si milites quid in clypeo literis sanguine suo rutilantibus adnotaverint, aut in pulvere inscripserint gladio suo, ipso tempore quo, in praelio, vitæ sortem derelinquunt, hujusmodi voluntatem stabilem esse oportet. Cod. 6. 21. 15.

<sup>c</sup> 4 Inst. 144. Coutumes de la mer. 2.

<sup>d</sup> 4 Inst. 50.

<sup>3</sup> See also I. 188.

of England, then greatly diminished, it was ordained, that none of the king's liege people should ship any merchandize out of or into the realm but only in ships of the king's ligeance, on pain of forfeiture. In the next year, by statute 6 Ric. II. c. 8. this wise provision was enervated, by only obliging the merchants to give English ships, (if able and sufficient) the preference. But the most beneficial statute for the trade and commerce of these kingdoms is that navigation-act, the rudiments of which 406 were first framed in 1650<sup>e</sup>, with a narrow partial view: being intended <27> to mortify the sugar islands, which were disaffected to the parliament and still held out for Charles II, by stopping the gainful trade which they then carried on with the Dutch<sup>f</sup>; and at the same time to clip the wings of those our opulent and aspiring neighbours. This prohibited all ships of foreign nations from trading with any English plantations without licence from the council of state. In 1651<sup>g</sup> the prohibition was extended also to the mother country; and no goods were suffered to be imported into England, or any of its dependencies, in any other than English bottoms; or in the ships of that European nation of which the merchandize imported was the genuine growth or manufacture. At the restoration, the former provisions were continued, by statute 12 Car. II. c. 18. with this very material improvement, that the master and three fourths of the mariners shall also be English subjects.

MANY laws have been made for the supply of the royal navy with seamen; for their regulation when on board; and to confer privileges and rewards on them during and after their service.

1. FIRST, for their supply. The power of <28> impressing men for the sea service by the king's commission, has been a matter of some dispute, and submitted to with great reluctance; though it hath very clearly and learnedly been shewn, by sir Michael Foster<sup>h</sup> that the practise of impressing, and granting powers to the admiralty for that purpose, is of very antient date, and hath been uniformly continued by a regular series of precedents to the present time: whence he concludes it to be part of the common law<sup>i</sup>. The difficulty arises from hence, that no statute has expressly declared this power to be in the crown, though many of them very strongly imply it. The statute 2 Ric. II. c. 4. speaks of mariners being arrested and retained for the king's service, as of a thing well known, and practised without dispute; and provides a remedy against their running away. By a later statute<sup>k</sup>, if any waterman, who uses the river Thames, shall hide himself during the execution of any commission of pressing for the king's service, he is liable to heavy penalties. By another<sup>l</sup>, no fisherman shall be taken by the queen's commission to serve as a mariner; but the commission shall be first brought to two justices of the peace, inhabiting near the sea coast where the mariners are to be taken, to the intent that the justices may chuse out and return such a number of ablebodied men, as in the commission are contained, to serve her 407

<sup>e</sup> Scobell 132.

<sup>f</sup> Mod. Un. Hist. xli. 289.

<sup>g</sup> Scobell. 176.

<sup>h</sup> [R. v Broadfoot] Rep. 154.

<sup>i</sup> <29> See also [R. v King] Comb. 245.

<sup>k</sup> Stat. 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 16.

<sup>l</sup> Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5.

majesty. And, by others<sup>m</sup>, especial protections are allowed to seamen in particular circumstances, to prevent them from being <31> impressed. All which do most evidently imply a power of impressing to reside somewhere; and, if any where, it must from the spirit of our constitution, as well as from the frequent mention of the king's commission, reside in the crown alone.

BUT, besides this method of impressing, (which is only defensible from public necessity, to which all private considerations must give way) there are other ways that tend to the increase of seamen, and manning the royal navy. Parishes may bind out poor boys apprentices to masters of merchantmen, who shall be protected from impressing for the first three years; and if they are impressed afterwards, the masters shall be allowed their wages<sup>n</sup>: great advantages in point of wages are given to volunteer seamen in order to induce them to enter into his majesty's service<sup>o</sup>: and every foreign seaman, who during a war shall serve two years in any man of war, merchantman, or privateer, is naturalized ipso facto<sup>p</sup>. About the middle of king William's reign, a scheme was set on foot<sup>q</sup> for a register of seamen to the number of thirty thousand, for a constant and regular supply of the king's fleet; with great privileges to the registered men, and, on the other hand, heavy penalties in case of their non-appearance when called for: but this registry, <33> being judged to be rather a badge of slavery, was abolished by statute 9 Ann. c. 21

2. THE method of ordering seamen in the royal fleet, and keeping up a regular discipline there, is directed by certain express rules, articles and orders, first enacted by the authority of parliament soon after the restoration<sup>r</sup>; but since new-modelled and altered, after the peace of Aix la Chapelle<sup>s</sup>, to remedy some defects which were of fatal consequence in conducting the preceding war.<sup>4</sup> In these articles of the navy almost every possible offence is set down, and the punishment thereof annexed: in which respect the seamen have much the advantage over their brethren in the land service; whose articles of war are not enacted by parliament, but framed from time to time at the pleasure of the crown. Yet from whence this distinction arose, and why the executive power, which is limited so properly with regard to the navy, should be so extensive with regard to the army, it is hard to assign a reason: unless it proceeded from the perpetual establishment of the navy, which rendered a permanent law for their regulation expedient; and the temporary duration of the army, which subsisted only from year to year; and might therefore with less danger be subjected to discretionary government. But, whatever was apprehended at the first formation of the mutiny act, the regular renewal of our standing force at the entrance of every year has made this distinction idle. For, if from experience past we may judge of future

<sup>m</sup> <30> Stat. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 21. 2 Ann. c. 6. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 19. 13 Geo. II. c. 17. &c.

<sup>n</sup> Stat. 2 Ann. c. 6.

<sup>o</sup> <32> Stat. 1 Geo. II. st. 2. c. 14.

<sup>p</sup> Stat. 13 Geo. II. c. 3.

<sup>q</sup> Stat. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 21.

<sup>r</sup> Stat. 13 Car. II. st. 1. c. 9.

<sup>s</sup> <34> Stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 23.

<sup>4</sup> The Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle between France, Great Britain, and the United Provinces ended the War of the Austrian Succession (1740–8).

events, the army is now lastingly ingrafted into the British constitution; with this singularly fortunate circumstance, that any branch of the legislature may annually put an end to its legal existence, by refusing to concur in its continuance.

3. WITH regard to the privileges conferred on sailors, they are pretty much the same with those conferred on soldiers; with regard to relief, when maimed, (35) or wounded, or superannuate, either by county rates, or the royal hospital at Greenwich; with regard also to the exercise of trades, and the power of (36) making informal testaments: and, farther<sup>t</sup>, no seaman aboard his majesty's ships can be arrested for any debt, unless the same be sworn to amount to at least twenty pounds; though, by the annual mutiny acts, a soldier may be arrested for a debt which extends to half that value, but not to a less amount. 409 <sup>t</sup> (37) Stat. 1 Geo. II. st. 2. c. 14.

OF MASTER AND SERVANT.

HAVING thus commented on the rights and duties of persons, as standing in the public relations of magistrates and people; the method I have marked out now leads me to consider their rights and duties in private oeconomical relations.

THE three great relations in private life are, 1. That of master and servant; which is founded in convenience, whereby a man is directed to call in the assistance of others, where his own skill and labour will not be sufficient to answer the cares incumbent upon him. 2. That of husband and wife; which is founded in nature, but modified by civil society: the one directing man to continue and multiply his species, the other prescribing the manner in which that natural impulse must be confined and regulated. 3. That of parent and child, which is consequential to that of marriage, being its principal end and design: and it is by virtue of this relation that infants are protected, maintained, and educated. But, since the parents, on whom this care is primarily incumbent, may be (1) snatched away by death or otherwise, before they have completed their duty, the law has therefore provided a fourth relation; 4. That of guardian and ward, which is a kind of artificial parentage, in order to supply the deficiency, whenever it happens, of the natural. Of all these relations in their order.

411 IN discussing the relation of master and servant, I shall, first, consider the several sorts of servants, and how this relation is created and destroyed: secondly, the effects of this relation with regard to the parties themselves: and, lastly, its effect with regard to other persons.

I. As to the several sorts of servants: I have formerly observed<sup>a</sup> that pure and proper slavery does not, nay cannot, subsist in England; such I mean, whereby an absolute and unlimited power is given to the master over the life and fortune of the slave. And indeed it is repugnant to reason, and the principles of natural law, that such a state should subsist any where. The three origins of the right of slavery assigned by Justinian<sup>b</sup>, are all of them built upon false (2) foundations. As, first, slavery is held to arise “jure gentium [by the law of nations],” from a state of captivity in war; whence slaves are called mancipia, quasi manu capti [slaves, as taken by hand]. The conqueror, say the civilians, had a right to the life of his captive; and, having spared that, has a right to deal with him as he pleases. But it is an untrue position, when taken generally, that, by the law of nature or nations, a man may kill his enemy: he has only a right to kill him, in particular cases; in cases of absolute necessity, for self-defence; and it is plain this absolute necessity did not subsist, since the victor did not actually kill him, but made him prisoner. War is itself justifiable only on principles of self-preservation; and therefore it gives no other right over prisoners, but merely to disable them from doing harm to us, by confining their persons: much less can it give a right to kill, torture, abuse, plunder, or even to enslave, an enemy, when the war is over. Since therefore the right of making slaves by captivity, depends on a supposed right of slaughter, that foundation failing, the consequence drawn from it must fail likewise. But, secondly, it is said that slavery may begin “jure civili [by the civil law];” when one man sells himself to another. This, if only meant of contracts to serve or work for another, is very just: but when applied to strict slavery, in the sense of the laws of old Rome or modern Barbary, is also impossible. Every sale implies a price, a quid pro quo [something for something], an equivalent given to the seller in lieu of what he transfers to the buyer: but what equivalent can be given for life, and liberty, both of which (in absolute slavery) are held to be in the master’s disposal? His property also, the very price he seems to receive, devolves ipso facto to his master, the instant he becomes his slave. In this case therefore the buyer gives nothing, and the seller receives nothing: of what validity then can a sale be, which destroys the very principles upon which all sales are founded? Lastly, we are told, that besides these two ways by which slaves “fiunt [are made],” or are acquired, they may also be hereditary: “servi nascuntur [they are born slaves],” the children of acquired slaves are, jure naturae [by the law of nature], by a negative kind of birthright, slaves also. But this being built on the two former rights must fall together with them. If neither captivity, nor the sale of oneself, can by the law of nature and reason, reduce the parent to slavery, ⟨3⟩ much less can it reduce the offspring. 412

<sup>a</sup> pag. 123 [I. 86].

<sup>b</sup> Servi aut fiunt, aut nascuntur: fiunt jure gentium, aut jure civili: nascuntur ex ancillis nostris. [Slaves are either born or made so; they are made slaves by the law of nations, or by the civil law, they are born slaves, as children of our female slaves.] Inst. 1. 3. 4.

UPON these principles the law of England abhors, and will not endure the existence of, slavery within this nation: so that when an attempt was made to introduce it, by statute 1 Edw. VI. c. 3. which ordained, that all idle vagabonds should be made slaves, and fed upon bread, water, or small drink, and refuse meat; should wear a ring of iron round their necks, arms, or legs; and should be compelled by beating, chaining, or otherwise, to perform the work assigned them, were it never so vile; the spirit of the nation could not brook this condition, even in the most abandoned rogues; and therefore this statute was repealed in two years afterwards<sup>c</sup>. And now it is laid down<sup>d</sup>, that a slave or negro, the instant he lands in England, becomes a freeman; that is, the law will protect him in ⟨4⟩ the enjoyment of his person, his liberty, and his property. Yet, with regard to any right which the master ⟨5⟩ may have acquired, by contract or the like, to the perpetual service of John or Thomas, this will remain exactly in the same state as before: for this is no more than the same state of subjection for life, which every apprentice submits to for the space of seven years, or sometimes for a longer term. Hence too it follows, that the infamous and unchristian practice of withholding baptism from negro servants, lest they should thereby gain their liberty, is totally without foundation, as well as without excuse. The law of England acts upon general and extensive principles: it gives liberty, rightly understood, that is, protection, to a jew, a turk, or a heathen, as well as to those who profess the true religion of Christ; and it will not dissolve ⟨6⟩ a civil contract, either express or implied, between 413 master and servant, on account of the alteration of faith in ⟨7⟩ either of the contracting parties: but the slave is entitled to ⟨8⟩ the same liberty in England before, as after, baptism; and, whatever service the heathen negro ⟨9⟩ owed to his English master, the same is he bound to render ⟨10⟩ when a christian.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>c</sup> Stat. 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 16.

<sup>d</sup> [Smith v Brown and Cooper] [2] Salk. 666.

1. THE first sort of servants therefore, acknowledged by the laws of England, are menial servants; so called from being intra moenia [within the walls], or domestics. The contract between them and their masters arises upon the hiring. If the hiring be general without any particular time limited, the law construes it to be a hiring for a year<sup>e</sup>; upon a principle of natural equity, that the servant shall serve, and the master maintain him, throughout all the revolutions of the respective seasons; as well when there is work to be done, as when there is not<sup>f</sup>: but the contract may be made for any larger or smaller term. All single men between twelve years old and sixty, and married ones under thirty years of age, and all single women between twelve and forty, not having any visible livelihood, are compellable by two justices to go out to ⟨11⟩ service, for the promotion of honest industry: and no master can put away his servant, or servant ⟨12⟩ leave his master, either before or at the end of his term, without a quarter's warning; unless upon reasonable cause to be allowed by a justice of the peace<sup>g</sup>: but they may part by consent, or make a special bargain.

414 2. ANOTHER species of servants are called apprentices (from apprendre, to learn) and are usually bound for a term of years, by deed indented or indentures, to serve their masters, ⟨13⟩ and be maintained and instructed by them: for which purpose our statute law<sup>h</sup> has made minors capable of binding themselves. This is usually done to persons of trade, in order to learn their art and mystery; and sometimes very large sums are given with them, as a premium for such their instruction: but it may be done to husbandmen, nay to gentlemen, and others. And<sup>i</sup> children of poor persons may be apprenticed out by the overseers, with consent of two justices, ⟨15⟩ till twenty four years of age, to such persons as are thought fitting; who are also compellable to take them: and it is held, that gentlemen of fortune, and clergymen, are equally liable with others ⟨16⟩ to such compulsion<sup>k</sup>. Apprentices to trades may be discharged on reasonable cause, either at request of themselves or masters, at the quarter sessions, or by one justice, with appeal to the sessions<sup>l</sup>: who may, by the equity of the statute, if they think it reasonable, direct restitution of a ratable share of the money ⟨17⟩ given with the apprentice<sup>m</sup>. And parish apprentices may be discharged in the same manner, by two justices<sup>n</sup>.

<sup>e</sup> Co. Litt. 42.

<sup>f</sup> F. N. B. 168.

<sup>g</sup> Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

<sup>h</sup> Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

<sup>i</sup> Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. 43 Eliz. c. 2. 1 Jac. I. c. 25. 7 Jac. I. c. 3. 8 & 9 W & M. [sic] III. c. 30. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 6. 4 Ann. c. 19. (14) 17 Geo. II. c. 5.

<sup>k</sup> [Minchamp's case] [2] Salk. 57. 491.

<sup>l</sup> Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

<sup>m</sup> [Dillan's case] [1] Salk. 67.

<sup>n</sup> Stat. 20 Geo. II. c. 19.

<sup>1</sup> See also the earlier discussion of slavery at I. 86.

3. A THIRD species of servants are labourers, who are only hired by the day or the week, and do not live intra moenia, as part of the family; concerning whom (18) the statute so often cited<sup>o</sup> has made many very good regulations; 1. Directing that all persons who have no visible effects may be compelled to work: 2. Defining how long they must continue at work in summer and winter: 3. Punishing such as leave or desert their work: 4. Empowering the justices at sessions, or the sheriff of the county, to settle their wages: and 5. Inflicting penalties on such as either give, or exact, more wages than are so settled.

4. THERE is yet a fourth species of servants, if they may be so called, being rather 415 in a superior, a ministerial, capacity; such as stewards, factors, and bailiffs: whom however the law considers as servants pro tempore [for a time], with regard to such of their acts, as affect their master's or employer's property. Which leads me to consider,

II. THE manner in which this relation, of service, affects either the master or servant. And, first, by hiring and service for a year, or apprenticeship under indentures, a person gains a settlement in that parish wherein he last served forty days<sup>p</sup>. In the next place persons (20) serving as apprentices to any trade have an exclusive right to exercise that trade in any part of England<sup>q</sup>. This law, with regard to the exclusive part of it, has by turns been looked upon as a hard law, or as a beneficial one, according to the prevailing humour of the times: which has occasioned a great variety of resolutions in the courts of law concerning it; and attempts have been frequently made for its repeal, though hitherto without success. At common law every man might use what trade he pleased; but this statute restrains that liberty to such as have served as apprentices: the adversaries to which provision say, that all restrictions (which tend to introduce monopolies) are pernicious to trade; the advocates for it alledge, that unskilfulness in trades is equally detrimental to the public, as monopolies. This reason indeed only extends to such trades, in the exercise whereof skill is required: but another of their arguments goes much farther; viz. that apprenticeships are useful to the commonwealth, by employing of youth, and learning them to be early industrious; but that no one would be induced to undergo a seven years servitude, if others, though equally skilful, were allowed the same advantages without having undergone the same discipline: and in this there seems to be much reason. However, the resolutions of the courts have in general rather confined than extended the restriction. No trades are held to be within the statute, but such as were in being at 416 the making of it<sup>r</sup>: for trading in a country village, apprenticeships are not requisite<sup>s</sup>: and following the trade (22) seven years is sufficient without any binding; for the statute only says, the person must serve as an apprentice, and does not require an actual apprenticeship to have existed<sup>t</sup>.

<sup>o</sup> (19) Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

<sup>p</sup> See page 352 [I. 233].

<sup>q</sup> (21) Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

<sup>r</sup> [R. v Paris Slaughter] [1] Lord Raym. 514.

<sup>s</sup> [Anon. (1669)] 1 Ventr. 51. [R. v French] 2 Keb. 583.

<sup>t</sup> (23) [R. v Franklyn] [2] Lord Raym. 1179.

A MASTER may by law <24> correct his apprentice or servant for negligence or other misbehaviour, so it be done with moderation<sup>u</sup>: though, <26> if the master's wife beats him, it is good cause of departure<sup>w</sup>. But if any servant, workman, or labourer assaults his master or dame, he shall suffer one year's imprisonment, and other open corporal punishment, not extending to life or limb<sup>x</sup>.

By service all servants and labourers, except apprentices, become entitled to wages: according to their agreement, if menial servants; or according to the appointment of the sheriff or sessions, if labourers or servants in husbandry: for the statutes for regulation of wages extend to such servants only<sup>y</sup>; it being impossible for any magistrate to be a judge of the employment of menial servants, or of course to assess their wages.

III. LET US, lastly, see how strangers may be affected by this relation of master and servant: or how a master may behave towards others on behalf of his servant; and what a servant may do on behalf of his master.

AND, first, the master may maintain, that is, abet and assist his servant in any action at law against a stranger: whereas, in general, it is an offence against public justice to encourage suits and animosities, by helping to bear the expense of them, and is called in law maintenance<sup>z</sup>. A master also may bring an action against any man 417 for beating or maiming his servant; but in such case he must assign, as a special reason for so doing, his own damage by the loss of his service; and this loss must be proved upon the trial<sup>a</sup>. A master likewise may justify an assault in defence of his servant, and a servant in defence of his master<sup>b</sup>: the master, because he has an interest in his servant, not to be deprived of his service; the servant, because it is part of his duty, for which he receives his wages, to stand by and defend his master<sup>c</sup>. Also if any person do hire or retain my servant, being in my service, for which the servant departeth from me and goeth to serve the other, I may have an action for damages against both the new master and the servant, or either of them: but if the new master did not know that he is my servant, no action lies; unless he afterwards refuse to restore him upon information and demand<sup>d</sup>. The reason and foundation upon which all this doctrine is built, seem to be the property that every man has in the service of his domestics; acquired by the contract of hiring, and purchased by giving them wages.

As for those things which a servant may do on behalf of his master, they seem all to proceed upon this principle, that the master is answerable for the act of his servant, if done by his command, either expressly given, or implied: nam qui facit per alium,

<sup>u</sup> 1 Hawk. P. C. 130. <25> Lamb. Eiren. 127.

<sup>w</sup> <27> F. N. B. 168.

<sup>x</sup> Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

<sup>y</sup> [De Vall's case] 2 [T.] Jones. 47.

<sup>z</sup> [YB 19 Edw. IV f. 3, pl. 9 & 9 Hen. VI f. 64, pl. 17] 2 Roll. Abr. 115.

<sup>a</sup> [Robert Mary's case] 9 Rep. 113.

<sup>b</sup> [YB 11 Hen. VI, f. 16, pl. 8, 14 Hen. VI, f. 24, pl. 72 and 19 Hen. VI, f. 31, pl. 60] 2 Roll. Abr. 546.

<sup>c</sup> In like manner, by the laws of king Alfred, c. 38. a servant was allowed to fight for his master, a parent for his child, and a husband or father for the chastity of his wife or daughter.

<sup>d</sup> F. N. B. 167, 168.

facit per se [for he who does a thing by means of another, does it himself]<sup>e</sup>. Therefore, if the servant commit a trespass by the command or encouragement of his master, the master shall be (28) guilty of it: not that the servant is excused, for he is only to obey his master in matters that are honest and lawful. If an innkeeper's servants rob his guests, the master is bound to restitution<sup>f</sup>: for as there is a confidence reposed in him, that he will take care to provide honest servants, his negligence is a kind of implied consent to the robbery; nam, qui non prohibet, cum prohibere possit, jubet [for he who does not forbid a crime while he may, sanctions it]. So likewise if the drawer at a tavern sells a man bad wine, whereby his health is injured, he may bring an action against the master<sup>g</sup>: for, although the master did not expressly order the servant to sell it to that person in particular, yet his permitting him to draw and sell it at all is impliedly a general command. 418

IN the same manner, whatever a servant is permitted to do in the usual course of his business, is equivalent to a general command. If I pay money to a banker's servant, the banker is answerable for it: if I pay it to a clergyman's or a physician's servant, whose usual business it is not to receive money for his master, and he imbezzles it, I must pay it over again. If a steward lets a lease of a farm, without the owner's knowledge, the owner must stand to the bargain; for this is the steward's business. A wife, a friend, a relation, that use to transact business for a man, are quoad hoc [as to this] his servants; and the principal must answer for their conduct: for the law implies, that they act under a general command; and, without such a doctrine as this, no mutual intercourse between man and man could subsist with any tolerable convenience. If I usually deal with a tradesman by myself, or constantly pay him ready money, I am not answerable for what my servant takes up upon trust; for here is no implied order to the tradesman to trust my servant: but if I usually send him upon trust, or sometimes on trust, and sometimes with ready money, I am answerable for all he takes up; for the tradesman cannot possibly distinguish when he comes by my order, and when upon his own authority<sup>h</sup>.

IF a servant, lastly, by his negligence does any damage to a stranger, the master shall answer for his neglect: if a smith's servant lames a horse while he is shoeing him, an action lies against the master, and not against the servant. But in these cases the damage must be done, while he is actually employed in the master's service; otherwise the servant shall answer for his own misbehaviour. Upon this principle, by the common law<sup>i</sup>, if a servant kept his master's fire negligently, so that his neighbour's house was burned down thereby, an action lay against the master; because this negligence happened in his service: otherwise, if the servant, going along the street with a torch, by negligence sets fire to a house; for there he is not in his master's immediate service, and must himself answer the damage personally. But now the common law is, in the former case, altered by statute 6 Ann. c. 3. which ordains that 419

<sup>e</sup> 4 Inst. 109.

<sup>f</sup> Noy's Max. c. 43.

<sup>g</sup> [YB 9 Hen. VI f. 53, pl. 37] 1 Roll. Abr. 95.

<sup>h</sup> Dr & Stud. d. 2. c. 42. Noy's max. c. 44.

<sup>i</sup> Noy's max. c. 44.

no action shall be maintained against any, in whose house or chamber any fire shall accidentally begin; for their own loss is sufficient punishment for their own or their servants' carelessness. But if such fire happens through negligence of any servant (whose loss is commonly very little) such servant shall forfeit 100*l.*, to be distributed among the sufferers; and, in default of payment, shall be committed to some workhouse and there kept to hard labour for eighteen months<sup>k</sup>. A master is, lastly, chargeable if any of his family layeth or casteth any thing out of his house into the street or common highway, to the damage of any individual, or the common nuisance of his majesty's liege people<sup>l</sup>; for the master hath the superintendence and charge of all his houshold. And this also agrees with the civil law<sup>m</sup>; which holds, that the pater familias [father of the family], in this and similar cases, "ob alterius culpam tenetur, sive servi, sive liberi [is held accountable for the fault of another, whether of his servant, or his child]."

420 We may observe, that in all the cases here put, the master may be frequently a loser by the trust reposed in his servant, but never can be a gainer: he may frequently be answerable for his servant's misbehaviour, but never can shelter himself from punishment by laying the blame on his agent. The reason of this is still uniform and the same; that the wrong done by the servant is looked upon in law as the wrong of the master himself; and it is a standing maxim, that no man shall be allowed to make any advantage of his own wrong.

<sup>k</sup> Upon a similar principle, by the law of the twelve tables at Rome, a person by whose negligence any fire began was bound to pay double to the sufferers; or if he was not able to pay, was to suffer a corporal punishment.

<sup>l</sup> Noy's max. c. 44.

<sup>m</sup> Ef. 9. 3. 1. Inst. 4. 5. 1.

OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

THE second private relation of persons is that of marriage, which includes ⟨1⟩ the reciprocal duties of husband and wife; or, as most of our elder law books call them, of baron and feme. In the consideration of which I shall in the first place enquire, how marriages may be contracted or made; shall next point out the manner in which they may be dissolved; and shall, lastly, take a view of the legal effects and consequence of marriage.

I. OUR law considers marriage in no other light than as a civil contract. The holiness of the matrimonial state is left entirely to the ecclesiastical law: the temporal courts not having jurisdiction to consider ⟨2⟩ unlawful marriages as a sin, but merely as a civil inconvenience. The punishment therefore, or annulling, of incestuous or other unscriptural marriages, is the province of the spiritual courts; which act pro salute animae [for the health of the soul]<sup>a</sup>. And, taking it in this civil light, the law treats it as it does all other contracts; allowing it to be good and valid in all cases, where the parties at the time of making it were, in the first place, willing to contract; secondly, able to contract; and, lastly, actually did contract, in the proper forms and solemnities required by law.

FIRST, they must be willing to contract. “Consensus, non concubitus, facit nuptias 422 [consent, not cohabitation, makes the marriage],” is the maxim of the civil law in this case<sup>b</sup>: and it is adopted by the common lawyers<sup>c</sup>, who indeed have borrowed (especially in antient times) almost all their notions of the legitimacy of marriage from the canon and civil laws.

SECONDLY, they must be able to contract. In general, all persons are able to contract themselves in marriage, unless they labour under some particular disabilities, and incapacities. What those are, it will here be our business to enquire.

Now these disabilities are of two sorts: first, such as are canonical, and therefore sufficient by the ecclesiastical laws to avoid the marriage in the spiritual court; but these in our law only make the marriage voidable, and not ipso facto void, until sentence of nullity be obtained. Of this nature are pre-contract; consanguinity, or relation by blood; and affinity, or relation by marriage; and some particular corporal infirmities. And these canonical disabilities are either grounded upon the express words of the divine law, or are consequences plainly deducible from thence: it therefore being sinful in the persons, who labour under them, to attempt to contract matrimony together, they are properly the object of the ecclesiastical magistrate’s coercion; in order to separate the offenders, and inflict penance for the offence, pro

<sup>a</sup> [Pride v Earls of Bath and Montague] [1] Salk. 121.

<sup>b</sup> Ef. 50. 17. 30.

<sup>c</sup> Co. Litt. 33.

423 salute animarum [for the health of their souls]. But such marriages not being void ab initio [from the beginning], but voidable only by sentence of separation, they are esteemed valid to all civil purposes, unless such separation is actually made during the life of the parties. For, after the death of either of them, the courts of common law will not suffer the spiritual court to declare such marriages to have been void; because such declaration cannot now tend to the reformation of the parties<sup>d</sup>. And therefore when a man had married his first wife's sister, and after her death the bishop's court was proceeding to annul the marriage and bastardize the issue, the court of king's bench granted a prohibition quoad hoc [as to this]; but permitted them to proceed to punish the husband for incest<sup>e</sup>. These canonical disabilities, being entirely the province of the ecclesiastical courts, our books are perfectly silent concerning them. But there are a few statutes, which serve as directories to those courts, of which it will be proper to take notice. By statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 38. it is declared, that all persons may lawfully marry, but such as are prohibited by God's law; and that all marriages contracted by lawful persons in the face of the church, and consummate with bodily knowlege, and fruit of children, shall be indissoluble. And (because in the times of popery a great variety of degrees of kindred were made impediments to marriage, which impediments might however be bought off for money) it is declared by the same statute, that nothing (God's law except) shall impeach any marriage, but within the Levitical degrees; the farthest of which is that between uncle and niece<sup>f</sup>. By the same statute all impediments, arising from pre-contracts to other persons, were abolished and declared of none effect, unless they had been consummated with bodily knowlege: in which case the canon law holds such contract to be a marriage de facto [in fact]. But this branch of the statute was repealed by statute 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 23. How far the act of 26 Geo. II. c. 33. (which prohibits all suits in ecclesiastical courts to compel a marriage, in consequence of any contract) may collaterally extend to revive this clause of Henry VIII's statute, and abolish the impediment of pre-contract, I leave to be considered by the canonists.

424 THE other sort of disabilities are those which are created, or at least enforced, by the municipal laws. And, though some of them may be grounded on natural law, yet they are regarded by the laws of the land, not so much in the light of any moral offence, as on account of the civil inconveniences they draw after them. These civil disabilities make the contract void ab initio, and not merely voidable: not that they dissolve a contract already formed, but they render the parties incapable of forming any contract at all: they do not put asunder those who are joined together, but they previously hinder the junction. And, if any persons under these legal incapacities come together, it is a meretricious, and not a matrimonial, union.

1. THE first of these legal disabilities is a prior marriage, or having another husband or wife living; in which case, besides the penalties consequent upon it as a felony, the second marriage is to all intents and purposes void<sup>g</sup>: polygamy being condemned both by the law of the new testament, and the policy of all prudent states, especially in these northern climates. And Justinian, even in the climate of modern Turkey, is express<sup>h</sup>, that “duas uxores eodem tempore habere non licet [it is not lawful to have two wives at one time].”

<sup>d</sup> Ibid.

<sup>e</sup> [Harris v Hicks] [2] Salk. 548.

<sup>f</sup> [Butler v Gastrill] Gilb. Rep. 158.

2. THE next legal disability is want of age. This is sufficient to avoid all other contracts, on account of the imbecillity of judgment in the parties contracting; a fortiori therefore it ought to avoid this, the most important contract of any. Therefore if a boy under fourteen, or a girl under twelve years of age, marries, this marriage is only inchoate and imperfect; and, when either of them comes to the age of consent aforesaid, they may disagree and declare the marriage void, without any divorce or sentence in the spiritual court. This is founded on the civil law<sup>i</sup>. But the canon law pays a greater regard to the constitution, than the age, of the parties<sup>k</sup>: for if they are habiles ad matrimonium [fit for marriage], it is a good marriage, whatever their age may be. And in our law it is so far a marriage, that, if at the age of consent they agree to continue together, they need not be married again<sup>l</sup>. If the husband be of years of discretion, and the wife under twelve, when she comes to years of discretion he may disagree as well as she may: for in contracts the obligation must be mutual; both must be bound, or neither: and so it is, vice versa, when the wife is of years of discretion, and the husband under<sup>m</sup>.

3. ANOTHER incapacity arises from want of consent of parents or guardians. By the common law, if the parties themselves were of the age of consent, there wanted 425 no other concurrence to make the marriage valid: and this was agreeable to the canon law. But, by several statutes<sup>n</sup>, penalties of 100*l.* are laid on every clergyman who marries a couple either without publication of banns (which may give notice to parents or guardians) or without a licence, to obtain which the consent of parents or guardians must be sworn to. And by the statute 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 8. whosoever marries any woman child under the age of sixteen years, without consent of parents or guardians, shall be subject to fine, or five years imprisonment: and her estate during the husband's life shall go to and be enjoyed by the next heir. The civil law indeed required the consent of the parent or tutor at all ages; unless the children were emancipated, or out of the parents power<sup>o</sup>: and, if such consent from the father was wanting, the marriage was null, and the children illegitimate<sup>p</sup>; but the consent of the mother or guardians, if unreasonably withheld, might be redressed and supplied by the judge, or the president of the province<sup>q</sup>: and if the father was non compos

<sup>g</sup> Bro. Abr. tit. Bastardy. pl. 8.

<sup>h</sup> Inst. 1. 10. 6.

<sup>i</sup> Leon. Constit. 109.

<sup>k</sup> Decretal. l. 4. tit. 2. qu. 3.

<sup>l</sup> Co. Litt. 79.

<sup>m</sup> Ibid.

<sup>n</sup> 6 & 7 W. & M. c. 6. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 35. 10 Ann. c. 19.

<sup>o</sup> Ff. 23. 2. 2, & 18.

<sup>p</sup> Ff. 1. 5. 11.

<sup>q</sup> Cod. 5. 4. 1, & 20.

[of unsound mind], a similar remedy was given<sup>r</sup>. These provisions are adopted and imitated by the French and Hollanders, with this difference: that in France the sons cannot marry without consent of parents till thirty years of age, nor the daughters till twenty five<sup>s</sup>; and in Holland, the sons are at their own disposal at twenty five, and the daughters at twenty<sup>t</sup>. Thus hath stood, and thus at present stands, the law in other neighbouring countries. And it has been lately thought proper to introduce somewhat of the same policy into our laws, by statute 26 Geo. II. c. 33. whereby it is enacted, that all marriages celebrated by licence (for banns suppose notice) where either of the parties is under twenty one, (not being a widow or widower, who are supposed emancipated) without the consent of the father, or, if he be not living, of the mother or guardians, shall be absolutely void. A like provision is made as in the civil law, where the mother or guardian is non compos, beyond sea, or unreasonably froward, to dispense with such consent at the discretion of the lord chancellor: but no provision is made, in case the father should labour under any mental or other incapacity. Much may be, and much has been, said both for and against this innovation upon our antient laws and constitution. On the one hand, it prevents the clandestine marriages of minors, which are often a terrible inconvenience to those private families wherein they happen. On the other hand, (3) restraints upon marriage, especially among the lower class, are evidently detrimental to the public, by hindering the encrease of people; and to religion and morality, by encouraging licentiousness and debauchery among the single of both sexes; and thereby destroying one end of society and government, which is, concubitu prohibere vago [to forbid a promiscuous intercourse]. And of this last inconvenience the Roman laws were so sensible, that at the same time that they forbad marriage without the consent of parents or guardians, they were less rigorous upon that very account with regard to other restraints: for, if a parent did not provide a husband for his daughter, by the time she arrived at the age of twenty five, and she afterwards made a slip in her conduct, he was not allowed to disinherit her upon that account; “quia non sua culpa, sed parentum, id commississe cognoscitur [because she was considered to have committed it, not through her own fault, but that of her parents]<sup>u</sup>.”

4. A FOURTH incapacity is want of reason; without a competent share of which, as no other, so neither can the matrimonial contract, be (4) valid. Idiots and lunatics, by the old common law, might have married<sup>w</sup>; wherein it was manifestly defective. The civil law judged much more sensibly, when it made such deprivations of reason a previous impediment; though not a cause of divorce, if they happened after marriage<sup>x</sup>. (5) This defect in our laws is however remedied with regard to lunatics, and persons under frenzies, by the express words of the statute 15 Geo. II. c. 30. and idiots, if not within the letter of the statute, are at least within the reason of it.

<sup>r</sup> Inst. 1. 10. 1.

<sup>s</sup> Domat, of dowries §. 2. Montesq. Sp. L. 23. 7.

<sup>t</sup> Vinnius in Inst. l. 1. t. 10.

<sup>u</sup> Nov. 115. §. 11.

<sup>w</sup> [Stile v West] 1 Roll. Abr. 357.

<sup>x</sup> Ef. 23. tit. 1. l. 8. & tit. 2. l. 16.

LASTLY, the parties must not only be willing, and able, to contract, but actually must contract themselves in due form of law, to make it a good civil marriage. Any contract made, per verba de praesenti [by words of present consent], or in words of the present tense, and in case of cohabitation per verba de futuro [by words of future consent] also, between persons able to contract, was before the late act deemed a valid marriage to many purposes; and the parties might be compelled in the spiritual courts to celebrate it in facie ecclesiae [in the face of the church]. But these verbal contracts are now of no force, to compel a future marriage<sup>y</sup>. Neither is any marriage at present valid, that is not celebrated in some parish church or public chapel, unless by dispensation from the arch-bishop of Canterbury. It must also be preceded by publication of banns, or by licence from the spiritual judge. Many other formalities are likewise prescribed by the act; the neglect of which, though penal, does not invalidate the marriage. It is held to be also essential to a marriage, that it be performed by a person in orders<sup>z</sup>; though the intervention of a priest to solemnize this contract is merely juris positivi [of positive law], and not juris naturalis aut divini [of natural or divine law]: it being said that pope Innocent the third was the first who ordained the celebration of marriage in the church<sup>a</sup>; before which it was totally a civil contract.<sup>1</sup> And, in the times of the grand rebellion, all marriages were performed by the justices of the peace; and these marriages were declared valid, without any fresh solemnization, by statute 12 Car. II. c. 33. But, as the law now stands, we may upon the whole collect, that no marriage by the temporal law is ipso facto void, that is celebrated by a person in orders,—in a parish church or public chapel (or elsewhere, by special dispensation)—in pursuance of banns or a licence,—between single persons,—consenting,—of sound mind,—and of the age of twenty one years;—or of the age of fourteen in males and twelve in females, with consent of parents or guardians, or without it, in case of widowhood. And no marriage is voidable by the ecclesiastical law, after the death of either of the parties; nor during their lives, unless for the canonical impediments of pre-contract, if that indeed still exists; of consanguinity; and of affinity, or corporal imbecillity, subsisting previous to the marriage. 428

II. I AM next to consider the manner in which marriages may be dissolved; and this is either by death, or divorce. There are two kinds of divorce, the one total, the other partial; the one a vinculo matrimonii [from the bond of matrimony], the other merely a mensa et thoro [from bed and board]. The total divorce, a vinculo matrimonii, must be for some of the canonical causes of impediment before-mentioned; and those, existing before the marriage, as is always the case in consanguinity; not supervenient, or arising afterwards, as may be the case in affinity or corporal imbecillity. For in cases of total divorce, the marriage is declared null, as having been absolutely unlawful ab initio; and the parties are therefore separated pro salute animarum: for which reason, as was before observed, no divorce can be obtained, but

<sup>y</sup> Stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 33.

<sup>z</sup> [Haydon v Gould] [2] Salk. 119.

<sup>a</sup> [Bunting's case] Moor 170.

<sup>1</sup> The Fourth Lateran Council (1215) mandated publication of banns and church marriage.

during the life of the parties. The issue of such marriage, as is thus entirely dissolved, are bastards<sup>b</sup>.

429 DIVORCE a mensa et thoro is when the marriage is just and lawful ab initio, and therefore the law is tender of dissolving it; but, for some supervenient cause, it becomes improper or impossible for the parties to live together: as in the case of intolerable ill temper, or adultery, in either of the parties. For the canon law, which the common law follows in this case, deems so highly and with such mysterious reverence of the nuptial tie, that it will not allow it to be unloosed for any cause whatsoever, that arises after the union is made. And this is said to be built on the divine revealed law; though that expressly assigns incontinence as a cause, and indeed the only cause, why a man may put away his wife and marry another<sup>c</sup>. The civil law, which is partly of pagan original, allows many causes of absolute divorce; and some of them pretty severe ones, (as if a wife goes to the theatre or the public games, without the knowlege and consent of the husband<sup>d</sup>) but among them adultery is the principal, and with reason named the first<sup>e</sup>. But with us in England adultery is only a cause of separation from bed and board<sup>f</sup>: for which the best reason that can be given, is, that if divorces were allowed to depend upon a matter within the power of either the parties, they would probably be extremely frequent; as was the case when divorces were allowed for canonical disabilities, on the mere confession of the parties<sup>g</sup>, which is now prohibited by the canons<sup>h</sup>. However, divorces a vinculo matrimonii, for adultery, have of late years been frequently granted by act of parliament.

IN case of divorce a mensa et thoro, the law allows alimony to the wife; which is that allowance, which is made to a woman for her support out of the husband's estate; being settled at the discretion of the ecclesiastical judge, on consideration of all the circumstances of the case. This is sometimes called her estovers [necessaries]; for which, if he refuses payment, there is (besides the ordinary process of excommunication) a writ at common law de estoveriis habendis [of recovering necessaries], in order to recover it<sup>i</sup>. It is generally proportioned to the rank and quality of the parties. But in case of elopement, and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony<sup>k</sup>.

III. HAVING thus shewn how marriages may be made, or dissolved, I come now, lastly, to speak of the legal consequences of such making, or dissolution.

430 BY marriage, the husband and wife are one person in law<sup>l</sup>: that is, the very being or legal existence of the woman is suspended during the marriage, or at least is incorporated and consolidated into that of the husband: under whose wing, protection, and cover,

<sup>b</sup> Co. Litt. 235.

<sup>c</sup> Matt. xix. 9.

<sup>d</sup> Nov. 117.

<sup>e</sup> Cod. 5. 17. 8.

<sup>f</sup> [Rye v Fuliame] Moor 683.

<sup>g</sup> [Case 194. Anon. (1682)] 2 Mod. 314.

<sup>h</sup> Can. 1603. c. 105.

<sup>i</sup> [Manby and Richards v Scott] 1 Lev. 6.

<sup>k</sup> Cowel. tit. Alimony.

<sup>l</sup> Co. Litt. 112.

she performs every thing; and is therefore called in our law-french<sup>2</sup> (6) a feme-covert [woman covered, married woman]; is said to be covert-baron [covered by a husband], or under the protection and influence of her husband, her baron, or lord; and her condition during her marriage is called her coverture. Upon this principle, of an union of person in husband and wife, depend almost all the legal rights, duties, and disabilities, that either of them acquire by the marriage. I speak not at present of the rights of property, but of such as are merely personal. For this reason, a man cannot grant any thing to his wife, or enter into covenant with her<sup>m</sup>: for the grant would be to suppose her separate existence; and to covenant with her, would be only to covenant with himself: and therefore it is also generally true, that all compacts made between husband and wife, when single, are voided by the intermarriage<sup>n</sup>. A woman indeed may be attorney for her husband<sup>o</sup>; for that implies no separation from, but is rather a representation of, her lord. And a husband may also bequeath any thing to his wife by will; for that cannot take effect till the coverture is determined by his death<sup>p</sup>. The husband is bound to provide his wife with necessities by law, as much as himself; and if she contracts debts for them, he is obliged to pay them<sup>q</sup>: but for any thing besides necessities, he is not chargeable<sup>r</sup>. Also if a wife elopes, and lives with another man, the husband is not chargeable even for necessities<sup>s</sup>; at least if the person, who furnishes them, is sufficiently apprized of her elopement<sup>t</sup>. If the wife be indebted before marriage, the husband is bound afterwards to pay the debt; for he has adopted her and her circumstances together<sup>u</sup>. If the wife be injured in her person or her property, she can bring no action for redress without her husband's concurrence, and in his name, as well as her own<sup>w</sup>: neither can she be sued, without making the husband a defendant<sup>x</sup>. There is indeed one case where the wife shall sue and be sued as a feme sole [single woman], viz. where the husband has abjured the realm, or is banished<sup>y</sup>: for then he is dead in law; and, the husband being thus disabled to sue for or defend the wife, it would be most unreasonable if she had no remedy, or could make no defence at all. In criminal prosecutions, it is true, the wife may be indicted and punished separately<sup>z</sup>; for the union is only a civil union. But, in trials of any sort,

431

<sup>m</sup> Ibid.

<sup>n</sup> [Dennis v Payn] Cro. Car. 551.

<sup>o</sup> F. N. B. 27.

<sup>p</sup> Co. Litt. 112.

<sup>q</sup> [Etherington v Parrot] [1] Salk. 118.

<sup>r</sup> [Manby v Scott] 1 Sid. 120.

<sup>s</sup> [Morris v Martin] Stra. 647.

<sup>t</sup> [Manby and Richards v Scott] 1 Lev. 5.

<sup>u</sup> [Obrian v Ram] 3 Mod. 186.

<sup>w</sup> [Russel v Corne] [1] Salk. 119. 1 Roll. Abr. 347.

<sup>x</sup> (7) [Marsh's case] 1 Leon. 312. This was also the practice in the courts of Athens. (Pott. Antiqu. b. 1. c. 21.)

<sup>y</sup> Co. Litt. 133.

<sup>z</sup> 1 Hawk. P. C. 3.

<sup>2</sup> Law-French: a specialist form of Anglo-Norman French and English, used originally for pleading in English secular courts and law books from 1275, with declining frequency from the fifteenth century, to its final statutory abolition (along with law-Latin) in 1731. See further III. 210–11 and J. H. Baker, A Manual of Law French (Aldershot, 1990).

they are not allowed to be evidence for, or against, each other<sup>a</sup>: partly because it is impossible their testimony should be indifferent; but principally because of the union of person: and therefore, if they were admitted to be witnesses for each other, they would contradict one maxim of law, “nemo in propria causa testis esse debet [no one should be a witness in his own cause];” and if against each other, they would contradict another maxim, “nemo tenetur seipsum accusare [no one is bound to accuse himself].” But where the offence is directly against the person of the wife, this rule has been usually dispensed with<sup>b</sup>: and therefore, by statute 3 Hen. VII. c. 2. in case a woman be forcibly taken away, and married, she may be a witness against such her husband, in order to convict him of felony. For in this case she can with no propriety be reckoned his wife; because a main ingredient, her consent, was wanting to the contract: and also there is another maxim of law, that no man shall take advantage of his own wrong; which the ravisher here would do, if by forcibly marrying a woman, he could prevent her from being a witness, who is perhaps the only witness, to that very fact.

432 IN the civil law the husband and wife are considered as two distinct persons; and may have separate estates, contracts, debts, and injuries<sup>c</sup>: and therefore, in our ecclesiastical courts, a woman may sue and be sued without her husband<sup>d</sup>.

BUT, though our law in general considers man and wife as one person, yet there are some instances in which she is separately considered; as inferior to him, and acting by his compulsion. And therefore all deeds executed, and acts done, by her, during her coverture, (8) are void, or at least voidable; except it be a fine, or the like matter of record, in which case she must be solely and secretly examined, to learn if her act be voluntary<sup>e</sup>. She cannot by will devise lands to her husband, unless under special circumstances; for at the time of making it she is supposed to be under his coercion<sup>f</sup>. And in some felonies, and other inferior crimes, committed by her, through constraint of her husband, the law excuses her<sup>g</sup>: but this extends not to treason or murder.

THE husband also (by the old law) might give his wife moderate correction<sup>h</sup>. For, as he is to answer for her misbehaviour, the law thought it reasonable to intrust him with this power of restraining her, by domestic chastisement, in the same moderation that a man is allowed (9) to correct his servants or children; for whom the master or parent is also liable in some cases to answer. But this power of correction was confined within reasonable bounds<sup>i</sup>; and the husband was (10) prohibited to use any violence to his wife, aliter quam ad virum, ex causa regiminis et castigationis uxoris suae, licite et rationabiliter pertinet [otherwise than lawfully and reasonably belongs to the husband for the due government and correction of his wife]<sup>k</sup>. The civil law gave

<sup>a</sup> 2 Haw. P. C. 431.

<sup>b</sup> State trials, vol. 1. Lord Audley's case. [R. v Azire] [1] Stra. 633.

<sup>c</sup> Cod. 4. 12. 1.

<sup>d</sup> 2 Roll. Abr. 298.

<sup>e</sup> Litt. §. 669, 670.

<sup>f</sup> Co. Litt. 112.

<sup>g</sup> 1 Haw. P. C. 2.

<sup>h</sup> Ibid. 130.

<sup>i</sup> [Seymour's case] Moor. 874.

<sup>k</sup> F. N. B. 80.

the husband the same, or a larger, authority over his wife; allowing him, for some misdemeanors, flagellis et fustibus acriter verberare uxorem [to beat his wife severely with scourges and sticks]; for others, only modicam castigationem adhibere [to use moderate chastisement]<sup>l</sup>. But, with us, in the politer reign of Charles the second, this power of correction began to be doubted<sup>m</sup>: and a wife may now have security of the peace against her husband<sup>n</sup>; or, in return, a husband against his wife<sup>o</sup>. Yet the lower rank of people, who were always fond of the old common law, still claim and exert their antient privilege: and the courts of law will still permit a husband to restrain a wife of her liberty, in case of any gross misbehaviour<sup>p</sup>. 433

THESE are the chief legal effects of marriage during the coverture; upon which we may observe, that even the disabilities, which the wife lies under, are for the most part intended for her protection and benefit. So great a favourite is the female sex of the laws of England.

<sup>l</sup> Nov. 117. c. 14. & Van Leeuwen in loc.

<sup>m</sup> [Manby v Scott] 1 Sid. 113. [Lord Leigh's case] 3 Keb. 433.

<sup>n</sup> [R. v Lord Lee] 2 Lev. 128.

<sup>o</sup> [Sims's case] [2] Stra. 1207.

<sup>p</sup> [R. v Lister] [1] Stra. 478. [Child v Hardyman] [2 Stra.] 875.

OF PARENT AND CHILD.

THE next, and the most universal relation in nature, is immediately derived from the preceding, being that between parent and child.

CHILDREN are of two sorts; legitimate, and spurious, or bastards: each of which we shall consider in their order; and first of legitimate children.

I. A LEGITIMATE child is he that is born in lawful wedlock, or within a competent time afterwards. “Pater est quem nuptiae demonstrant [marriage shows who is the father],” is the rule of the civil law<sup>a</sup>; and this holds with the civilians, whether the nuptials happen before, or after, the birth of the child. With us in England the rule is narrowed, for the nuptials must be precedent to the birth; of which more will be said when we come to consider the case of bastardy. At present let us enquire into, 1. The legal duties of parents to their legitimate children. 2. Their power over them. 3. The duties of such children to their parents.

1. AND, first, the duties of parents to legitimate children: which principally consist in three particulars; their maintenance, their protection, and their education.

435 THE duty of parents to provide for the maintenance of their children is a principle of natural law; an obligation, says Puffendorf<sup>b</sup>, laid on them not only by nature herself, but by their own proper act, in bringing them into the world: for they would be in the highest manner injurious to their issue, if they only ⟨1⟩ gave the children life, that they might afterwards see them perish. By begetting them therefore they have entered into a voluntary obligation, to endeavour, as far as in them lies, that the life which they have bestowed shall be supported and preserved. And thus the children will have a perfect right of receiving maintenance from their parents. And the president Montesquieu<sup>c</sup> has a very just observation upon this head: that the establishment of marriage in all civilized states is built on this natural obligation of the father to provide for his children; for that ascertains and makes known the person who is bound to fulfil this obligation: whereas, in promiscuous and illicit conjunctions, the father is unknown, and the mother finds a thousand obstacles in her way;—shame, remorse, the constraint of her sex, and the rigor of laws;—that stifle her inclinations to perform this duty: and besides, she generally wants ability.

THE municipal laws of all well-regulated states have taken care to enforce this duty: though providence has done it more effectually than any laws, by implanting in the breast of every parent that natural ζοργή [sic, στοργή, Gk: ‘love of parents and children’], or insuperable degree of affection, which not even the deformity of person or mind, not even the wickedness, ingratitude, and rebellion of children, can totally suppress or extinguish.

<sup>a</sup> Ff. 2. 4. 5.

<sup>b</sup> L. of N. l. 4. c. 11.

<sup>c</sup> Sp. L. l. 23. c. 2.

THE civil law<sup>d</sup> obliges the parent to provide maintenance for his child; and, if he refuses, “judex de ea re cognoscet [the judge shall take cognizance of that matter].” Nay, it carries this matter so far, that it will not suffer a parent at his death totally to disinherit his child, without expressly giving his reason for so doing; and there are fourteen such reasons reckoned up<sup>e</sup>, which may justify such disinherison. If the parent alleged no reason, or a bad, or false one, the child might set the will aside, tanquam testamentum inofficiosum, a testament contrary to the natural duty of the parent. And it is remarkable under what colour the children were to move for relief in such a case: by suggesting that the parent had lost the use of his reason, when he made the inofficious testament. And this, as Puffendorf observes<sup>f</sup>, was not to bring into dispute the testator’s power of disinheriting his own offspring; but to examine the motives upon which he did it: and, if they were found defective in reason, then to set them aside. But perhaps this is going rather too far: every man has, or ought to have, by the laws of society, a power over his own property: and, as Grotius very well distinguishes<sup>g</sup>, natural right obliges to give a necessary maintenance to children; but what is more than that, they have no other right to, than as it is given them by the favour of their parents, or the positive constitutions of the municipal law. 436

LET us next see what provision our own laws have made for this natural duty. It is a principle of law<sup>h</sup>, that there is an obligation on every man to provide for those descended from his loins: and the manner, in which this obligation shall be performed, is thus pointed out<sup>i</sup>. The father, and mother, grandfather, and grandmother of poor impotent persons shall maintain them at their own charges, if of sufficient ability, according as the quarter sessions shall direct: and<sup>k</sup> if a parent runs away, and leaves his children, the churchwardens and overseers of the parish shall seise his rents, goods, and chattels, and dispose of them towards their relief. By the interpretations which the courts of law have made upon these statutes, if a mother or grandmother marries again, and was before such second marriage of sufficient ability to keep the child, the husband shall be charged to maintain it<sup>l</sup>: for this being a debt of hers, when single, shall like others extend to charge the husband. But at her death, the relation being dissolved, the husband is under no farther obligation. 437

No person is bound to provide a maintenance for his issue, unless where the children are impotent and unable to work, either through infancy, disease, or accident; and then is only obliged to find them with necessaries, the penalty on refusal being no more than 20s. a month. For the policy of our laws, which are ever watchful to promote industry, did not mean to compel a father to maintain his idle and lazy children in ease and indolence: but thought it unjust to oblige the parent, against his will, to provide them with superfluities, and other indulgences of fortune;

<sup>d</sup> Ff. 25. 3. 5.

<sup>e</sup> Nov. 115.

<sup>f</sup> l. 4. c. 11. §. 7.

<sup>g</sup> De j. b. & p. l. 2. c. 7. n. 3.

<sup>h</sup> [Carter v Crawley] Raym. 500.

<sup>i</sup> Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2.

<sup>k</sup> Stat. 5 Geo. I. c. 8.

<sup>l</sup> [Custodes v Jinkes] Styles. 283. [City of Westminster v Gerrard] 2 Bulstr. 346.

imagining they might trust to the impulse of nature, if the children were deserving of such favours. Yet, as nothing is so apt to stifle the calls of nature as religious bigotry, it is enacted<sup>m</sup>, that if any popish parent shall refuse to allow his protestant child a fitting maintenance, with a view to compel him to change his religion, the lord chancellor shall by order of court constrain him to do what is just and reasonable. But this did not extend to persons of another religion, of no less bitterness and bigotry than the popish: and therefore in the very next year we find an instance of a Jew of immense riches, whose only daughter having embraced christianity, he turned her out of doors; and on her application for relief, it was held she was intitled to none<sup>n</sup>. But this gave occasion<sup>o</sup> to another statute<sup>p</sup>, which ordains, that if jewish parents refuse to allow their protestant children a fitting maintenance, suitable to the fortune of the parent, the lord chancellor on complaint may make such order therein as he shall see proper.

438 OUR law has made no provision to prevent the disinheriting of children by will; leaving every man's property in his own disposal, upon a principle of liberty in this, as well as every other, action: though perhaps it had not been amiss, if the parent had been bound to leave them at the least a necessary ⟨2⟩ subsistence. By the custom of London indeed, (which was formerly universal throughout the kingdom) the children of freemen are entitled to one third of their father's effects, to be equally divided among them; of which he cannot deprive them. And, among persons of any rank or fortune, a competence is generally provided for younger children, and the bulk of the estate settled upon the eldest, by the marriage-articles. Heirs also, and children, are favourites of our courts of justice, and cannot be disinherited by any dubious or ambiguous words; there being required the utmost certainty of the testator's intentions to take away the right of an heir<sup>q</sup>.

FROM the duty of maintenance we may easily pass to that of protection; which is also a natural duty, but rather permitted than enjoined by any municipal laws: nature, in this respect, working so strongly as to need rather a check than a spur. A parent may, by our laws, maintain and uphold his children in their lawsuits, without being guilty of the legal crime of maintaining quarrels<sup>r</sup>. A parent may also justify an assault and battery in defence of the persons of his children<sup>s</sup>: nay, where a man's son was beaten by another boy, and the father went near a mile to find him, and there revenged his son's quarrel by beating the other boy, of which beating he ⟨3⟩ afterwards died; it was not held to be murder, but manslaughter merely<sup>t</sup>. Such indulgence does the law shew to the frailty of human nature, and the workings of parental affection.

THE last duty of parents to their children is that of giving them an education suitable to their station in life: a duty pointed out by reason, and of far the greatest

<sup>m</sup> Stat. 11 & 12 W. III. c. 4.

<sup>n</sup> [St Andrew Undershaft Parish v Mendez de Breta] [1] Lord Raym. 699.

<sup>o</sup> Com. Journ. 18 Feb. 12 Mar. 1701.

<sup>p</sup> 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 30.

<sup>q</sup> [Bowman v Milbanke] 1 Lev. 130.

<sup>r</sup> 2 Inst. 564.

<sup>s</sup> 1 Hawk. P. C. 131.

<sup>t</sup> [John Royley's case] Cro. Jac. 296. 1 Hawk. P. C. 83.

importance of any. For, as Puffendorf very well observes<sup>u</sup>, it is not easy to imagine or allow, that a parent has conferred any considerable benefit upon his child, by bringing him into the world; if he afterwards entirely neglects his culture and education, and suffers him to grow up like a mere beast, to lead a life useless to others, and shameful to himself. Yet the municipal laws of most countries seem to be defective in this point, by not constraining the parent to bestow a proper education upon his children. Perhaps they thought it punishment enough to leave the parent, who neglects the instruction of his family, to labour under those griefs and inconveniences, which his family, so uninstructed, will be sure to bring upon him. Our laws, though their defects in this particular cannot be denied, have in one instance made a wise provision for breeding up the rising generation; since the poor and laborious part of the community, when past the age of nurture, are taken out of the hands of their parents, by the statutes for apprenticing poor children<sup>w</sup>; and are placed out by the public in such a manner, as may render their abilities, in their several stations, of the greatest advantage to the commonwealth. The rich indeed are left at their own option, whether they will breed up their children to be ornaments or disgraces to their family. Yet in one case, that of religion, they are under peculiar restrictions: for<sup>x</sup> it is provided, that if any person sends any child under his government beyond the seas, either to prevent good education in England, or in order to enter into or reside in any popish college, or to be instructed, persuaded, or strengthened in the popish religion; in such case, besides the disabilities incurred by the child so sent, the parent or person sending shall forfeit 100*l.* which<sup>y</sup> shall go to the sole use and benefit of him that shall discover the offence. And<sup>z</sup> if any parent, or other, shall send or convey any person beyond sea, to enter into, or be resident in, or trained up in, any priory, abbey, nunnery, popish university, college, or school, or house of jesuits, or priests, or in any private popish family, in order to be instructed, persuaded, or confirmed in the popish religion; or shall contribute any thing towards their maintenance when abroad by any pretext whatever, the person both sending and sent shall be disabled 440 to sue in law or equity, or to be executor or administrator to any person, or to enjoy any legacy or deed of gift, or to bear any office in the realm, and shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and likewise all his real estate for life.

2. THE power of parents over their children is derived from the former consideration, their duty; this authority being given them, partly to enable the parent more effectually to perform his duty, and partly as a recompence for his care and trouble in the faithful discharge of it. And upon this score the municipal laws of some nations have given a much larger authority to the parents, than others. The antient Roman laws gave the father a power of life and death over his children; upon this principle, that he who gave had also the power of taking away<sup>a</sup>. But the rigor of

<sup>u</sup> L. of N. b. 6. c. 2. §. 12.

<sup>w</sup> See page 414 [I. 274].

<sup>x</sup> Stat. 1 Jac. I. c. 4. & 3 Jac. I. c. 5.

<sup>y</sup> Stat. 11 & 12 W. III. c. 4.

<sup>z</sup> Stat. 3 Car. I. c. 2.

<sup>a</sup> Ef. 28. 2. 11. Cod. 8. 47. 10.

these laws was softened by subsequent constitutions; so that<sup>b</sup> we find a father banished by the emperor Hadrian for killing his son, though he had committed a very heinous crime, upon this maxim, that “patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate, consistere [paternal power should consist in proper conduct, not in cruelty].” But still they maintained to the last a very large and absolute authority: for a son could not acquire any property of his own during the life of his father; but all his acquisitions belonged to the father, or at least the profits of them for his life<sup>c</sup>.

THE power of a parent by our English laws is much more moderate; but still sufficient to keep the child in order and obedience. He may lawfully correct his child, being under age, in a reasonable manner<sup>d</sup>; for this is for the benefit of his education. The consent or concurrence of the parent to the marriage of his child under age, was also directed by our antient law to be obtained: but now it is absolutely necessary; for without it the contract is void<sup>e</sup>. And this also is another means, which the law has put 441 into the parent’s hands, in order the better to discharge his duty; first, of protecting his children from the snares of artful and designing persons; and, next, of settling them properly in life, by preventing the ill consequences of too early and precipitate marriages. A father has no other power over his sons estate, than as his trustee or guardian; for, though he may receive the profits during the child’s minority, yet he must account for them when he comes of age. He may indeed have the benefit of his children’s labour while they live with him, and are maintained by him: but this is no more than he is entitled to from his apprentices or servants. The legal power of a father (for a mother, as such, is entitled to no power, but only to reverence and respect) the power of a father, I say, over the persons of his children ceases at the age of twenty one: for they are then enfranchised by arriving at years of discretion, or that point which the law has established (as some must necessarily be established) when the empire of the father, or other guardian, gives place to the empire of reason. Yet, till that age arrives, this empire of the father continues even after his death; for he may by his will appoint a guardian to his children. He may also delegate part of his parental authority, during his life, to the tutor or schoolmaster of his child; who is then in loco parentis [in the place of a parent], and has such a portion of the power of the parent committed to his charge, viz. that of restraint and correction, as may be necessary to answer the purposes for which he is employed.

3. THE duties of children to their parents arise from a principle of natural justice and retribution. For to those, who gave us existence, we naturally owe subjection and obedience during our minority, and honour and reverence ever after; they, who protected the weakness of our infancy, are entitled to our protection in the infirmity of their age; they who by sustenance and education have enabled their offspring to prosper, ought in return to be supported by that offspring, in case they stand in need of assistance. Upon this principle proceed all the duties of children to their parents,

<sup>b</sup> Ff. 48. 9. 5.

<sup>c</sup> Inst. 2. 9. 1.

<sup>d</sup> 1 Hawk. P. C. 130.

<sup>e</sup> Stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 33.

which are enjoined by positive laws. And the Athenian laws<sup>f</sup> carried this principle 442 into practice with a scrupulous kind of nicety: obliging all children to provide for their father, when fallen into poverty; with an exception to spurious children, to those whose chastity had been prostituted by consent of the father, and to those whom he had not put in any way of gaining a livelihood. The legislature, says baron Montesquieu<sup>g</sup>, considered, that in the first case the father, being uncertain, had rendered the natural obligation precarious; that, in the second case, he had sullied the life he had given, and done his children the greatest of injuries, in depriving them of their reputation; and that, in the third case, he had rendered their life (so far as in him lay) an insupportable burthen, by furnishing them with no means of subsistence.

OUR laws agree with those of Athens with regard to the first only of these particulars, the case of spurious issue. In the other cases the law does not hold the tie of nature to be dissolved by any misbehaviour of the parent; and therefore a child is equally justifiable in defending the person, or maintaining the cause or suit, of a bad parent, as a good one; and is equally compellable<sup>h</sup>, if of sufficient ability, to maintain and provide for a wicked and unnatural progenitor, as for one who has shewn the greatest tenderness and parental piety.

II. WE are next to consider the case of illegitimate children, or bastards; with regard to whom let us inquire, 1. Who are bastards. 2. The legal duties of the parents towards a bastard child. 3. The rights and incapacities attending such bastard children.

1. WHO are bastards. A bastard, by our English laws, is one that is not only begotten, but born, out of lawful matrimony. The civil and canon laws do not allow a child to remain a bastard, if the parents afterwards intermarry<sup>i</sup>: and herein they differ 443 most materially from our law; which, though not so strict as to require that the child shall be begotten, yet makes it an <4> indispensable condition that it shall be born, after lawful wedlock. And the reason of our English law is surely much superior to that of the Roman, if we consider the principal end and design of establishing the contract of marriage, taken in a civil light; abstractedly from any religious view, which has nothing to do with the legitimacy or illegitimacy of the children. The main end and design of marriage therefore being to ascertain and fix upon some certain person, to whom the care, the protection, the maintenance, and the education of the children should belong; this end is undoubtedly better answered by legitimating all issue born after wedlock, than by legitimating all issue of the same parties, even born before wedlock, so as wedlock afterwards ensues: 1. Because of the very great uncertainty there will generally be, in the proof that the issue was really begotten by the same man; whereas, by confining the proof to the birth, and not to the begetting, our law has rendered it perfectly certain, what child is legitimate, and who is to take care of the child. 2. Because by the Roman laws a child may be continued a bastard, or made legitimate, at the option of the father and mother, by a marriage ex post facto

<sup>f</sup> Potter's Antiq. b. 4. c. 15.

<sup>g</sup> Sp. L. l. 26. c. 5.

<sup>h</sup> Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2.

<sup>i</sup> Inst. l. 10. 13. Decretal. l. 4. t. 17. c. 1.

[after the fact]; thereby opening a door to many frauds and partialities, which by our law are prevented. 3. Because by those laws a man may remain a bastard till forty years of age, and then become legitimate, by the subsequent marriage of his parents; whereby the main end of marriage, the protection of infants, is totally frustrated. 4. Because this rule of the Roman laws admits of no limitations as to the time, or number, of bastards so to be legitimated; but a dozen of them may, twenty years after their birth, by the subsequent marriage of their parents, be admitted to all the privileges of legitimate children. This is plainly a great discouragement to the matrimonial state; to which one main inducement is usually not only the desire of having children, but also the desire of procreating lawful heirs. Whereas our constitutions guard against this indecency, and at the same time give sufficient allowance to the frailties
 444 of human nature. For, if a child be begotten while the parents are single, and they will endeavour to make an early reparation for the offence, by marrying within a few months after, our law is so indulgent as not to bastardize the child, if it be born, though not begotten, in lawful wedlock: for this is an incident that can happen but once; since all future children will be begotten, as well as born, within the rules of honour and civil society. Upon reasons like these we may suppose the peers to have acted at the parliament of Merton, when they refused to enact that children born before marriage should be esteemed legitimate<sup>k</sup>.

FROM what has been said it appears, that all children born before matrimony are bastards by our law; and so it is of all children born so long after the death of the husband, that, by the usual course of gestation, they could not be begotten by him. But, this being a matter of some uncertainty, the law is not exact as to a few days<sup>l</sup>. And this gives occasion to a proceeding at common law, where a widow is suspected to feign herself with child, in order to produce a supposititious heir to the estate: an attempt which the rigor of the Gothic constitutions esteemed equivalent to the most atrocious theft, and therefore punished with death<sup>m</sup>. In this case with us the heir presumptive may have a writ de ventre inspiciendo [for discovering a pregnancy], to examine whether she be with child, <sup>(5)</sup> or not<sup>n</sup>; which is entirely conformable to the practice of the civil law<sup>o</sup>: <sup>(7)</sup> and, if the widow be upon due examination found not pregnant, any issue she may afterwards produce, though within nine months, will be bastard. But if a man dies, and his widow soon after marries again, and a child is born within such a time, as that by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband; in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate; for he

<sup>k</sup> Rogaverunt omnes episcopi magnates, ut consentirent quod nati ante matrimonium essent legitimi, sicut illi qui nati sunt post matrimonium, quia ecclesia tales habet pro legitimis. Et omnes comites et barones una voce responderunt, quod nolunt leges Angliae mutare, quae hucusque usitatae sunt et approbatae. [All the bishops requested the magnates to consent that children born before marriage should be legitimate, as those which are born after marriage, because the church esteems them so. But all the earls and barons answered unanimously, that they would not change the laws of England which were hitherto used and approved.] Stat. [Merton] 20 Hen. III. c. 9. See the introduction to the great charter, edit. Oxon. 1759. sub anno 1253.

<sup>l</sup> [Alsop v Bowtrell] Cro. Jac. 541.

<sup>m</sup> Stiernhook de jure Gothor. l. 3. c. 5.

<sup>n</sup> <sup>(6)</sup> Co. Litt. 8.

<sup>o</sup> Ff. 25. tit. 4. per tot [throughout].

may, when he arrives to years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases<sup>p</sup>. 445
To prevent this, among other inconveniences, the civil law ordained that no widow should marry infra annum luctus [within the year of mourning]<sup>q</sup>; a rule which obtained so early as the reign of Augustus<sup>r</sup>, if not of Romulus: and the same constitution was probably handed down to our early ancestors from the Romans, during their stay in this island; for we find it established under the Saxon and Danish governments<sup>s</sup>.

As bastards may be born before the coverture, or marriage state, is begun, or after it is determined, so also children born during wedlock may in some circumstances be bastards. As if the husband be out of the kingdom of England (or, as the law somewhat loosely phrases it, extra quatuor maria [beyond the four seas]) for above nine months, so that no access to his wife can be presumed, her issue during that period shall be bastard<sup>t</sup>. But, generally, during the coverture access of the husband shall be presumed, unless the contrary can be shewn<sup>u</sup>; which is such a negative as can only be proved by shewing him to be elsewhere: for the general rule is, praesumitur pro legitimatione [the presumption is in favour of legitimacy]<sup>w</sup>. In a divorce a mensa et thoro, if the wife breeds children, they are bastards; for the law will presume the husband and wife conformable to the sentence of separation, unless access be proved: but, in a voluntary separation by agreement, the law will suppose access, unless the negative be shewn<sup>x</sup>. So also if there is an apparent impossibility of procreation on the part of the husband, as if he be only eight years old, or the like, there the issue of the wife shall be bastard<sup>y</sup>. Likewise, in case of divorce in the spiritual court a vinculo matrimonii, all the issue born during the coverture are bastards<sup>z</sup>; because such divorce is always upon some cause, that rendered the marriage unlawful and null from the beginning.

2. LET us next see the duty of parents to their bastard children, by our law; which 446 is principally that of maintenance. For, though bastards are not looked upon as children to any civil purposes, yet the ties of nature, of which maintenance is one, are not so easily dissolved: and they hold indeed as to many other intentions; as, particularly, that a man shall not marry his bastard sister or daughter<sup>a</sup>. The civil law therefore, when it denied maintenance to bastards begotten under certain atrocious circumstances<sup>b</sup>, was neither consonant to nature, nor reason, however profligate and wicked the parents might justly be esteemed.

<sup>p</sup> Co. Litt. 8.

<sup>q</sup> Cod. 5. 9. 2.

<sup>r</sup> But the year was then only ten months. Ovid. Fast. I. 27.

<sup>s</sup> Sit omnis vidua sine marito duodecim menses. [Let every widow remain unmarried twelve months.] LL. Ethelr. A.D. 1008. LL. Canut. c. 71.

<sup>t</sup> Co. Litt. 244.

<sup>u</sup> [St. George's v St. Margaret Westminster] [1] Salk. 123. [Sidney v Sidney] 3 P. W. 276. [Pendrell v Pendrell] [2] Stra. 925.

<sup>w</sup> [Bury's case] 5 Rep. 98.

<sup>x</sup> [St. George's v St. Margaret Westminster] [1] Salk. 123.

<sup>y</sup> Co. Litt. 244.

<sup>z</sup> Ibid. 235.

<sup>a</sup> [Hains v Jeffell] [1] Lord Raym. 68. [Hains v Jefcot] Comb. 356.

<sup>b</sup> Nov. 89. c. 15.

THE method in which the English law provides maintenance for them is as follows<sup>c</sup>. When a woman is delivered, or declares herself with child, of a bastard, and will by oath before a justice of peace (8) charge any person having got her with child, the justice shall cause such person to be apprehended, and commit him till he gives security, either to maintain the child, or appear at the next quarter sessions to dispute and try the fact. But if the woman dies, or is married before delivery, or miscarries, or proves not to have been with child, the person shall be discharged: otherwise the sessions, or two justices out of sessions, upon original application to them, may take order for the keeping of the bastard, by charging the mother, or the reputed father with the payment of money or other sustentation for that purpose. And if such putative father, or lewd mother, run away from the parish, the overseers by direction of two justices may seize their rents, goods, and chattels, in order to bring up the said bastard child. Yet such is the humanity of our laws, that no woman can be compulsively questioned concerning the father of her child, till one month after her delivery: which indulgence is however very frequently a hardship upon parishes, (9) by suffering the parents to escape.

447 3. I PROCEED next to the rights and incapacities which appertain to a bastard. The rights are very few, being only such as he can acquire; for he can inherit nothing, being looked upon as the son of nobody, and sometimes called filius nullius [the son of no one], sometimes filius populi [the son of the people]<sup>d</sup>. Yet he may gain a surname by reputation<sup>e</sup>, though he has none by inheritance. All other (10) children have a settlement in their father's parish; but a bastard in the parish where born, for he hath no father<sup>f</sup>. However, in case of fraud, as if a woman be sent either by order of justices, or comes to beg as a vagrant, to a parish which she does not belong to, and drops her bastard there; the bastard shall, in the first case, be settled in the parish from whence she was illegally removed<sup>g</sup>; or, in the latter case, in the mother's own parish, if the mother be apprehended for her (11) vagrancy<sup>h</sup>. The incapacity of a bastard consists principally in this, that he cannot be heir to any one, neither can he have heirs, but of his own body; for, being nullius filius, he is therefore of kin to nobody, and has no ancestor from whom any inheritable blood can be derived. A bastard was also, in strictness, incapable of holy orders; and, though that were dispensed with, yet he was utterly disqualified from holding any dignity in the church<sup>i</sup>: but this doctrine seems now obsolete; and in all other respects, there is no distinction between a bastard and another man. And really any other distinction, but that of not inheriting, which civil policy renders necessary, would, with regard to the innocent offspring of his parents' crimes, be odious, unjust, and cruel to the last degree: and yet the civil law, so boasted of for equitable decisions, made bastards <sup>c</sup> Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3. 7 Jac. I. c. 4. 3 Car. I. c. 4. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 12. 6 Geo. II. c. 31.

<sup>d</sup> Fort. de LL. c. 40.

<sup>e</sup> Co. Litt. 3.

<sup>f</sup> [Hard's case] [2] Salk. 427.

<sup>g</sup> [Wood's case] [1] Salk. 121.

<sup>h</sup> Stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 5.

<sup>i</sup> Fortesc. c. 40. [Specot case] 5 Rep. 58.

in some cases incapable even of a gift from their parents<sup>k</sup>. A bastard may, lastly, be made legitimate, and capable of inheriting, by the transcendent power of an act of parliament, and not otherwise<sup>l</sup>: as was done in the case of John of Gant's bastard children, by a statute of Richard the second.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>k</sup> Cod. 6. 57. 5.

<sup>l</sup> 4 Inst. 36.

---

<sup>1</sup> Stat. 20 Ric. II c. 28. Rot. Parl. iii. 343 (1396–7).

OF GUARDIAN AND WARD.

THE only general private relation, now remaining to be discussed, is that of guardian and ward; which bears a very near resemblance to the last, and is plainly derived out of it: the guardian being only a temporary parent; that is, for so long time as the ward is an infant, or under age. In examining this species of relationship, I shall first consider the different kinds of guardians, how they are appointed, and their power and duty: next, the different ages of persons, as defined by the law: and, lastly, the privileges and disabilities of an infant, or one under age and subject to guardianship.

1. THE guardian with us performs the office both of the tutor and curator of the Roman laws; the former of which had the charge of the maintenance and education of the minor, the latter the care of his fortune; or, according to the language of the court of chancery, the tutor was the committee of the person, the curator the committee of the estate. But this office was frequently united in the civil law<sup>a</sup>; as it is always in our law with regard to minors, though as to lunatics and idiots it is commonly kept distinct.

449 OF the several species of guardians, the first are guardians by nature: viz. the father and (in some cases) the mother of the child. For, if an estate be left to an infant, the father is by common law the guardian, and must account to his child for the profits<sup>b</sup>. And, with regard to daughters, it seems by construction of the statute 4 & 5 Ph. & Mar. c. 8. that the father might by deed or will assign a guardian to any woman-child under the age of sixteen, and if none be so assigned, the mother shall in this case be guardian<sup>c</sup>. There are also guardians for nurture<sup>d</sup>, which are, of course, the father or mother, till the infant attains the age of fourteen years<sup>e</sup>; and, in default of father or mother, the ordinary<sup>1</sup> usually assigns some discreet person to take care of the infant's personal estate, and to provide for his maintenance and education<sup>f</sup>. Next are guardians in socage, (an appellation which will be fully explained in the second book of these commentaries) who are also called guardians by the common law. These take place only when the minor is entitled to some estate in lands, and then by the common law the guardianship devolves upon his next of kin, to whom the inheritance cannot possibly descend; as, where the estate descended from his father, in this case his uncle by the mother's side cannot possibly inherit this estate, and therefore shall be the guardian<sup>g</sup>. For the law judges it improper to trust the person of an infant in his

<sup>a</sup> Ff. 26. 4. 1.

<sup>b</sup> Co. Litt. 88.

<sup>c</sup> [Ratcliff's case] 3 Rep. 39.

<sup>d</sup> Co. Litt. 88.

<sup>e</sup> [Gorge's case] Moor. 738. [Ratcliff's case] 3 Rep. 38.

<sup>f</sup> [Bishop of Carlisle v Wells] 2 [T.] Jones 90. [Bishop of Carlisle v Wells] 2 Lev. 163.

<sup>g</sup> Litt. §. 123.

---

<sup>1</sup> Ordinary: an officer of the church with immediate jurisdiction in ecclesiastical causes, normally a bishop or archbishop.

hands, who may by possibility become heir to him; that there may be no temptation, nor even suspicion of temptation, for him to abuse his trust<sup>h</sup>. The Roman laws proceed on a quite contrary principle, committing the care of the minor to him who is the next to succeed to the inheritance, presuming that the next heir would take the best care of an estate, to which he has a prospect of succeeding; and this they boast to be “summa providentia [the greatest prudence]”<sup>i</sup>. But in the mean time (1) they forget, how much it is the guardian’s interest to remove the incumbrance of his pupil’s life from that estate, for which he is supposed to have so great a regard<sup>k</sup>. And this affords Fortescue<sup>l</sup>, and sir Edward Coke<sup>m</sup>, an ample opportunity for triumph; they affirming, that to commit the custody of an infant to him that is next in succession, is “quasi agnum committere lupo, ad devorandum [like committing the lamb to the wolf to be devoured]”<sup>n</sup>. These guardians in socage, like those for nurture, continue only till the minor is fourteen years of age; for then, in both cases, he is presumed to have discretion, so far as to choose his own guardian. This he may do, unless one be (3) appointed by father, by virtue of the statute 12 Car. II. c. 24. which, considering the imbecillity of judgment in children of the age of fourteen, and the abolition of guardianship in chivalry (which lasted till the age of twenty one, and of which we shall speak hereafter) enacts, that any father, under age or of full age, may by deed or will dispose of the custody of his child, either born or unborn, to any person, except a popish recusant, either in possession or reversion, till such child attains the age of one and twenty years. These are called guardians by statute, or testamentary guardians. There are also special guardians by custom of London, and other places<sup>o</sup>; but they are particular exceptions, and do not fall under the general law. 450

THE power and reciprocal duty of a guardian and ward are the same, pro tempore [for a time], as that of a father and child; and therefore I shall not repeat them: but shall only add, that the guardian, when the ward comes of age, is bound to give him an account of all that he has transacted on his behalf, and must answer for all losses by his wilful default or negligence. In order therefore to prevent disagreeable contests with young gentlemen, it has become a practice for many guardians, of large estates especially, to indemnify themselves by applying to the court of chancery, acting under its direction, and accounting annually before the officers of that court. For the lord chancellor is, by right derived from the crown, the general and supreme guardian 451

<sup>h</sup> Nunquam custodia alicujus de jure alicui remanet, de quo habeatur suspicio, quod possit vel velit aliquod jus in ipsa hereditate clamare. [The guardianship of any person should never as of right remain in one concerning whom a suspicion may be entertained that he can or will claim any right in the inheritance.] Glanv. l. 7. c. 11.

<sup>i</sup> Ff. 26. 4. 1.

<sup>k</sup> The Roman satyrist [Persius] was fully aware of this danger, when he puts this private prayer into the mouth of a selfish guardian; Pupillum o utinam, quem proximus haeres Impello, expungam. [O were my pupil fairly knock’d o’ th’ head! / I should possess th’ estate if he were dead. (tr. Dryden),] Pers. 1. [recte, satire 2.] 12. [see S. Johnson, The Works of the English Poets (1779), xix. 322.]

<sup>l</sup> c. 44.

<sup>m</sup> 1 Inst. 88.

<sup>n</sup> (2) This policy of our English law is warranted by the wise institutions of Solon, who provided that no one should be another’s guardian, who was to enjoy the estate after his death. (Potter’s Antiqui, l. 1. c. 26.) And Charondas, another of the Grecian legislators, directed that the inheritance should go to the father’s relations, but the education of the child to the mother’s; that the guardianship and right of succession might always be kept distinct. (Petit. Leg. Att. l. 6. t. 7.)

<sup>o</sup> Co. Litt. 88.

of all infants, as well as idiots and lunatics; that is, of all such persons as have not discretion enough to manage their own concerns. In case therefore any guardian abuses his trust, the court will check and punish him; nay sometimes proceed to the removal of him, and appoint another in his stead<sup>p</sup>.

2. LET us next consider the ward, or person within age, for whose assistance and support these guardians are constituted by law; or who it is, that is said to be within age. The ages of male and female are different for different purposes. A male at twelve years old may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen is at years of discretion, and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage, may choose his guardian, and, if his discretion be actually proved, may make his testament of his personal estate; at seventeen may be an executor; and at twenty one is at his own disposal, and may aliene his lands, goods, and chattels. A female also at seven years of age may be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine is entitled to dower; at twelve is at years of maturity, and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage, and, if proved to have sufficient discretion, may bequeath her personal estate; at fourteen is at years of legal discretion, and may choose a guardian; at seventeen may be executrix; and at twenty one may dispose of herself and her lands. So that full age in male or female, is twenty one years, which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth<sup>q</sup>; who till that time is an infant, and so stiled in law. Among the antient Greeks and Romans women were never of age, but 452 subject to perpetual guardianship<sup>r</sup>, unless when married, "nisi convenissent in manum viri [unless they should come under the control of a husband];" and, when that perpetual tutelage wore away in process of time, we find that, in females as well as males, full age was not till twenty five years<sup>s</sup>. Thus, by the constitutions of different kingdoms, this period, which is merely arbitrary, and juris positivi [of positive law], is fixed at different times. Scotland agrees with England in this point; (both probably copying from the old Saxon constitutions on the continent, which extended the age of minority "ad annum vigesimum primum et eo usque juvenes sub tutelam reponunt [to the twenty-first year, and they place their youths under guardianship till that period]"<sup>t</sup>) but in Naples they are of full age at eighteen; in France, with regard to marriage, not till thirty; and in Holland at twenty five.

3. INFANTS have various privileges, and various disabilities: but their very disabilities are privileges; in order to secure them from hurting themselves by their own improvident acts. An infant cannot be sued but under the protection, and joining the name, of his guardian; for he is to defend him against all attacks as well by law as otherwise<sup>u</sup>: but he may sue either by his guardian, or prochein amy, his next friend who is not his guardian. This prochein amy may be any person who will undertake the infant's cause; and it frequently happens, that an infant, by his prochein

<sup>p</sup> [Guardian pur suer actions] 1 Sid. 424. [Duke of Beaufort v Berty] 1 P. Will. 703.

<sup>q</sup> [Anon. (1704)] [1] Salk. 44. [Howard's case] [2 Salk] (4) 625.

<sup>r</sup> Pott. Antiq. l. 4. c. 11. Cic. pro Muren. 12.

<sup>s</sup> Inst. l. 23. l.

<sup>t</sup> Stiernhook de jure Sueonum. l. 2. c. 2. This is also the period when the king, as well as the subject, arrives at full age in modern Sweden. Mod. Un. Hist. xxxiii. 220.

<sup>u</sup> Co. Litt. 135.

amy, institutes a suit in equity against a fraudulent guardian. In criminal cases, an infant of the age of fourteen years may be capitally punished for any capital offence<sup>w</sup>: but under the age of seven he cannot. The period between seven and fourteen is subject to much uncertainty: for the infant shall, generally speaking, be judged prima facie innocent; yet if he was doli capax [capable of evil intent], and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted and undergo judgment and execution of death, though he hath not attained to years of puberty or discretion<sup>x</sup>. And sir Matthew Hale gives us two instances, one of a girl of thirteen, who was burned for killing her mistress; another of a boy still younger, that had killed his companion, and hid himself, who was hanged; for it appeared by his hiding that he knew he had done wrong, and could discern between good and evil; and in such cases the maxim of law is, that (5) malitia supplet aetatem [malice makes up for the deficiency in age]. 453

WITH regard to estates and civil property, an infant hath many privileges, which will be better understood when we come to treat more particularly of those matters: but this may be said in general, that an infant shall lose nothing by non-claim, or neglect of demanding his right; nor shall any other laches or negligence be imputed to an infant, except in some very particular cases.

It is generally true, that an infant can neither aliene his lands, nor do any legal act, nor make a deed, nor indeed any manner of contract, that will bind him. But still to all these rules there are some exceptions; part of which were just now mentioned in reckoning up the different capacities which they assume at different ages: and there are others, a few of which it may not be improper to recite, as a general specimen of the whole. And, first, it is true, that infants cannot aliene their estates: but<sup>y</sup> infant trustees, or mortgagees, are enabled to convey, under the direction of the court of chancery or (7) exchequer, the estates they hold in trust or mortgage, to such person as the court shall appoint. Also it is generally true, that an infant can do no legal act: yet an infant who has an advowson, may present to the benefice when it becomes void<sup>z</sup>. For the law in this case dispenses with one rule, in order to maintain others of far greater consequence: it permits an infant to present a clerk (who, if unfit, may be rejected by the bishop) rather than either suffer the church to be unserved till he comes of age, or permit the infant to be debarred of his right by lapse to the bishop. 454
An infant may also purchase lands, but his purchase is incomplete: for, when he comes to age, he may either agree or disagree to it, as he thinks prudent or proper, without alleging any reason; and so may his heirs after him, if he dies without having completed his agreement<sup>a</sup>. It is, farther, generally true, that an infant, under twenty one, can make (8) no deed that is of any force or effect: yet<sup>b</sup> he may bind himself apprentice by deed indented, or indentures, for seven years; and<sup>c</sup> he may by deed or

<sup>w</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 25.

<sup>x</sup> 1 Hal. P. C. 26.

<sup>y</sup> (6) Stat. 7 Ann. c. 19.

<sup>z</sup> Co. Litt. 172.

<sup>a</sup> Co. Litt. 2.

<sup>b</sup> (9) Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

<sup>c</sup> Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24.

will appoint a guardian to his children, if he has any. Lastly, it is generally true, that an infant can make no other contract that will bind him: yet he may bind himself to pay for his necessary meat, drink, apparel, physic, and such other necessities; and likewise for his good teaching and instruction, whereby he may profit himself afterwards<sup>d</sup>. And thus much, at present, for the privileges and disabilities of infants.

<sup>d</sup> Co. Litt. 172.

OF CORPORATIONS.

WE have hitherto considered persons in their natural capacities, and have treated of their rights and duties. But, as all personal rights die with the person; and, as the necessary forms of investing a series of individuals, one after another, with the same identical rights, would be very inconvenient, if not impracticable; it has been found necessary, when it is for the advantage of the public to have any particular rights kept on foot and continued, to constitute artificial persons, who may maintain a perpetual succession, and enjoy a kind of legal immortality.

THESE artificial persons are called bodies politic, bodies corporate, (corpora corporata) or corporations: of which there is a great variety subsisting, for the advancement of religion, of learning, and of commerce; in order to preserve entire and for ever those rights and immunities, which, if they were granted only to those individuals of which the body corporate is composed, would upon their death be utterly lost and extinct. To shew the advantages of these incorporations, let us consider the case of a college in either of our universities, founded ad studendum et orandum [for study and prayer], for the encouragement and support of religion and learning. If this was a mere voluntary assembly, the individuals which compose it might indeed read, pray, study, and perform scholastic exercises together, so long as they could agree to do so: but they could neither frame, nor receive, any laws or rules 456 of their conduct; none at least, which would have any binding force, for want of a coercive power to create a sufficient obligation. Neither could they be capable of retaining any privileges or immunities: for, if such privileges be attacked, which of all this unconnected assembly has the right, or ability, to defend them? And, when they are dispersed by death or otherwise, how shall they transfer these advantages to another set of students, equally unconnected as themselves? So also, with regard to holding estates or other property, if land be granted for the purposes of religion or learning to twenty individuals not incorporated, there is no legal way of continuing the property to any other persons for the same purposes, but by endless conveyances from one to the other, as often as the hands are changed. But, when they are consolidated and united into a corporation, they and their successors are then considered as one person in law: as one person, they have one will, which is collected from the sense of the majority of the individuals: this one will may establish rules and orders for the regulation of the whole, which are a sort of municipal laws of this little republic; or rules and statutes may be prescribed to it at its creation, which are then in the place of natural laws: the privileges and immunities, the estates and possessions, of the corporation, when once vested in them, will be for ever vested, without any new conveyance to new successions; for all the individual members that have existed from the foundation to the present time, or that shall ever hereafter exist, are but one person in law, a person that never dies: in like manner as the river Thames is still the same river, though the parts which compose it are changing every instant.

THE honour of originally inventing these political constitutions entirely belongs to the Romans. They were introduced, as Plutarch says, by Numa; who finding, upon his accession, the city torn to pieces by the two rival factions of Sabines, and Romans, thought it a prudent and politic measure, to subdivide these two into many smaller 457 ones, by instituting separate societies of every manual trade and profession. They were afterwards much considered by the civil law<sup>a</sup>, in which they were called universitates [universities], as forming one whole out of many individuals; or collegia [colleges], from being gathered together: they were adopted also by the canon law, for the maintenance of ecclesiastical discipline; and from them our spiritual corporations are derived. But our laws have considerably refined and improved upon the invention, according to the usual genius of the English nation: particularly with regard to sole corporations, consisting of one person only, of which the Roman lawyers had no notion; their maxim being that “tres faciunt collegium [three make a college]<sup>b</sup>.” Though they held, that if a corporation, originally consisting of three persons, be reduced to one, “si universitas ad unum redit [if the corporation be reduced to one],” it may still subsist as a corporation. “et stet nomen universitatis [and the name of ‘university’ may continue]<sup>c</sup>.”

BEFORE we proceed to treat of the several incidents of corporations, as regarded by the laws of England, let us first take a view of the several sorts of them; and then we shall be better enabled to apprehend their respective qualities.

THE first division of corporations is into aggregate and sole. Corporations aggregate consist of many persons united together into one society, and are kept up by a perpetual succession of members, so as to continue for ever: of which kind are the mayor and commonalty of a city, the head and fellows of a college, the dean and chapter of a cathedral church. Corporations sole consist of one person only and his successors, in some particular station, who are incorporated by law, in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had. In this sense the king is a sole corporation<sup>d</sup>: so is a bishop: so are some deans, and prebendaries, distinct from their several chapters: and so is every parson and vicar. And the necessity, or at least use, of this institution will 458 be very apparent, if we consider the case of a parson of a church. At the original endowment of parish churches, the freehold of the church, the churchyard, the parsonage house, the glebe, and the tithes of the parish, were vested in the then parson by the bounty of the donor, as a temporal recompence to him for his spiritual care of the inhabitants, and with intent that the same emoluments should ever afterwards continue as a recompence for the same care. But how was this to be effected? The freehold was vested in the parson; and, if we suppose it vested in his natural capacity, on his death it might descend to his heir, and would be liable to his debts and

<sup>a</sup> Ff. l. 3. t. 4. per tot. [throughout]

<sup>b</sup> Ff. 50. 16. 85.

<sup>c</sup> Ff. 3. 4. 7.

<sup>d</sup> Co. Litt. 43.

incumbrances: or, at best, the heir might be compellable, at some trouble and expense, to convey these rights to the succeeding incumbent. The law therefore has wisely ordained, that the parson, quatenus [as] parson, shall never die, any more than the king; by making him and his successors a corporation. By which means all the original rights of the parsonage are preserved entire to the successor: for the present incumbent, and his predecessor who lived seven centuries ago, are in law one and the same person; and what was given to the one was given to the other also.

ANOTHER division of corporations, either sole or aggregate, is into ecclesiastical and lay. Ecclesiastical corporations are where the members that compose it are entirely spiritual persons; such as bishops; certain deans, and prebendaries; all archdeacons, parsons, and vicars; which are sole corporations: deans and chapters at present, and formerly prior and convent, abbot and monks, and the like, bodies aggregate. These are erected for the furtherance of religion, and the perpetuating the rights of the church. Lay corporations are of two sorts, civil and eleemosynary. The civil are such as are erected for a variety of temporal purposes. The king, for instance, is made a corporation to prevent in general the possibility of an interregnum or vacancy of the throne, and to preserve the possessions of the crown entire; for, immediately upon the demise of one king, his successor is, as we have formerly seen, in full possession of the regal rights and dignity. Other lay corporations are erected for the good government of a town or particular district, as a mayor and commonalty, bailiff and burgesses, or the like: some for the advancement and regulation of manufactures and commerce; as the trading companies of London, and other towns: and some for the better carrying on of divers special purposes; as churchwardens, for conservation of the goods of the parish; the college of physicians and company of surgeons in London, for the improvement of the medical science; the royal society, for the advancement of natural knowlege; and the (1) society of antiquarians, for promoting the study of antiquities. And among these I am inclined to think the general corporate bodies of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge must be ranked: for it is clear they are not spiritual or ecclesiastical corporations, being composed of more laymen than clergy: neither are they eleemosynary foundations, though stipends are annexed to particular magistrates and professors, any more than other corporations where the acting officers have standing salaries; for these are rewards pro opera et labore [for work and labour], not charitable donations only, since every stipend is preceded by service and duty: they seem therefore to be merely civil corporations. The eleemosynary sort are such as are constituted for the perpetual distribution of the free alms, or bounty, of the founder of them to such persons as he has directed. Of this kind are all hospitals for the maintenance of the poor, sick, and impotent; and all colleges, both in our universities and out<sup>e</sup> of them: which colleges are founded for two purposes; 1. For the promotion of piety and learning by proper regulations and ordinances. 2. For imparting assistance to the members of those bodies, in order to enable them to prosecute their devotion and studies with greater ease and assiduity. And all these eleemosynary corporations are, strictly speaking, lay and not ecclesiastical, even though composed of ecclesiastical persons<sup>f</sup>, and although they in some things partake of the nature, privileges, and restrictions of ecclesiastical bodies.

<sup>e</sup> Such as at Manchester, Eton, Winchester, &c.

460 HAVING thus marshalled the several species of corporations, let us next proceed to consider, 1. How corporations, in general, may be created. 2. What are their powers, capacities, and incapacities. 3. How corporations are visited. And 4. How they may be dissolved.

I. CORPORATIONS, by the civil law, seem to have been created by the mere act, and voluntary association of their members; provided such convention was not contrary to law, for then it was illicitum collegium [an illicit corporation]<sup>g</sup>. It does not appear that the prince's consent was necessary to be actually given to the foundation of them; but merely that the original founders of these voluntary and friendly societies (for they were little more than such) should not establish any meetings in opposition to the laws of the state.

BUT, with us in England, the king's consent is absolutely necessary to the erection of any corporation, either impliedly or expressly given. The king's implied consent is to be found in corporations which exist by force of the common law, to which our former kings are supposed to have given their concurrence; common law being nothing else but custom, arising from the universal agreement of the whole community. Of this sort are the king himself, all bishops, parsons, vicars, churchwardens, and some others; who by common law have ever been held (as far as our books can shew us) to have been corporations, virtute officii [by virtue of their office]: and this incorporation is so inseparably annexed to their offices, that we cannot frame a complete legal idea of any of these persons, but we must also have an idea of a corporation, capable to transmit his rights to his successors, at the same time. Another method of implication, whereby the king's consent is presumed, is as to all corporations by prescription, such as the city of London, and many others<sup>h</sup>, which 461 have existed as corporations, time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; and therefore are looked upon in law to be well created. For though the members thereof can shew no legal charter of incorporation, yet in cases of such high antiquity the law presumes there once was one; and that by the variety of accidents, which a length of time may produce, the charter is lost or destroyed. The methods, by which the king's consent is expressly <2> given, are either by act of parliament or charter. By act of parliament, of which the royal assent is a necessary ingredient, corporations may undoubtedly be created<sup>i</sup>: but it is observable, <3> that most of those statutes, which are usually cited as having created corporations, do either confirm such as have been before created by the king; as in the case of the college of physicians,

<sup>f</sup> [Philips v Bury] 1 Lord Raym. 6.

<sup>g</sup> Ff. 47. 22. 1. Neque societas, neque collegium, neque hujusmodi corpus passim omnibus habere conceditur; nam et legibus, et senatus consultis, et principalibus constitutionibus ea res coercetur. [It is not allowed to everyone everywhere to have such a partnership or corporation or a body of this kind; for the permission is controlled by the laws, by the decrees of the senate, and by the constitutions of the prince.] Ff. 3. 4. 1.

<sup>h</sup> 2 Inst. 330.

<sup>i</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 29. [Case of Sutton's Hospital] 1 Roll. Abr. 512.

erected by charter 10 Hen. VIII<sup>k</sup>, which charter was afterwards confirmed in parliament<sup>l</sup>; or, they permit the king to erect a corporation in futuro with such and such powers; as is the case of the bank of England<sup>m</sup>, and the society of the British fishery<sup>n</sup>. So that the immediate <4> creative act is usually performed by the king alone, in virtue of his royal prerogative<sup>o</sup>.

ALL the other methods therefore whereby corporations exist, by common law, by prescription, and by act of parliament, are for the most part reducible to this of the king's letters patent, or charter of incorporation. The king's creation may be performed by the words "creamus, erigimus, fundamus, incorporamus [we create, we erect, we found, we incorporate]," or the like. Nay it is held, that if the king grants to a set of men to have gildam mercatoriam, a mercantile meeting or assembly<sup>p</sup>, this is alone sufficient to incorporate and establish them for ever<sup>q</sup>.

THE parliament, we observed, by its absolute and transcendent authority, may 462 perform this, or any other act whatsoever: and actually did perform it to a great extent, by statute 39 Eliz. c. 5. which incorporated all hospitals and houses of correction founded by charitable persons, without farther trouble: and the same has been done in other cases of charitable foundations. But otherwise <6> it is not usual thus to intrench upon the prerogative of the crown, and the king may prevent it when he pleases. And, in the particular instance before-mentioned, it was done, as sir Edward Coke observes<sup>r</sup>, to avoid the charges of incorporation and licences of mortmain in small benefactions; which in his days were grown so great, <7> that it discouraged many men to undertake these pious and charitable works.

<8> THE king may grant to a subject the power of erecting corporations<sup>s</sup>, though the contrary was formerly held<sup>t</sup>: that is, he may permit the subject to name the persons and powers of the corporation at his pleasure; but it is really the king that erects, and the subject is but the instrument: for though none but the king can make a corporation, yet qui facit per alium, facit per se [he who does a thing by the agency of another, does it himself]<sup>v</sup>. In this manner the chancellor of the university of Oxford has power by charter to erect corporations; and has actually often exerted it, in the erection of several matriculated companies, now subsisting, of tradesmen subservient to the students.

WHEN a corporation is erected, a name must be given it; and by that name alone it must sue, and be sued, and do all legal acts; though a very minute variation therein

<sup>k</sup> [Dr. Bonham's case] 8 Rep. 114.

<sup>l</sup> 14 & 15 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

<sup>m</sup> Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 20.

<sup>n</sup> Stat. 23 Geo. II. c. 4.

<sup>o</sup> See page 263 [I. 175–6].

<sup>p</sup> Gild signified among the Saxons a fraternity, derived from the verb gildan to pay, because every man paid his share towards the expenses of the community. And hence their place of meeting is frequently <5> called the Gild-hall.

<sup>q</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 30. 1 Roll. Abr. 513.

<sup>r</sup> 2 Inst. 722.

<sup>s</sup> Bro. Abr. tit. Prerog. 53. Viner. Prerog. 88. pl. 16.

<sup>t</sup> Yearbook, 2 Hen. VII. 13.

<sup>v</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 33.

is not material<sup>u</sup>. Such name is the very being of its constitution; and, though it is the will of the king that erects the corporation, yet the name is the knot of its combination, without which it could not perform its corporate functions<sup>w</sup>. The name of incorporation, says sir Edward Coke, is as a proper name, or name of baptism; and therefore 463 when a private founder gives his college or hospital a name, he does it only as godfather; and by that same name the king baptizes the incorporation<sup>x</sup>.

II. AFTER a corporation is so formed and named, it acquires many powers, rights, capacities, and incapacities, which we are next to consider. Some of these are necessarily and inseparably incident to every corporation; which incidents, as soon as a corporation is duly erected, are tacitly annexed of course<sup>y</sup>. As, 1. To have perpetual succession. This is the very end of its incorporation: for there cannot be a succession for ever without an incorporation<sup>z</sup>; and therefore all aggregate corporations have a power necessarily implied of electing members in the room of such as go off<sup>a</sup>. 2. To sue or be sued, implead or be impleaded, grant or receive, by its corporate name, and do all other acts as natural persons may. 3. To purchase lands, and hold them, for the benefit of themselves and their successors: which two are consequential to the former. 4. To have a common seal. For a corporation, being an invisible body, cannot manifest its intentions by any personal act or oral discourse: it therefore acts and speaks only by its common seal. For, though the particular members may express their private consents to any act, by words, or signing their names, yet this does not bind the corporation: it is the fixing of the seal, and that only, which unites the several assents of the individuals, who compose the community, and makes one joint assent of the whole<sup>b</sup>. 5. To make by-laws or private statutes for the better government of the corporation; which are binding upon themselves, unless contrary to the laws of the land, and then they are void. This is also included by law in the very act of incorporation<sup>c</sup>: for, as natural reason is given to the natural body for the governing it, 464 so by-laws or statutes are a sort of political reason to govern the body politic. And this right of making by-laws for their own government, not contrary to the law of the land, was allowed by the law of the twelve tables at Rome<sup>d</sup>. But no trading company is, with us, allowed to make by-laws, which may affect the king's prerogative, or the common profit of the <9> people, unless they be approved by the chancellor, treasurer, and chief justices, or the judges of assise in their circuits<sup>e</sup>. These five powers are inseparably incident to every corporation, at least to every corporation aggregate: for two of them, though they may be practised, yet are very unnecessary to a corporation

<sup>u</sup> [Lynne Regis (Corporation) case] 10 Rep. 122.

<sup>w</sup> Gilb. Hist. C. P. 182.

<sup>x</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 28.

<sup>y</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 30. [Norris v Staps] Hob. 211.

<sup>z</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 26.

<sup>a</sup> 1 Roll. Abr. 514.

<sup>b</sup> [Case of the Dean and Chapter of Fernes (i.e. County Wexford)] Dav. 44. 48.

<sup>c</sup> [Norris v Staps (1616)] Hob. 211.

<sup>d</sup> Sodales legem quam volent, dum ne quid ex publica lege corrumpant, sibi ferunt. [Let the societies prescribe for themselves any law they please, so long as it does not infringe the public law.]

<sup>e</sup> <10> Stat. 19 Hen. VII. c. 7.

sole; viz. to have a corporate seal to testify his sole assent, and to make statutes for the regulation of his own conduct.

THERE are also certain privileges and disabilities that attend an aggregate corporation, and are not applicable to such as are sole; the reason of them ceasing, and of course the law. It must always appear by attorney; for it cannot appear in person, being, as sir Edward Coke says<sup>f</sup>, invisible, and existing only in intendment and consideration of law. It can neither maintain, or be made defendant to, an action of battery or such like personal injuries; for a corporation can neither beat, nor be beaten, in its body politic<sup>g</sup>. A corporation cannot commit treason, or felony, or other crime, in its corporate capacity<sup>h</sup>: though its members may, in their distinct individual capacities. Neither is it capable of suffering a traitor's, or felon's punishment, for it is not liable to corporal penalties, nor to attainder, forfeiture, or corruption of blood<sup>i</sup>. It cannot be executor or administrator, or perform any personal duties; for it cannot take an oath for the due execution of the office. It <12> cannot be a trustee; for such kind of confidence is foreign to the ends of its institution: neither can it be compelled to perform such trust, because it cannot be committed to prison<sup>k</sup>; for its existence being ideal, no man can apprehend or arrest it. And therefore also it cannot be outlawed; for outlawry always supposes a precedent right of arresting, which has been defeated by the parties absconding, and that also a corporation cannot do: for which reasons the proceedings to compel a corporation to appear to any suit by attorney are always by distress on their lands and goods<sup>l</sup>. Neither can a corporation be excommunicated; for it has no soul, as is gravely observed by sir Edward Coke<sup>m</sup>: and therefore also it is not liable to be summoned into the ecclesiastical courts upon any account; for those courts act only pro salute animae [for the health of the soul], and their sentences can only be enforced by spiritual censures: a consideration, which, carried to its full extent, would alone demonstrate the impropriety of these courts interfering in any temporal rights whatsoever.

465

THERE are also other incidents and powers, which belong to some sort of corporations, and not to others. An aggregate corporation may take goods and chattels for the benefit of themselves and their successors, but a sole corporation cannot<sup>n</sup>: for such moveable property is liable to be lost or imbezzled, and would raise a multitude of disputes between the successor and executor; which the law is careful to avoid. In ecclesiastical and eleemosynary foundations, the king or the founder may give them rules, laws, statutes, and ordinances, which they are bound to observe: but corporations merely lay, constituted for civil purposes, are subject to no particular statutes; but to the common law, and to their own by-laws, not contrary to the laws

<sup>f</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 32.

<sup>g</sup> Bro. Abr. tit. Corporation. 63.

<sup>h</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 32.

<sup>i</sup> The civil law also ordains <11> that, in any misbehaviour of a body corporate, the directors only shall be answerable in their personal capacity, and not the corporation. Ff. 4. 3. 15.

<sup>k</sup> [Croft v Howel] [1] Plowd. 538.

<sup>l</sup> Bro. Abr. tit. Corporation. 11. Outlawry. 72.

<sup>m</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 32.

<sup>n</sup> Co. Litt. 46.

of the realm<sup>o</sup>. Aggregate corporations also, that have by their constitution a head, as a dean, warden, master, or the like, cannot do any acts during the vacancy of the headship, except only appointing another: neither are they then capable of receiving 466 a grant; for such corporation is incomplete without a head<sup>p</sup>. But there may be a corporation aggregate constituted without a head<sup>q</sup>: as the collegiate church of Southwell in Nottinghamshire, which consists only of prebendaries; and the governors of the Charter-house, London, who have no president or superior, but are all of equal authority. In aggregate corporations also, the act of the major part is esteemed the act of the whole<sup>r</sup>. By the civil law this major part must have consisted of two thirds of the whole; else no act could be performed<sup>s</sup>: which perhaps may be one reason why they required three at least to make a corporation. But, with us, any majority is sufficient to determine the act of the whole body. And whereas, notwithstanding the law stood thus, some founders of corporations had made statutes in derogation of the common law, making very frequently the unanimous assent of the society to be necessary to any corporate act; (which king Henry VIII found to be a great obstruction to his projected scheme of obtaining a surrender of the lands of ecclesiastical corporations) it was therefore enacted by statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 27. that all private statutes shall be utterly void, whereby any grant or election, made by the head, with the concurrence of the major part of the body, is liable to be obstructed by any one or more, being the minority: but this statute extends not to any negative or necessary voice, given by the founder to the head of any such society.

We before observed that it was incident to every corporation, to have a capacity to purchase lands for themselves and successors: and this is regularly true at the common law<sup>t</sup>. But they are excepted out of the statute of wills<sup>u</sup>; so that no devise of lands to a corporation by will is good: except for charitable uses, (13) by statute 43 Eliz. c. 4<sup>w</sup>. And also, by a great variety of statutes<sup>x</sup>, their privilege even of purchasing from any living grantor (14) is greatly abridged; so that now a corporation, either 467 ecclesiastical or lay, must have a licence from the king to purchase<sup>y</sup>, before they can exert that capacity which is vested in them by the common law: nor is even this in all cases sufficient. These statutes are generally called the statutes of mortmain [dead-hand]; all purchases made by corporate bodies being said to be purchases in mortmain, in mortua manu [in a dead hand]: for the reason of which appellation sir Edward Coke<sup>z</sup> offers many conjectures; but there is one which seems more probable

<sup>o</sup> [Philips v Bury] Lord Raym. 8.

<sup>p</sup> Co. Litt. 263, 264.

<sup>q</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 30.

<sup>r</sup> Bro. Abr. tit. Corporation. 31, 34.

<sup>s</sup> Ef. 3. 4. 3.

<sup>t</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 30.

<sup>u</sup> 34 Hen. VIII. c. 5.

<sup>w</sup> [Collison's case] Hob. 136.

<sup>x</sup> From magna carta, 9 Hen. III. c. 36. to 9 Geo. II. c. 36.

<sup>y</sup> By the civil law a corporation was incapable of taking lands, unless by special privilege from the emperor: collegium, si nullo speciali privilegio subnixum sit, haereditatem capere non posse, dubium non est. [There is no doubt that a corporation cannot take an inheritance unless by special privilege.] Cod. 6. 24. 8.

<sup>z</sup> 1 Inst. 2.

than any that he has given us: viz. that these purchases being usually made by ecclesiastical bodies, the members of which (being professed) were reckoned dead persons in law, land therefore, holden by them, might with great propriety be said to be held in mortua manu.

I SHALL defer the more particular exposition of these statutes of mortmain, till the next book of these commentaries, when we shall consider the nature and tenures of estates; and also the exposition of those disabling statutes of queen Elizabeth,<sup>1</sup> which restrain spiritual and eleemosynary corporations from aliening such lands as they (15) are present in legal possession of: only mentioning them in this place, for the sake of regularity, as statutable incapacities incident and relative to corporations.

THE general duties of all bodies politic, considered in their corporate capacity, may, like those of natural persons, be reduced to this single one; that of acting up to the end or design, whatever it be, for which they were created by their founder.

III. I PROCEED therefore next to enquire, how these corporations may be visited. For corporations being composed of individuals, subject to human frailties, are liable, as well as private persons, to deviate from the end of their institution. And for that reason the law has provided proper persons to visit, enquire into, and correct all irregularities that arise in such corporations, either sole or aggregate, and whether ecclesiastical, civil, or eleemosynary. With regard to all ecclesiastical corporations, the ordinary is their visitor, so constituted by the canon law, and from thence derived to us. The pope formerly, and now the king, as supreme ordinary, is the visitor of the arch-bishop or metropolitan; the metropolitan has the charge and coercion of all his suffragan bishops; and the bishops in their several (16) dioceses are the visitors of all deans and chapters, of all parsons and vicars, and of all other spiritual corporations. With respect to all lay corporations, the founder, his heirs, or assigns, are the visitors, whether the foundation be civil or eleemosynary; for in a lay incorporation the ordinary neither can nor ought to visit<sup>a</sup>.

468

I KNOW it is generally said, that civil corporations are subject to no visitation, but merely to the common law of the land; and this shall be presently explained. But first, as I have laid it down as a rule that the founder, his heirs, or assigns, are the visitors of all lay-corporations, let us enquire what is meant by the founder. The founder of all corporations in the strictest and original sense is the king alone, for he only can incorporate a society: and in civil incorporations, such as mayor and commonalty, &c, where there are no possessions or endowments given to the body, there is no other founder but the king: but in eleemosynary foundations, such as colleges and hospitals, where there is an endowment of lands, the law distinguishes, and makes two species of foundation; the one fundatio incipiens [the first stage of a foundation], or the incorporation, in which sense the king is the general founder of all colleges and hospitals; the other fundatio perficiens [making effective of a foundation], or the dotation<sup>2</sup> of it, in which sense the first gift of the revenues is the foundation, and he who gives them is in law the founder: and it is in this last sense that we generally call a man the founder of a college or hospital<sup>b</sup>. But here the king has his prerogative: for, if the king and a private man join in endowing an eleemosynary foundation, the king alone shall be the founder of it. And, in general, the king being the sole founder of all 469 civil corporations, and the endower the perficient founder of all eleemosynary ones, the right of visitation of the former results, according to the rule laid down, to the king; and of the latter, to the patron or endower.

<sup>a</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep. 31.

<sup>1</sup> e.g. 18 Eliz. c. 6; 39 Eliz. c. 5; 43 Eliz. c. 4. See generally II. 182–6.

<sup>2</sup> Dotation: endowment.

THE king being thus constituted by law the visitor of all civil corporations, the law has also appointed the place, wherein he shall exercise this jurisdiction: which is the court of king's bench; where, and where only, all misbehaviours of this kind of corporations are enquired into and redressed, and all their controversies decided. And this is what I understand to be the meaning of our lawyers, when they say that these civil corporations are liable to no visitation; that is, that the law having by immemorial usage appointed them to be visited and inspected by the king their founder, in his majesty's court of king's bench, according to the rules of the common law, they ought not to be visited elsewhere, or by any other (17) authority. And this is so strictly true, that though the king by his letters patent had subjected the college of physicians to the visitation of four very respectable persons, the lord chancellor, the two chief justices, and the chief baron; though the college had accepted this charter with all possible marks of acquiescence, and had acted under it for near a century; yet, in 1753, the authority of this provision coming in dispute, on an appeal preferred to these supposed visitors, they directed the legality of their own appointment to be argued: and, as this college was a mere civil, and not an eleemosynary foundation, they at length determined, upon several days solemn debate, that they had no jurisdiction as visitors; and remitted the appellant (if aggrieved) to his regular remedy in his majesty's court of king's bench.

As to eleemosynary corporations, by the dotation the founder and his heirs are of common right the legal visitors, (18) to see that that property is rightly employed, (19) which would otherwise have descended to the visitor himself: but, if the founder has appointed and assigned any other person to be visitor, then his assignee so appointed 470 is invested with all the founder's power, in exclusion of his heir. Eleemosynary corporations are chiefly hospitals, or colleges in the university. These were all of them considered by the popish clergy, as of mere ecclesiastical jurisdiction: however, the law of the land judged otherwise; and, with regard to hospitals, it has long been held<sup>c</sup>, that if the hospital be spiritual, the bishop shall visit; but if lay, the patron. This right of lay patrons was indeed abridged by statute 2 Hen. V. c. 1. which ordained, that the ordinary should visit all hospitals founded by subjects; though the king's right was reserved, to visit by his commissioners such as were of royal foundation. But the subject's right was in part restored by statute 14 Eliz. c. 5. which directs the bishop to visit such hospitals only, where no visitor is appointed by the founders thereof: and all the hospitals founded by virtue of the statute 39 Eliz. c. 5. are to be visited by such persons as shall be nominated by the respective founders. But still, if the founder appoints nobody, the bishop of the diocese must visit<sup>d</sup>.

<sup>b</sup> [Sutton's Hospital case] 10 Rep 33.

<sup>c</sup> Yearbook, 8 Edw. III. 28. 8 Ass. 29 [recte Mich. 8 Edw. III, f. 69, pl. 37].

COLLEGES in the universities (whatever the common law may now, or might formerly, judge) were certainly considered by the popish clergy, under whose direction they were, as ecclesiastical, or at least as clerical, corporations; and therefore the right of visitation was claimed by the ordinary of the diocese. This is evident, because in many of our most antient colleges, where the founder had a mind to subject them to a visitor of his own nomination, he obtained for that purpose a papal bulle to exempt them from the jurisdiction of the ordinary; several of which are still preserved in the archives of the respective societies. <20> And I have reason to believe, that in one of our colleges, (wherein the bishop of that diocese, in which Oxford was formerly comprized, has immemorially exercised visitatorial authority) there is no special visitor appointed by the college statutes: so that the bishop's interposition can be ascribed to nothing else, but his supposed title as ordinary to visit this, among other ecclesiastical foundations. And it is not impossible, that the number of colleges in Cambridge, which are visited 471 by the bishop of Ely, may in part be derived from the same original.

BUT, whatever might be formerly the opinion of the clergy, it is now held as established common law, that colleges are lay-corporations, though sometimes totally composed of ecclesiastical persons; and that the right of visitation does not arise from any principles of the canon law, but of necessity was created by the common law<sup>e</sup>. And yet the power and jurisdiction of visitors in colleges was left so much in the dark at common law, that the whole doctrine was very unsettled <21> till king William's time; in the sixth year of whose reign, the famous case of Philips and Bury happened<sup>f</sup>. In this the main question was, whether the sentence of the bishop of Exeter, who (as visitor) had deprived doctor Bury the rector of Exeter college,<sup>3</sup> could be examined and redressed by the court of king's bench. And the three puisne judges were of opinion, that it might be reviewed, for that the visitor's jurisdiction could not exclude the common law; and accordingly judgment was given in that court. But the lord chief justice, Holt, was of a contrary opinion; and held, that by the common law the office of visitor is to judge according to the statutes of the college, and to expel and deprive upon just occasions, and to hear all appeals of course; and that from him, and him only, the party grieved ought to have redress; the founder having reposed in him so entire a confidence, that he will administer justice impartially, that his determinations are final, and examinable in no other court whatsoever. And, upon this, a writ of error being <22> brought in the house of lords, <23> they reversed the judgment of the court of king's bench, and concurred in sir John Holt's opinion. And to this leading case all subsequent determinations have been conformable. But,

<sup>d</sup> 2 Inst. 725.

<sup>e</sup> [Philips v Bury] Lord Raym. 8.

<sup>f</sup> [Philips v Bury] Lord Raym. 5. 4 Mod. 106. Shower. 35. Skinn. 407. [1] Salk. 403. Carthew. 180.

<sup>3</sup> Sir Jonathan Trelawny, bart, bishop of Exeter and visitor of Exeter College, Oxford, deprived Dr Arthur Bury in 1690 after Bury refused him entry to the college. Bury's radical tract The Naked Gospel (1690) sparked the Trinitarian controversy, an extended pamphlet debate over the divine nature of Christ which divided high church clergy and latitudinarians like Bury.

where the visitor is under a temporary disability, there the court of king's bench will interpose, to prevent a defect of <24> justice. Thus the bishop of Chester is visitor of 472 Manchester college: but, happening also to be warden, the court held that his power was suspended during the union of those offices; and therefore issued a peremptory mandamus [we command]<sup>g</sup> to him, as warden, to admit a person intitled to a chaplainship<sup>h</sup>. Also it is said<sup>i</sup>, that if a founder of an eleemosynary foundation appoints a visitor, and limits his jurisdiction by rules and statutes, if the visitor in his sentence exceeds those rules, an action lies against him; but it is otherwise, where he mistakes in a thing within his power.

IV. WE come now, in the last place, to consider how corporations may be dissolved. Any particular member may be disfranchised, or lose his place in the corporation, by acting contrary to the laws of the society, or the laws of the land; or he may resign it by his own voluntary act<sup>j</sup>. But the body politic may also itself be dissolved in several ways; which dissolution is the civil death of the corporation: and in this case their lands and tenements shall revert to the person, or his heirs, who granted them to the corporation; for the law doth annex a condition to every such grant, that if the corporation be dissolved, the grantor shall have the lands again, because the cause of the grant faileth<sup>k</sup>. The grant is indeed only during the life of the corporation; which may endure for ever: but, when that life is determined by the dissolution of the body politic, the grantor takes it back by reversion, as in the case of every other grant for <25> life. And hence it appears how injurious, as well to private as public rights, those statutes were, which vested in king Henry VIII, instead of the heirs of the founder, the lands of the dissolved monasteries. The debts of a corporation, either to or from it, are totally extinguished by its dissolution; so that the members thereof cannot recover, or be charged with them, in their natural capacities<sup>l</sup>: agreeable to that maxim of the civil law<sup>m</sup>, "si quid universitati debetur, singulis non debetur, nec quod debet universitas, singuli debent [whatever be due to a foundation, is not due to each member singly; nor is each singly answerable for the debts due from the foundation]."

473 A CORPORATION may be dissolved, 1. By act of parliament, which is boundless in its operations; 2. By the natural death of all its members, in case of an aggregate corporation; 3. By surrender of its franchises into the hands of the king, which is a kind of suicide; 4. By forfeiture of its charter, through negligence or abuse of its franchises; in which case the law judges that the body politic has broken the condition upon which it was incorporated, and thereupon the incorporation is void. And the regular course is <26> to bring a writ of quo warranto, to enquire by what warrant the members now exercise their corporate power, having forfeited it by such and such proceedings. The exertion of this act of law, for the purposes of the state, in the reigns

<sup>g</sup> [R. v Bishop of Chester] [2] Stra. 797.

<sup>h</sup> [Gwinne v Poole] 2 Lutw. 1566.

<sup>i</sup> [James Bagg's Case] 11 Rep. 98.

<sup>k</sup> Co. Litt. 13.

<sup>l</sup> [Edmunds v Brown and Tillard] 1 Lev. 237.

<sup>m</sup> Ef. 3. 4. 7.

<sup>4</sup> For this judicial writ, see further III. 74–5, 176.

of king Charles and king James the second, particularly by seising the charter of the city of London, gave great and just offence; though perhaps, in strictness of law, <27> the proceedings were sufficiently regular: <28> but now<sup>n</sup> it is enacted, that the charter of the city of London shall never more be forfeited for any cause whatsoever. And, because by the common law corporations were dissolved, in case the mayor or head officer was not duly elected on the day appointed in the charter or established by prescription, it is now provided<sup>o</sup>, that for the future no corporation shall be dissolved upon that account; and ample directions are given for appointing a new officer, in case there be no election, or a void one, made upon the charter or prescriptive day.

The End of the First Book.

<sup>n</sup> Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 8.

<sup>o</sup> Stat. 11 Geo. I. c. 4.

Varia

Preface

⟨1⟩ [ed. 4: final two paragraphs omitted]

⟨2⟩ [ed. 2] 2 Nov. 1765 | 2 Nov. 1765. POSTSCRIPT. UPON a careful revisal of the former edition of this volume, the author hath found it necessary to supply some omissions and correct many errors, partly from his own observation, and partly pointed out to him by the candor of his learned friends. These he once had intended to publish separately, as a supplement to the former impression; but found them sometimes too minute, and in general too much interwoven with the body of the work, to be easily distinguished and extracted. An undertaking of this nature must always be open to improvement: but he hopes, that the subsequent volumes will stand in less need of correction.

2 Nov. 1766

[ed. 3: previous paragraph omitted]

[ed. 8] POSTSCRIPT. Notwithstanding the diffidence expressed in the foregoing preface, no sooner was the work completed, but many of its positions were vehemently attacked by zealots of all (even opposite) denominations, religious as well as civil; by some with a greater, by others with a less, degree of acrimony. To such of these animadvertisers as have fallen within the author's notice (for he doubts not but some have escaped it) he owes at least this obligation; that they have occasioned him from time to time to revise his work in respect to the particulars objected to; to retract or expunge from it what appeared to be really erroneous; to amend or supply it when inaccurate or defective; to illustrate and explain it when obscure. But, where he thought the objections ill founded, he hath left and shall leave the book to defend itself, being fully of opinion that, if his principles be false and his doctrines unwarrantable, no apology from himself can make them right; if founded in truth and rectitude, no censure from others can make them wrong.

[ed. 9] ADVERTISEMENT concerning this ninth edition. The editor judges it indispensable to preserve the author's text intire. The alterations which will be found therein, since the publication of the last edition, were made by the author himself, as may appear from a corrected copy in his own handwriting [Footnote: To be seen, at Mr Cadell's in the Strand]. What the editor hath chiefly attended to is, to note the alterations made by subsequent acts of parliament. These, together with some few other necessary observations, in order to prevent confusion, are inserted separate and distinct at the bottom of the page.

R. I. BURN.

July 20, 1783.

Introduction Section 1

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 4] and constitutions of | and constitution of
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 2] they are frequently to | they have frequently a right to
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] is really amazing | is perfectly amazing
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 5] about a hundred and fourscore | about an hundred and fourscore
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 5] les chanoines les eglises cathedraulx | les chanoines des eglises cathedraulx
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] Domat's treatise of laws | Domat's treatise of law
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] nor caring to take the oath | not caring to take the oath
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 4] But as this long usage | But as the long usage
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 5] of ignorance in the laws | of ignorance of the laws
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 8] and as by this means | and as by these means
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 4] The incident I mean | The incident which I mean
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 2] The first mention I have met with | The first mention which I have met with
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 7] ibid. | 3 Rep. pref.
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] they grow to ripeness so are they | they grew to ripeness so were they
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] there are now very rarely | there are very rarely
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 4] just enumerated | just now enumerated
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] gives us a very | has given us a very
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] to drop all liberal education, as of no use to lawyers; and to place them | to drop all liberal education, as of no use to students in the law; but to place them [ed. 4: of dropping all liberal education, as of no use to students in the law: and placing them]
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] The four highest offices in the law | The four highest judicial offices
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 4] Tibi, princeps [...] perfrueris. c. 8. | De laud. Leg. c. 8.

Introduction Section 2

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 2] to every one its due | to every one his due
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 7] attained than | obtained than
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 8] own happiness | own true and substantial happiness
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] is (humanly speaking) of infinitely more authority than what we generally call the | is of infinitely more authenticity than that moral system, which is framed by ethical writers, and denominated the
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 9] both communities are equally subject | all the communities are equally subject

- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] an action is committed | an action (indifferent in itself) is committed
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 8] will naturally lead us | may lead us
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 8] society; and that | society either natural or civil; but that
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 8] which every day extended its limits | which, every day extending its limits, laid the first though imperfect rudiments of civil or political society
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 8] the cement, of society | the cement of civil society
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 8] society is once formed, government results | civil society is once formed, government at the same time results
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 4] were constituted | be constituted
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 8] of society are naturally equal | which compose this society were naturally equal
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 8] the members | the free members
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 8] pleases | pleases; by constituting one, or a few, or many executive magistrates
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 9] execution | discharge
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 8] any, all the sinews of government being knit | any; for by the entire conjunction of the legislative and executive powers all the sinews of government are knit
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 8] which was originally | which (upon the supposition of an original contract, either actual or implied) is presumed to have been originally
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 4] would be reduced to a state | are thereby reduced to a state
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 8] therefore the state establishes | it is therefore incumbent on the state to establish
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 9] the crime of robbery | a trespass or a theft
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 2] omit it | omit them
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 4] held, it is true, and very justly | true, it hath been holden, and very justly
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 7] merely, annexing a penalty to noncompliance | merely, without any intermixture of moral guilt, annexing a penalty to non-compliance [Footnote: See Vol. II. page 420. [II. 285]]
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 7] that kills a hare. | that kills a hare, and against every person who possesses a partridge in August. And so too, by other statutes, pecuniary penalties are inflicted for exercising trades without serving an apprenticeship thereto, for erecting cottages without annexing four acres of land to each [ed. 8 deletes 'for erecting cottages without annexing four acres of land to each'], for not burying the dead in woollen, for not performing statute-work on the public roads, and for innumerable other positive misdemeanors.
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 7] Now this prohibitory law does not make the transgression a moral offence: the only obligation in conscience is to submit to the penalty if levied.

| Now these prohibitory laws do not make the transgression a moral offence, or sin: the only obligation in conscience is to submit to the penalty, if levied. It must however be observed, that we are here speaking of laws that are simply and purely penal, where the thing forbidden or enjoined is wholly a matter of indifference, and where the penalty inflicted is an adequate compensation for the civil inconvenience supposed to arise from the offence. But where disobedience to the law involves in it also any degree of public mischief or private injury, there it falls within our former distinction, and is also an offence against conscience. [Footnote: Lex pure poenalis obligat tantum ad poenam, non item ad culpam: lex poenalis mixta et ad culpam obligat, et ad poenam. [The object of a law purely penal regards the punishment solely, not the crime also: a mixed penal law involves both the crime and punishment.] (Sanderson de conscient. obligat. prael. viii. §. 17. 24.)]

- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 9] descendants. Lastly, where words are clearly repugnant in two laws, the later law takes place of the elder: leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant is a maxim of universal law, as well as of our own constitutions. And accordingly it was laid down by a law of the twelve tables at Rome, quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto. 2. If words | descendants. [text deleted] 2. If words
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 2] to vacant benefices by the pope | to benefices by the pope
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 9] the rhetorical treatise | the treatise
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 2] of excepting those circumstances | of defining those circumstances
- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 2] excepted. | expressed.
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 4] de aequitate | de aequitate. §. 3

Introduction Section 3

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 9] that the nations | because the nations
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 9] first historians | early historians
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] the seat of that piratical people | the part most exposed to the visits of that piratical people
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] nations, formed | nations, which were formed
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] unless sealed | unless sealed and delivered
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 8] the depositary of the laws | the depositaries of the laws
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 8] contrary to the divine law | clearly contrary to the divine law
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] blood (i.e. where they have only one parent the same, and the other different) shall | blood shall
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 4] though the reason | though the artificial reason
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 5] reporters | reporters [Footnote: Pat. 15 Jac. I. p. 18. 17 Rym. 26.]

- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 9] Littleton and Fitzherbert | Hengham and Littleton, Statham, Brooke, Fitzherbert, and Staundforde
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 2] we observed, was paid | we observed, is paid
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] the written law is deficient. | the written law was deficient.
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] matters; which are all contrary to the general law of the land, and are good only by special custom, though those of | matters. All these are contrary to the general law of the land, and are good only by special usage, though the customs of
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] different from the common law, is allowed for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions; the maxim of law being, that | different from the general rules of the common law, is yet ingrafted into it, and made a part of it [Footnote: [Vanheath v Turner] Winch. 24.]; being allowed, for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions: for it is a maxim of law, that
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 2] Co. Litt. 175 b. | Co. Litt. 175.
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] Co. Litt. 113 b. | Co. Litt. 113.
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] I have a right of way by custom over another's field, the custom is not destroyed, though I do not pass over it | the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool, the custom is not destroyed, though they do not use it
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] Co. Litt. 114 b. | Ibid. 114.
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 2] Co. Litt. 15 b. | Co. Litt. 15.
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 9] imperial constitutions | imperial constitutions, in twelve books
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 7] Romish ecclesiastics | Roman ecclesiastics
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 2] pandects at Amalfi, reduced them into | pandects, reduced the ecclesiastical constitutions also into
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 2] pope Adrian IV | pope Clement IV
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 8] these the judges | these (which are not promulgated with the same notoriety as the former) the judges
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 9] unlearned judges | unlearned (or even learned) judges
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 4] restraining statute of the 13 Eliz. | restraining statute of 13 Eliz. c. 10.
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 2] 3 Rep. 7 b. | 3 Rep. 7.
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 7] bishop's life | bishop's continuance in his see
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 2] dean with concurrence of his chapter | dean and chapter
- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 7] during the life of the dean | during the continuance of the dean
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 7] Co. Litt. 45. 3 Rep. 60. | Co. Litt. 45. 3 Rep. 60. [Bishop of Salisbury's case] 10 Rep. 58.
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 7] after the death | after the determination of the interest

- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 2] of the grantor | of the grantors
- ⟨35⟩ [ed. 7] during their lives | during their continuance
- ⟨36⟩ [ed. 2] Bac. Elem. | 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 33. Bac. Elem.
- ⟨37⟩ [ed. 9] the general principle laid down in the last section, that, “leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant.” | a general principle of universal law, that, “leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant.” consonant to which it was laid down by a law of the twelve tables at Rome, that “quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto.” [‘What the people have last enacted, let that be the settled law.’]
- ⟨38⟩ [ed. 9] matter necessarily implies | matter is so clearly repugnant, that it necessarily implies
- ⟨39⟩ [ed. 8] statute comes and says, | statute afterwards enacts, that
- ⟨40⟩ [ed. 8] the present parliament | a subsequent parliament
- ⟨41⟩ [ed. 9] power that can control | power in the ordinary forms of the constitution, that is vested with authority to control
- ⟨42⟩ [ed. 4] that there are courts of this kind established for the benefit of the subject, to correct and soften the rigor of the law, when through its generality it bears too hard in particular cases; to detect and punish latent frauds, which the law is not minute enough to reach; to enforce the execution of such matters of trust and confidence, as are binding in conscience, though perhaps not strictly legal; to deliver from such dangers as are owing to misfortune or oversight; and, in short, to relieve in all such cases as are, bona fide, objects of relief. | that (besides the liberality of sentiment with which our common law judges interpret acts of parliament, and such rules of the unwritten law as are not of a positive kind) there are also [ed. 9: peculiar] courts of equity established for the benefit of the subject, to detect latent frauds and concealments, which the process of the courts of law is not adapted to reach; to enforce the execution of such matters of trust and confidence, as are binding in conscience, though not cognizable in a court of law; to deliver from such dangers as are owing to misfortune or oversight; and to give a more specific relief, and more adapted to the circumstances of the case, than can always be obtained by the generality of the rules of the positive or common law.

Introduction Section 4

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 2] entirely annexed | entirely re-annexed (by a kind of feodal resumption)
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 4] statute of Rutland | statute of Rhudhlan
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 4] above a century | above a century more
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] similar that of Glanvill | similar to that of Glanvill

- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 5] 1707, 5 Anne; | 1707, 6 Anne;
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] but an infringement | unless perhaps an infringement | [ed. 5: except the mutual consent of both, or the successful resistance of either, upon apprehending an infringement]
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] “fundamental and essential conditions of the union | “fundamental and essential conditions of the union [Footnote: It may justly be doubted, whether even such an infringement (though a manifest breach of good faith, unless done upon the most pressing necessity) would consequentially dissolve [ed. 5: would of itself dissolve] the union: for the bare idea of a state, without a power somewhere vested to alter every part of its laws, is the height of political absurdity. The truth seems to be, that in such an incorporate union (which is well distinguished by a very learned prelate [i.e. William Warburton (1698–1779), bishop of Gloucester and author of The Alliance between Church and State (1736)] from a foederate alliance, where such an infringement would certainly rescind the compact) the two contracting states are totally annihilated, without any power of revival; and a third arises from their conjunction, in which all the rights of sovereignty, and particularly that of legislation, must of necessity reside. (See Warburton’s alliance. 195.) But the [ed. 5: wanton or] imprudent exertion of this right would probably raise a very alarming ferment in the minds of individuals, and therefore it is hinted above that such an attempt might endanger (though not certainly destroy [ed. 5: though by no means destroy]) the union.]
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 5] church of England, would be | church of England, (unless with the consent of the respective churches, collectively or representatively given) would be
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] The town of Berwick upon Tweed, though subject to the crown of England ever since the conquest of it in the reign of Edward IV, is not part of the kingdom of England, nor subject to the common law; though it is subject to all acts of parliament, being represented by burgesses therein. | The town of Berwick upon Tweed was originally part of the kingdom of Scotland; and, as such, was for a time reduced by king Edward I into the possession of the crown of England: and, during such its subjection, it received from that prince a charter, which (after its subsequent cession by Edward Balliol, to be for ever united to the crown and realm of England) was confirmed by king Edward III, with some additions; particularly that it should be governed by the laws and usages which it enjoyed during the time of king Alexander, that is, before its reduction by Edward I. Its constitution was new-modelled, and put upon an English footing by a charter of king James I: and all its liberties, franchises, and customs, were confirmed in parliament by the statutes 22 Edw. IV. c. 8. and 2 Jac. I. c. 28. Though therefore it hath some local peculiarities, derived from the antient laws of Scotland, yet it is clearly part of the realm of England, being represented by burgesses in the house of commons, and bound by all acts of the British parliament, whether specially named or otherwise.

- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] it was declared | it was (perhaps superfluously) declared
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] But the general law there used is the Scots law, and the ordinary process of the courts of Westminster-hall is there of no authority. | And, though certain of the king's writs or processes of the courts of Westminster do not usually run into Berwick, any more than the principality of Wales, yet it hath been solemnly adjudged [Footnote: [Richard Bourn's case] Cro. Jac. 543. 2 Roll. Abr. 292. Stat. 11 Geo. I. c. 4. [R. v Cowle] 4 [recte 2] Burr. 834.] that all prerogative writs (as those of mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, &c,) may issue to Berwick as well as to every other of the dominions of the crown of England, and that indictments and other local matters arising in the town of Berwick may be tried by a jury of the county of Northumberland.
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 2] 1 Sid. 382, 2 Show. 365. | Hale. Hist. C. L. 183. 1 Sid. 382. [Crispe and Jackson v Mayor of Berwick] [1 Sid.] 462. [Mayor of Berwick's case] 2 Show. 365.
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] at which time they carried over the English laws along with them | and the laws of England were then received and sworn to by the Irish nation, assembled at the council of Lismore [Footnote: Pryn. on 4 Inst. 249.]
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] Vaugh. 294. 2 Pryn. Rec. 85. | Vaugh. 294. 2 Pryn. Rec. 85. [Calvin's case] 7 Rep. 23.
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] 1 Inst. 341. | 1 Inst. 141.
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 2] of which character is alone allowed it under Edward | of this character is alone ascribed to it, by the laws before-cited of Edward
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] the reason given in the year book: | the reason given in the year books: "a tax granted by the parliament of England shall not bind those of Ireland, because they are not summoned to our parliament:" and again,
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] 2 Ric. III. pl. 12. | 20 Hen. VI. 8. 2 Ric. III. 12.
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] send representatives to our parliament | send knights to our parliament
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 2] the king's subjection." The | the king's subjection." The general run of laws, enacted by the superior state, are supposed to be calculated for its own internal government, and do not extend to its distant dependent countries; which, bearing no part in the legislature, are not therefore in its ordinary and daily contemplation. But, when the sovereign legislative power sees it necessary to extend its care to any of its subordinate dominions, and mentions them expressly by name or includes them under general words, there can be no doubt but then they are bound by its laws. [Footnote: Yearbook 1 Hen. VII. 3. 7 Rep. 22. Calvin's case.] The
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 2] The method made use of in Ireland, as stated by sir Edward Coke, of making statutes in their parliaments, according to Poynings' law, of which hereafter, is this: 1. The | The original method of passing statutes in Ireland was nearly the same as in England, the chief governor holding parliaments at his pleasure, which enacted such laws as they thought proper [Footnote: Irish Stat.

- 11 Eliz. st. 3. c. 8.] But an ill use being made of this liberty, particularly by lord Gormanstown, deputy-lieutenant in the reign of Edward IV [Footnote: Ibid. 10 Hen. VII. c. 23.], a set of statutes were there enacted in the 10 Hen. VII. (sir Edward Poynings being then lord deputy, whence they are called Poynings' laws) one of which [Footnote: cap. 4. expounded by 3 & 4 Ph. & M. c. 4.], in order to restrain the power as well of the deputy as the Irish parliament, provides, 1. The
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 2] 1. The lord lieutenant and council of Ireland must certify to the king under the great seal of Ireland the acts proposed to be passed. | 1. That, before any parliament be summoned or holden, the chief governor and council of Ireland shall certify to the king under the great seal of Ireland the considerations and causes thereof, and the articles of the acts proposed to be passed therein.
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 2] 2. The king and council of England are to consider, approve, alter, or reject the said acts; and certify them back again under the great seal of England. And then, 3. They are to be proposed, received, or rejected in the parliament of Ireland. By this means nothing was left to the parliament in Ireland, but a bare negative or power of rejecting, not of proposing, any law. | 2. That after the king, in his council of England, shall have considered, approved, or altered the said acts or any of them, and certified them back under the great seal of England, and shall have given licence to summon and hold a parliament, then the same shall be summoned and held; and therein the said acts so certified, and no other, shall be proposed, received, or rejected. But as this precluded any law from being proposed, but such as were preconceived before the parliament was in being, which occasioned many inconveniences and made frequent dissolutions necessary, it was provided by the statute of Philip and Mary before-cited, that any new propositions might be certified to England in the usual forms, even after the summons and during the session of parliament. By this means however there was nothing left to the parliament in Ireland, but a bare negative or power of rejecting, not of proposing or altering, any law.
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 2] in either house of parliament under the denomination of heads for a bill or bills; and in that shape they are offered to the consideration of the lord lieutenant and privy council, who then reject them at pleasure, without transmitting them to England. | in either house, under the denomination of "heads for a bill or bills;" and in that shape they are offered to the consideration of the lord lieutenant and privy council: who, upon such parliamentary intimation, or otherwise upon the application of private persons, receive and transmit such heads, or reject them without any transmission to England. And, with regard to Poynings' law in particular, it cannot be repealed or suspended, unless the bill for that purpose, before it be certified to England, be approved by both the houses. [Footnote: Irish Stat. 11 Eliz. st. 3. c. 38.]
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 2] therefore in the 10 Hen. VII. a set of statutes passed in Ireland, (sir Edward Poynings being then lord deputy, whence it is called Poynings' law) by which it was, among other things, enacted | therefore it was enacted by another of Poynings' laws [Footnote: cap. 22.]

- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 2] this superiority is the right of conquest: a right allowed by the law of nations, if not by that of nature; and founded upon a compact either expressly | this superiority, in the present case, is what we usually call, though somewhat improperly, the right of conquest: a right allowed by the law of nations, if not by that of nature; but which in reason and civil policy can mean nothing more, than that, in order to put an end to hostilities, a compact is either expressly
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 2] the appeal from all other courts in Ireland | the appeal from the chancery in Ireland
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 9] not of the crown of England. [Editorial footnote intervention by Burn [A]]:
Thus stood the matter till the 22d year of king Geo. III. The said statute of 6 Geo. I. c. 5. runs more at length thus: “Whereas the house of lords of Ireland have of late, against law, assumed to themselves a power and jurisdiction to examine, correct, and amend the judgments and decrees of the courts of justice in the kingdom of Ireland: therefore, for the better securing of the dependency of Ireland upon the crown of Great Britain, be it declared, that the said kingdom of Ireland hath been, is, and of right ought to be, subordinate unto and dependent upon the imperial crown of Great Britain, as being inseparably united and annexed there unto; and that the king’s majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons of Great Britain in parliament assembled, had, hath, and of right ought to have, full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient force and validity, to bind the kingdom and people of Ireland.—And be it further declared and enacted, that the house of lords of Ireland have not, nor of right ought to have, any jurisdiction, to judge of, affirm, or reverse any judgment, sentence, or decree, given or made in any court within the said kingdom; and that all proceedings before the said house of lords, upon any such judgment, sentence, or decree, are, and are hereby declared to be, utterly null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.”
- But by 22 Geo. III. c. 53. the said statute of 6 Geo. I. is repealed, in the words following: “Whereas an act was passed in the sixth year of the reign of his late majesty king Geo. I. intitled, “An act for the better securing the dependency of the kingdom of Ireland upon the crown of Great Britain,” may it please your most excellent majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the king’s most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lord spiritual and temporal and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this act, the abovementioned act, and the several matters and things therein contained, shall be, and is, and are hereby repealed.]
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 2] a convenient asylum | a commodious asylum
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 2] which purchase hath at length been completed in this present year 1765 | which purchase was at length completed in the year 1765
- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 2] For it is held, that if an uninhabited country be discovered and planted by English subjects, all the English laws are immediately there in force. For as the law is the birthright of every subject, so wherever they go they carry their laws with them. | For it hath been held, that if an uninhabited country be discovered and planted by English subjects, all the English laws then in being, which are the birthright of every subject, are immediately there in force. But this must be understood with very many and very great restrictions. Such colonists carry with them only so much of the English law, as is applicable to their own situation and the condition of an infant colony; such, for instance, as the general rules of inheritance, and of protection from personal injuries. The artificial refinements and distinctions incident to the property of a great and commercial people, the laws of police and revenue, (such especially as are enforced by penalties) the mode of maintenance for the established clergy, the jurisdiction of spiritual courts, and a multitude of other provisions, are neither necessary nor convenient for them, and therefore are not in force. What shall be admitted and what rejected, at what times, and under what restrictions, must, in case of dispute, be decided in the first instance by their own provincial judicature, subject to the revision and control of the king in council, the whole of their constitution being also liable to be new-modelled and reformed, by the general superintending power of the legislature in the mother country.

- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 2] named. The | named. With respect to their interior polity, our colonies are properly of three sorts. 1. Provincial establishments, the constitutions of which depend on the respective commissions issued by the crown to the governors, and the instructions which usually accompany those commissions; under the authority of which, provincial assemblies are constituted, with the power of making local ordinances, not repugnant to the laws of England. 2. Proprietary governments, granted out by the crown to individuals, in the nature of feudatory principalities, with all the inferior regalities, and subordinate powers of legislation, which formerly belonged to the owners of counties palatine: yet still with these express conditions, that the ends for which the grant was made be substantially pursued, and that nothing be attempted which may derogate from the sovereignty of the mother country. 3. Charter governments, in the nature of civil corporations, with the power of making by-laws for their own interior regulation, not contrary to the laws of England; and with such rights and authorities as are specially given them in their several charters of incorporation. The
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 2] effect. | effect. And, because several of the colonies had claimed the sole and exclusive right of imposing taxes upon themselves, the statute 6 Geo. III. c. 12. expressly declares, that all his majesty's colonies and plantations in America have been, are, and of right ought to be, subordinate to and dependent upon the imperial crown and parliament of Great Britain; who have full power and authority to make laws and statutes of sufficient validity to bind the colonies and people of America, subjects of the crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever. [ed. 4: effect. And, the province of New York having refused to comply with the directions of an act of parliament, for supplying the king's troops with necessaries, the subordinate legislative authority of the council and assembly of the province was suspended by statute 7 Geo. III. c. 59. till the directions of the act were complied with.]

[ed. 7] effect. And, this authority has been since very forcibly exemplified and carried into act, by the statute 7 Geo. III. c. 59. for suspending the legislation of New-York; and by the several statutes 14 Geo. III. c. 19. 39. 45. 54. 83. 88. for suspending the harbour of Boston, for suppressing riots in Massachuset's Bay, for regulating its government, for establishing the polity of Quebec, and for quartering troops in North-America.

[ed. 8] And, this authority has been since very forcibly exemplified and carried into act, by the statute 7 Geo. III. c. 59. for suspending the legislation of New-York and by several subsequent statutes.

- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 2] not only Wales, of which | not only Wales and Berwick, of which
- ⟨35⟩ [ed. 7] in which the souls under the care of one parson or vicar do inhabit. | which is committed to the charge of one parson, or vicar, or other minister, having cure of souls therein.
- ⟨36⟩ [ed. 7] These are computed | These districts are computed
- ⟨37⟩ [ed. 2] number | number [Footnote: Gibson's Britan.]
- ⟨38⟩ [ed. 9] then universally divided | then generally divided
- ⟨39⟩ [ed. 2] church. | church: yet extraparochial wastes and marsh-lands, when improved and drained, are by the statute 17 Geo. II. c. 37. to be assessed to all parochial rates in the parish next adjoining
- ⟨40⟩ [ed. 2] and had, each of them, originally a church and celebration of divine service, sacraments, and burials; which to have, or have had, separate to itself, is the essential distinction of a town, according to sir Edward Coke. | and are said to have had, each of them, originally a church and celebration of divine service, sacraments, and burials: though that seems to be rather an ecclesiastical, than a civil distinction.
- ⟨41⟩ [ed. 2] 1 Inst. 115 b. | 1 Inst. 115.
- ⟨42⟩ [ed. 2] Co. Litt. 109 b. | Co. Litt. 109.
- ⟨43⟩ [ed. 2] indeed this institution of hundreds | indeed something like this institution of hundreds
- ⟨44⟩ [ed. 2] England. For we read in Tacitus, that both the thing and the name were well known | England: for both the thing and the name, as a territorial assemblage of persons, from which afterwards the territory itself might probably receive its denomination, were well known
- ⟨45⟩ [ed. 2] de morib. | Tacit. de morib.
- ⟨46⟩ [ed. 5] and then duke of Lancaster | and then duke of Lancaster [Footnote: Pat. 25 Edw. III. p. 1. m. 18. Seld. ibid. Sandford's gen. hist. 112. 4 Inst. 204.]
- ⟨47⟩ [ed. 5] whose heiress John of Gant the king's son had married; and afterwards confirmed in parliament, to honour John of Gant himself, whom, on the death of his father-in-law, he had also created duke of Lancaster | whose heiress being married to John of Gant the king's son, the franchise was greatly enlarged and confirmed in parliament [Footnote: Cart. 36 Edw. III. n. 9.], to honour John of Gant himself, whom on the death of his father-in-law, the king had also created duke of Lancaster

- ⟨48⟩ [ed. 4] privileges were in all probability | privileges (so similar to the regal independent jurisdictions, usurped by the great barons on the continent, during the weak and infant state of the first feudal kingdoms in Europe [Footnote: Robertson. Cha. V. i. 60.]) were in all probability
- ⟨49⟩ [ed. 9] upon enemies countries, Wales and Scotland; in order that the owners, being encouraged by so large an authority, might be the more watchful in its defence; and that the inhabitants, having justice administered at home, might not be obliged to go out of the county, and leave it open to the enemies incursions. | upon inimical countries, Wales and Scotland: in order that the inhabitants, having justice administered at home, might not be obliged to go out of the county, and leave it open to the enemy's incursions; and that the owners, being encouraged by so large an authority, might be the more watchful in its defence.
- ⟨50⟩ [ed. 9] assumed the title of Henry IV | assumed the stile of king Henry IV
- ⟨51⟩ [ed. 5] [Case of the Duchy of Lancaster] [1 Plowd.] 215. | Pat. 51 Edw. III. m. 33. [Case of the Duchy of Lancaster] [1] Plowd. 215. 7 Rym. 138.
- ⟨52⟩ [ed. 5] in the first year of his reign, to keep it distinct and separate from the crown, and so it descended to his son, and grandson, Henry V, and Henry VI. | in the first year of his reign, ordaining that the duchy of Lancaster, and all other his hereditary estates, with all their royalties and franchises, should remain to him and his heirs for ever; and should remain, descend, be administered, and governed, in like manner as if he never had attained the regal dignity: and thus they descended to his son and grandson, Henry V and Henry VI; many new territories and privileges being annexed to the duchy by the former [Footnote: Parl. 2 Hen. V. n. 30. 3 Hen. V. n. 15.]
- ⟨53⟩ [ed. 5] an act was made to keep it still distinct and separate from other inheritances of the crown. | an act was made to incorporate the duchy of Lancaster, to continue the county palatine (which might otherwise have determined by the attainder [Footnote: [Fisher v Batten] 1 Ventr. 157.]) and to make the same parcel of the duchy: and, farther, to vest the whole in king Edward IV and his heirs, kings of England, for ever; but under a separate guiding and governance from the other inheritances of the crown.
- ⟨54⟩ [ed. 5] another act was made to vest the inheritance thereof in Henry VII and his heirs; and in this state, say sir Edward Coke and Lambard, viz. in the natural heirs or posterity of Henry VII, did the right of the duchy remain to their days; a separate and distinct inheritance from that of the crown of England. | another act was made, to resume such part of the duchy lands as had been dismembered from it in the reign of Edward IV, and to vest the inheritance of the whole in the king and his heirs for ever, as amply and largely, and in like manner, form, and condition, separate from the crown of England and possession of the same, as the three Henries and Edward IV, or any of them, had and held the same.

- ⟨55⟩ [ed. 2] If this notion of Lambard and Coke be well founded, it | If this notion of Lambard and Coke be well founded, (which is not altogether certain), it
- [ed. 5] If this notion of Lambard and Coke be well founded, (which is not altogether certain), it might have become a very curious question at the time of the revolution in 1688, in whom the right of the duchy remained after king James's abdication. The attainder indeed of the pretended prince of Wales (by statute 13 W. III. c. 3.) has now put the matter out of doubt. And yet, to give that attainder its full force in this respect, the object of it must have been supposed legitimate, else he had no interest to forfeit. | Some have entertained an opinion, ([Case of the Duchy of Lancaster] [1] Plowd. 220, 1, 2. Lamb. Archeion. 233. 4 Inst. 206.) that by this act the right of the duchy vested only in the natural, and not in the political person of king Henry VII, as formerly in that of Henry IV; and was descendible to his natural heirs, independent of the succession to the crown. And, if this notion were well founded, it might have become a very curious question at the time of the revolution in 1688, in whom the right of the duchy remained after king James's abdication, and previous to the attainder of the pretended prince of Wales. But it is observable, that in the same act the duchy of Cornwall is also vested in king Henry VII and his heirs; which could never be intended in any event to be separated from the inheritance of the crown. And indeed it seems to have been understood very early after the statute of Henry VII, that the duchy of Lancaster was by no means thereby made a separate inheritance from the rest of the royal patrimony; since it descended, with the crown, to the half-blood in the instances of queen Mary and queen Elizabeth: which it could not have done, as the estate of a mere duke of Lancaster, in the common course of legal descent. The better opinion therefore seems to be that of those judges, who held ([Case of the Duchy of Lancaster] [1] Plowd. 221.) that, notwithstanding the statute of Henry VII (which was only an act of resumption) the duchy still remained as established by the act of Edward IV; separate from the other possessions of the crown in order and government, but united in point of inheritance.
- ⟨56⟩ [ed. 9] have granted to be counties | have granted the privilege to be counties

Chapter 1

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 8] are laws destructive of liberty | are regulations destructive of liberty
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 9] indifferent; viz. a dress for the dead, who are all ordered to be buried in woollen; | indifferent, (a dress for the dead, who are all ordered to be buried in woollen)

- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] and with regard to all natural rights becomes eo instanti a freeman. | and so far becomes a freeman; though the master's right to his service may probably [ed. 4: possibly] still continue.
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] [2] Salk. 666. | [2] Salk. 666. See ch. 14.
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] the crown is limited | the crown was limited
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] But at present it is not looked upon in quite so atrocious a light, though it remains a very heinous misdemesnor. | But sir Edward Coke [ed. 9: But the modern law] doth not look upon this offence in quite so atrocious a light, but merely as a heinous misdemesnor.
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] 3 Inst. 90. | 3 Inst. 50.
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 4] the loss of which only amounts to mayhem | the loss of which alone amounts to mayhem
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] solemnities, are totally void in law, if | solemnities, may be afterwards avoided, if
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 9] which is either a civil or natural death | which was formerly accounted to be either a civil or natural death
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 9] The civil death commences if any man be banished the realm by the process of the common law, or enters into religion; that is, goes into a monastery, and becomes there a monk professed: in which cases he is absolutely dead in law, and his next heir shall have his estate. | The civil death commenced, if any man was banished or abjured the realm by the process of the common law, or entered into religion; that is, went into a monastery, and became there a monk professed: in which cases he was absolutely dead in law, and his next heir should have his estate.
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 9] man is entirely cut off from society; and such a monk, upon his profession, renounces solemnly | man was entirely cut off from society; and such a monk, upon his profession, renounced solemnly
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 8] the genius of the English law | the genius of the English laws
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] A monk is therefore accounted civiliter mortuus, and when he enters into religion may, like other dying men, make his testament and executors; or, if he makes none, the ordinary may grant | A monk was therefore accounted civiliter mortuus, and when he entered into religion might, like other dying men, make his testament and executors; or, if he made none, the ordinary might grant
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] administrators shall have the same power, and may bring the same actions for debts due to the religious, and are liable | administrators had the same power, and might bring the same actions for debts due to the religious, and were liable
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 2] Co. Litt. 133 b. | Co. Litt. 133.
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] a monk or religious is so effectually dead in law, that a lease made even to a third person, during the life (generally) of one who afterwards becomes a monk, determines by such | a monk or religious was so effectually dead in law,

- that a lease made even to a third person, during the life (generally) of one who afterwards became a monk, determined by such
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 9] other conveyances, for life, are usually made | other conveyances for life, were usually made
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] one's natural life. This | one's natural life. But, even in the times of popery, the law of England took no cognizance of profession in any foreign country, because the fact could not be tried in our courts [Footnote: Co. Litt. 132.]; and therefore, since the reformation, the disability is held to be abolished [Footnote: [R. v Lady Portington] 1 Salk. 162.]. [ed. 9: abolished [Footnote: 1 Salk. 162.]: as is also the disability of banishment, consequent upon abjuration, by statute 21 Jac. I. c. 28.] This
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 4] practiced by the crown | practiced by the crown [Footnote: I have been assured upon good authority, that, during the mild administration of cardinal Fleury [chief minister of Louis XV], above 54000 lettres de cachet were issued, upon the single ground of the famous bulle unigenitus.]
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 9] expedient. For the parliament only, or legislative power, whenever it sees proper | expedient: for it is the parliament only, or legislative power, that, whenever it sees proper
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 9] For exile, or transportation is a punishment unknown | For exile, and transportation, are punishments at present unknown
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 8] wherever it is now inflicted | whenever it is now inflicted [ed. 9: whenever the latter is now inflicted]
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 9] cannot have the benefit | cannot have the full benefit
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 2] even upon the public service: he | even upon the public service; excepting sailors and soldiers, the nature of whose employment necessarily implies an exception: he
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 2] 2 Inst. 47. | 2 Inst. 46.
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 2] See the historical introduction to the great charter, &c, sub anno 1297 | See the introduction to the great charter, (edit. Oxon.) sub anno 1297
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 9] principally as barriers | principally as outworks or barriers
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 9] it is impossible he should exceed them | it is impossible he should either mistake or legally exceed them
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 3] to do right | to do right; which is [ed. 4: also] made a part of their oath by 20 Edw. III.
- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 4] more than two persons | more than ten persons
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 8] and is indeed a public allowance | and it is indeed a public allowance
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 2] whereon it is founded | whereon they are founded
- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 8] the constitution of parliaments be supported | the constitution of parliament be supported

Chapter 2

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 8] itself (or colloquium, as some of our historians translate it) is comparatively of modern date, derived from the French, and signifying the place where they met | itself (parlement or colloquium, as some of our historians translate it) is comparatively of modern date; derived from the French, and signifying an assembly that met
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 2] Mod. Un. Hist. xxiii. 307. | Mod. Un. Hist. xxiii. 307. The first mention of it in our statute law is in the preamble to the statute of Westm. 1. 3 Edw. I. A.D. 1272 [recte 1275].
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] estates in France; for | estates in France [Footnote: These were assembled for the last time, A.D. 1561. See Whitelocke of Parl. c. 72.]; for [ed. 4] estates in France [Footnote: These were assembled for the last time, A.D. 1561. (See Whitelocke of parl. c. 72.) or according to Robertson, A.D. 1614. (Hist. Cha. V. i. 369.)]; for
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] justice, composed of judges and advocates; which | justice, consisting of the peers, certain dignified ecclesiastics, and judges; which
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 7] great councils were held regularly | great councils were occasionally held
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] learned antiquarians | learned antiquaries
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] the space of five hundred years | the space of at least five hundred years
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] too nice a scruple. | too nice a scruple. And yet, out of abundant caution, it was thought necessary to confirm its acts in the next parliament, by statute 13 Car. II. c. 7, & c. 14.
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] upon an apprehension that king James the second had abdicated the government, and that the throne was thereby vacant: which apprehension of theirs was | upon a full conviction that king James the second had abdicated the government, and that the throne was thereby vacant: which supposition of the individual members was
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] 4 Inst. 1. | 4 Inst. 1, 2. Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 3. Hale of Parl. 1.
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 9] the royal negative | the negative
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 2] king, which | king [Footnote: Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 30.], which
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] acting by themselves | acting by itself
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] baronies, the bishops obtained their seat in the house | baronies, which were unalienable from their respective dignities, the bishops and abbots obtained [ed. 5: were allowed] their seats in the house
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] in all our acts of parliament | in most of our acts of parliament
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 5] such intermixture binds both estates | such intermixture joins both estates

- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] estates. For | estates. And, from this want of a separate assembly and separate negative of the prelates, some writers have argued [Footnote: Whitelocke on Parliam. c. 72. Warburt. Alliance. b. 2. c. 3.] very cogently, that the lords spiritual and temporal are now in reality only one estate [Footnote: [Skewys v Chamond] Dyer. 60.]: which is unquestionably true in every effectual sense, though the antient distinction between them still nominally continues. For
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] there is no doubt of its being effectual | there is no doubt of its validity
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] Baronage. p.1. c. 6. | Baronage. p.1. c. 6. The act of uniformity, 1 Eliz. c. 2. [1558] was passed with the dissent of all the bishops; (Gibs. codex. 268. [ed. 5: Gibs. codex. 286.]) and therefore the stile of lords spiritual is omitted throughout the whole.
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 2] 2 Inst. 585, 6, 7. | 2 Inst. 585, 6, 7. See Keilw. 184; where it is holden by the judges, 7 Hen. VIII, that the king may hold a parliament without any spiritual lords. This was also exemplified in fact in the two first parliaments of Charles II; wherein no bishops were summoned, till after the repeal of the stat. 16 Car. I. c. 27. by stat. 13 Car. II. st. 1. c. 2.
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 8] though this sir Edward Coke seems to doubt of | though sir Edward Coke seems to doubt whether this would not be an ordinance, rather than an act, of parliament
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 9] men of any property | men of property
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 5] jurisdictionem | jurisdictionem
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 2] what they do | what the parliament doth
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 8] we cannot adopt it, nor argue from it | we cannot practically adopt it, nor take any legal steps for carrying it into execution
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 8] ineffectual. So | ineffectual [Footnote: See pag. 244 [I. 158].]. So
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 4] provided that no one shall sit or vote in either house of parliament, unless | provided by the custom and law of parliament, that no one shall sit or vote in either house, unless
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 4] This is expressly declared by statute 7 & 8 W. III. c. 25. with regard to the house of commons; though a minor was incapacitated before from sitting in either house, by the law and custom of parliament. | This is also expressly declared by statute 7 & 8 W. III. c. 25. with regard to the house of commons; doubts having arisen, from some contradictory adjudications, whether or no a minor was incapacitated from sitting in that house. [Footnote: Com. Journ. 16 Dec. 1690.]
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 4] 4 Inst. 47. | Whitelocke. c. 50. 4 Inst. 47.
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 4] To prevent crude innovations in religion and government, it is enacted by statute 30 Car. II. st. 2. and 1 Geo. I. c. 13. that | It is also enacted by statute 7 Jac. I. c. 6. that no member be permitted to enter the house of commons, till he hath taken the oath of allegiance before the lord steward or his deputy: and by 30 Car. II. st. 2. and 1 Geo. I. c. 13. that

- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 4] mass. To prevent dangers that may arise to the kingdom from foreign attachments, connexions, or dependencies, it is enacted by the 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2. that no alien, born out of the dominions of the crown of Great Britain, even though he be naturalized | mass. Aliens, unless naturalized, were likewise by the law of parliament incapable to serve therein [Footnote: Com. Journ. 10 Mar. 1623. 18 Febr. 1625.]: and now it is enacted, by statute 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2. that no alien, even though he be naturalized
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 4] parliament. Farther: as | parliament. And there are not only these standing incapacities; but if any person is made a peer by the king, or elected to serve in the house of commons by the people, yet may the respective houses upon complaint of any crime in such person, and proof thereof, adjudge him disabled and incapable to sit as a member [Footnote: Whitelocke of parl. ch. 102. See Lords' Journ. 3 May 1620. 13 May 1624. 26 May 1725. Com. Journ. 14 Feb. 1580. 21 Jun. 1628. 9 Nov. 21 Jan. 1640. 6 Mar. 1676. 6 Mar. 1711. 17 Feb. 1769.]: and this by the law and custom of parliament. For, as
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 5] and not elsewhere.” Hence, | and not elsewhere [Footnote: 4 Inst. 15.]” Hence,
- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 2] settling a claim of peerage; the | settling the election of a peer of Scotland; the
- ⟨35⟩ [ed. 4] the courts of law | the subordinate courts of law
- ⟨36⟩ [ed. 4] together with their method | together with the method
- ⟨37⟩ [ed. 4] The privileges of parliament are likewise very large and indefinite; which has occasioned an observation, that the principal privilege of parliament consisted in this, that its privileges were not certainly known to any but the parliament itself. And | The privileges of parliament are likewise very large and indefinite. And
- ⟨38⟩ [ed. 4] judges touching the privilege of parliament, the chief justice, in the name of his brethren | judges concerning them, the chief justice, sir John Fortescue, in the name of his brethren
- ⟨39⟩ [ed. 5] This includes not only privilege | This included formerly not only privilege
- ⟨40⟩ [ed. 5] To assault | And still, to assault
- ⟨41⟩ [ed. 5] custody, nor served with any process of the courts of law; nor can his menial servants be arrested; nor can any entry be made on his lands; nor can his goods be distrained or seised; without a breach of the privilege | custody, [ed. 9: unless for some indictable offence,] without a breach of the privilege
- ⟨42⟩ [ed. 5] These privileges however, which derogate from the common law, being only indulged to prevent the member's being diverted from the public business, endure no longer than the session of parliament, save only as to the freedom of his person: which in a peer is for ever sacred and inviolable; and in a commoner for forty days | But all other privileges, which derogate from the common law [ed. 9: in matters of civil right], are now at an end, save only as to the freedom of the member's person: which in a peer (by the privilege of peerage) is for ever sacred and inviolable; and in a commoner (by the privilege of parliament) for forty days

- ⟨43⟩ [ed. 2] time. But this privilege of person does not hold in crimes of such public malignity as treason, felony, or breach of the peace; or rather perhaps in such crimes for which surety of the peace may be required. As to all | time. As to all
- ⟨44⟩ [ed. 5] privileges which obstruct the ordinary course of justice, they cease by the statutes 12 W. III. c. 3. and 11 Geo. II. c. 24. immediately after the dissolution or prorogation of the parliament, or adjournment of the houses for above a fortnight; and during these recesses a peer, or member of the house of commons, may be sued like an ordinary subject, and in consequence of such suits may be dispossessed of his lands and goods. In these cases the king has also his prerogative: he may sue for his debts, though not arrest the person of a member, during the sitting of parliament; and by statute 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18 a member may be sued during the sitting of parliament for any misdemeanour or breach of trust in a public office. | privileges, which obstruct the ordinary course of justice, they were restrained by the statutes 12 W. III. c. 3. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 18. and 11 Geo. II. c. 24. and are now totally abolished by statute 10 Geo. III. c. 50. which enacts, that any suit may at any time be brought against any peer or member of parliament, their servants, or any other person intitled to privilege of parliament; which shall not be impeached or delayed by pretence of any such privilege; except that the person of a member of the house of commons shall not thereby be subjected to any arrest or imprisonment.
- ⟨45⟩ [ed. 2] any other. These | any other. The only way by which courts of justice could antiently take cognizance of privilege of parliament was by writ of privilege, in the nature of a supersedeas [that you forbear—a command to stay or forbear doing that which ought not to be done], to deliver the party out of custody when arrested in a civil suit [Footnote: [Skewys v Chamond] Dyer. 59. 4 Pryn. Brev. Parl. 757.]. For when a letter was written by the speaker to the judges, to stay proceedings against a privileged person, they rejected it as contrary to their oath of office [Footnote: Hodges v Moor] Latch. 48. [Hodges v Moor] Noy. 83.]. But since the statute 12 & 13 W. III. c. 3. which enacts, that no privileged person shall be subject to arrest or imprisonment, it hath been held that such arrest is irregular ab initio, and that the party may be discharged upon motion [Footnote: [Holiday v Pitt] [2] Stra. 989.]. It is to be observed, that there is no precedent of any such writ of privilege, but only in civil suits; and that the statute of 1 Jac. I. c. 13. and that of king William (which remedy some inconveniences arising from privilege of parliament) speak only of civil actions. And therefore the claim of privilege hath been usually guarded with an exception as to the case of indictable crimes [Footnote: Com. Journ. 17 Aug. 1641.]; or, as it hath been frequently expressed, of treason, felony, and breach (or surety) of the peace [Footnote: 4 Inst. 25. Com. Journ. 20 May. 1675.].

Whereby it seems to have been understood that no privilege was allowable to the members, their families, or servants in any crime whatsoever; for all crimes are treated by the law as being contra pacem domini regis [against the lord king's peace]. And instances have not been wanting, wherein privileged persons have been convicted of misdemeanors, and committed, or prosecuted to outlawry, even in the middle of a session [Footnote: Mich. 16 Edw. IV. in Scacch.—[2] Lord Raym. 1461.]; which proceeding has afterwards received the sanction and approbation of parliament [Footnote: Com. Journ. 16 May. 1726.]. To which may be added, that, a few years ago, the case of writing and publishing seditious libels was resolved by both houses [Footnote: Com. Journ. 24 Nov. Lords Journ. 29 Nov. 1763.] not to be intitled to privilege; and that the reasons, upon which that case proceeded [Footnote: Lords Protest. ibid.], extended equally to every indictable offence. So that the chief, if not the only, privilege of parliament, in such cases, seems to be the right of receiving immediate information of the imprisonment or detention of any member, with the reason for which he is detained: a practice that is daily used upon the slightest military accusations, preparatory to a trial by a court martial [Footnote: Com. Journ. 20 Apr. 1762.]; and which is recognized by the several temporary statutes for suspending the habeas corpus act [Footnote: particularly 17 Geo. II. c. 6.], whereby it is provided, that no member of either house shall be detained, till the matter of which he stands suspected, be first communicated to the house of which he is a member, and the consent of the said house obtained for his commitment or detaining. But yet the usage has uniformly been, ever since the revolution, that the communication has been subsequent to the arrest. These

- ⟨46⟩ [ed. 7] likewise by the masters of the court | likewise by the king's learned counsel, being serjeants, and by the masters of the court
- ⟨47⟩ [ed. 7] The secretaries of state, the attorney and solicitor general, and the rest of the king's learned counsel being serjeants, were also used to attend the house of peers, and have to this day their regular writs of summons issued out at the beginning of every parliament: but, as many of them have of late years been | The secretaries of state, with the attorney and solicitor general, were also used to attend the house of peers, and have to this day (together with the judges, etc.) their regular writs of summons issued out at the beginning of every parliament, ad tractandum et consilium impendendum [for consulting and giving advice], though not ad consentiendum [for consenting]: but, whenever of late years they have been
- ⟨48⟩ [ed. 4] commons, their | commons [Footnote: See Com. Journ. 11 Apr. 1614. 8 Feb. 1620. 10 Feb. 1625. 4 Inst. 48.], their
- ⟨49⟩ [ed. 4] attendance is fallen | attendance here is fallen
- ⟨50⟩ [ed. 4] to give them any power | to give the lords any power
- ⟨51⟩ [ed. 2] Year book, 33 Hen. VI. 17. | Year book, 33 Hen. VI. 17. But see the answer to this case by sir Heneage Finch, Com. Journ. 22 Apr. 1671.

- ⟨52⟩ [ed. 2] a wiser principle than either | a wiser principle, with us, than either
- ⟨53⟩ [ed. 2] Only such as are entirely excluded | Only such are entirely excluded
- ⟨54⟩ [ed. 8] but what is entitled to a vote | who is not entitled to a vote
- ⟨55⟩ [ed. 8] quite so perfect as | quite so perfect [Footnote: The candid and intelligent reader will apply this observation to many other parts of the work before him, wherein the constitution of our laws and government are represented as nearly approaching to perfection; without descending to the invidious task of pointing out such deviations and corruptions, as length of time and a loose state of national morals have too great a tendency to produce. The incurvations of practice are then the most notorious when compared with the rectitude of the rule; and to elucidate the clearness of the spring, conveys the strongest satire on those who have polluted or disturbed it.] as
- ⟨56⟩ [ed. 7] 10 Hen. VI. c. 2. the knights | 10 Hen. VI. c. 2. (amended by 14 Geo. III. c. 58.) the knights
- ⟨57⟩ [ed. 4] written about sixty years since, has | written at the beginning of the present century, has
- ⟨58⟩ [ed. 9 (editorial addition by Burn)] vote as a freeholder. Thus | vote as a freeholder [Footnote: By Statute 22 Geo. III. c. 41. No commissioner or officer, employed in managing the duties of excise, customs, stamps, salt, windows or houses, or revenue of the post office, shall be capable of voting in the election of a member of parliament.]. Thus
- ⟨59⟩ [ed. 4] 2. Our second point is the qualification of persons to be elected | 2. Next, as to the qualifications of persons to be elected
- ⟨60⟩ [ed. 4] This depends upon the law and custom of parliaments, and the statutes referred to in the margin [Footnote]. | Some of these depend upon the law and custom of parliaments, declared by the house of commons [Footnote comment]; others upon certain statutes.
- ⟨61⟩ [ed. 4] 4 Inst. 47. | 4 Inst. 47, 48.
- ⟨62⟩ [ed. 4] aliens born, or minors. 2. | aliens born [Footnote: See pag. 162 [I. 108].], or minors [Footnote: Ibid.]. 2.
- ⟨63⟩ [ed. 4] the twelve judges, because | the twelve judges [Footnote: Com. Journ. 9 Nov. 1605.], because
- ⟨64⟩ [ed. 4] nor of the clergy, for | nor of the clergy [Footnote: Com. Journ. 13 Oct. 1553. 8 Feb. 1620. 17 Jan. 1661], for
- ⟨65⟩ attainted of treason or felony, for they are unfit to sit anywhere [Footnote: 4 Inst. 47.]. 3. | attainted of treason or felony [Footnote: Com. Journ. 21 Jan. 1580. 4 Inst. 47.], for they are unfit to sit anywhere. 3.
- ⟨66⟩ [ed. 4] Hale of parl. 114. | Bro. Abr. t. parliament. 7. Com. Journ. 25 Jun. 1604. 14 Apr. 1614. 22 Mar. 1620. 2, 4, 15 Jun. 17 Nov. 1685. Hal. of parl. 114.
- ⟨67⟩ [ed. 2] 4 Inst. 48. | 4 Inst. 48. Whitelocke of parl. ch. 99, 100, 101.

- ⟨68⟩ [ed. 4] ought to be inhabitants of the places for which they are chosen: but this is intirely disregarded. | ought to be [ed. 7: have been] inhabitants of the places for which they are chosen [Footnote: Stat. 1 Hen. V. c. 1. . 23 Hen. VI. c. 15.]: but this is intirely disregarded. [ed. 7: but this, having been long disregarded, was at length entirely repealed by statute 14 Geo. III. c. 58.]
- ⟨69⟩ [ed. 4] commissioners of the treasury, nor | commissioners of the treasury [Footnote: Stat. 5 W. & M. c. 7.], nor
- ⟨70⟩ [ed. 4] officers following (viz. | officers following [Footnote: Stat. 11 & 12 W. III. c. 2. 12 & 13 W. III. c. 10. [ed. 5: 6 Ann. c. 7] 15 Geo. II. c. 22.] (viz.
- ⟨71⟩ [ed. 4] created since 1705, are | created since 1705 [Footnote: Stat. 6 Ann. c. 7], are
- ⟨72⟩ [ed. 5] being elected members. | being elected or sitting as members.
- ⟨73⟩ [ed. 4] being elected. 7. | being elected [ed. 5: or sitting] [Footnote: Stat. 6 Ann. c. 7. 1 Geo. I. c. 56.]. 7.
- ⟨74⟩ [ed. 4] being re-elected. 8. | being re-elected [Footnote: Stat. 6 Ann. c. 7.]. 8.
- ⟨75⟩ [ed. 4] degree of yeomen. This | degree of yeomen [Footnote: Stat. 23 Hen. VI. c. 15.] This
- ⟨76⟩ [ed. 4] the two universities: which | the two universities [Footnote: Stat. 9 Ann. c. 5.]: which
- ⟨77⟩ [ed. 4] taking his seat. But | taking his seat [Footnote: Stat. 33 Geo. II. c. 20.]. But [ed. 9 (Editorial intervention by Burn)]
- By statute 22 Geo. III. c. 45. every person who shall, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any other to his use, hold any contract made with the commissioners of the treasury, navy, or victualling-office, or the master-general or board of ordnance, or any other person, for, or on account of the public service; or shall, in pursuance of any such contract, furnish any money to be remitted abroad, or any wares or merchandize to be used in the service of the public, shall be incapable of being elected or sitting or voting in the house of commons, during the time that he shall hold such contract.
- ⟨78⟩ [ed. 4] these restrictions and disqualifications, every subject of the realm is eligible of common right. | these standing restrictions and disqualifications, every subject of the realm is eligible of common right: though there are instances, wherein persons in particular circumstances have forfeited that common right, and have been declared ineligible for that parliament by a vote of the house of commons [Footnote: See pag. 163 [I. 335 ⟨32⟩].], or for ever by an act of the legislature [Footnote: Stat. 7 Geo. I. c. 28.].
- ⟨79⟩ [ed. 4] It was therefore an unconstitutional prohibition, which was inserted in the king's writs | But it was an unconstitutional prohibition, which was grounded on an ordinance of the house of lords [ed. 8: Footnote: 4 Inst. 10. 48. Pryn. Plea for lords. 379. 2 Whitelocke. 359. 368.], and inserted in the king's writs
- ⟨80⟩ [ed. 4] 23 Hen. VI. c. 15. | 23 Hen. VI. c. 14.

- ⟨81⟩ [ed. 5] 19 Geo. II. c. 28. | 19 Geo. II. c. 28. 10 Geo. III. c. 16. 11 Geo. III. c. 42. [ed. 7: 14 Geo. III. c. 15.] [ed. 8: 15 Geo. III. c. 36.]
- ⟨82⟩ [ed. 4] which I shall endeavour to blend together | which I shall blend together
- ⟨83⟩ [ed. 5] the lord chancellor, (or if a vacancy happens during parliament, the speaker, by order of the house) sends his warrant | the lord chancellor (or if a vacancy happens during the sitting of parliament, the speaker, by order of the house, and without such order, if a vacancy happens by death in the time of a recess [ed. 8: happens by death, or the member's becoming a peer, in the time of a recess] for upwards of twenty days) sends his warrant
- ⟨84⟩ [ed. 5] notice of the same; and | notice of the same [Footnote: In the borough of New-Shoreham in Sussex, wherein certain freeholders of the county are intitled to vote by statute 11 Geo. III. c. 55. the election must be within twelve days, with eight days notice of the same.]; and
- ⟨85⟩ [ed. 2] the borough of Westbury four pounds | the borough for which he was chosen four pounds
- ⟨86⟩ [ed. 5] false and illegal. And | false and illegal. The form and manner of proceeding upon such petition are now regulated by statute 10 Geo. III. c. 16. [ed. 7: (amended by 11 Geo. III. c. 42. and made perpetual by 14 Geo. III. c. 15.)] which directs the method of chusing by lot a select committee of fifteen members, who are sworn well and truly to try the same, and a true judgment to give according to the evidence. And
- ⟨87⟩ [ed. 2] The speaker of the house of lords is the lord chancellor, or keeper of the king's great seal; whose office it is to preside there, and manage the formality of business. The speaker of the house of commons | The speaker of the house of lords, whose office it is to preside there, and manage the formality of business, is the lord chancellor, or keeper of the king's great seal, or any other appointed by the king's commission: and, if none be so appointed, the house of lords (it is said) may elect. The speaker of the house of commons
- ⟨88⟩ [ed. 2] the speaker of the house of lords may | the speaker of the house of lords, if a lord of parliament, may
- ⟨89⟩ [ed. 2] nature) perused by two of the judges, who settle all points of legal propriety. | nature) referred to two of the judges, to examine and report the state of the facts alleged, to see that all necessary parties consent, and to settle all points of technical propriety.
- ⟨90⟩ [ed. 5] that sessions: that session
- ⟨91⟩ [ed. 4] long rolls of parchment | long rolls (or presses) of parchment
- ⟨92⟩ [ed. 5] called a ryder. The | called a ryder [Footnote: [Weaver v Felton] Noy. 84.]. The
- ⟨93⟩ [ed. 2] agreed to, one of the members | agreed to, the title to it is then settled; which used to be a general one for all the acts passed in the session, till in the fifth year of Henry VIII [ed. 8: till in the first year of Henry VIII] distinct titles

- were introduced for each chapter [Footnote: Lord Bacon on uses. 80. 326.]. After this, one of the members
- ⟨94⟩ [ed. 9] (or sometimes two of the judges) | (or upon matters of high dignity or importance, by two of the judges)
- ⟨95⟩ [ed. 2] the bill begins in the house of lords. And | the bill begins in the house of lords. But, when an act of grace or pardon is passed, it is first signed by his majesty, and then read once only in each of the houses, without any new engrossing or amendment [Footnote: D'ewes journ. 20. 73. Com. journ. 17 June 1747.]. And
- ⟨96⟩ [ed. 2] with the bill, it always is deposited in the house of peers, to wait the royal assent. | with any bill, it always is deposited in the house of peers, to wait the royal assent; except in the case of a money-bill [ed. 5: except in the case of a bill of supply], which after receiving the concurrence of the lords is sent back to the house of commons [Footnote: Com. journ. 24 Jul. 1660.].
- ⟨97⟩ [ed. 2] This may be given two ways: | The royal assent may be given two ways:
- ⟨98⟩ [ed. 2] advise upon it." 2. | advise upon it." When a money-bill [ed. 5: bill of supply] is passed, it is carried up and presented to the king by the speaker of the house of commons [Footnote: Rot. Parl. 9 Hen. IV. in Pryn. 4 Inst. 30, 31.]; and the royal assent is thus expressed, "le roy remercie ses loyal subjects, accepte leur benevolence, et aussi le veut, the king thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it so to be." In case of an act of grace, which originally proceeds from the crown and has the royal assent in the first stage of it, the clerk of the parliament thus pronounces the gratitude of the subject; "les prelates, seigneurs, et commons, en ce present parliament assemblees, au nom de tous vous autres subjects, remercient tres humblement votre majeste, et prient a Dieu vous donner en sante bone vie et longue; the prelates, lords, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, in the name of all your other subjects, most humbly thank your majesty, and pray to God to grant you in health and wealth long to live [Footnote: D'ewes journ. 35.]" 2.
- ⟨99⟩ [ed. 4] Finch. L. 81. 234. | Finch. L. 81. 234. Bacon. Elem. c. 19.
- ⟨100⟩ [ed. 4] 10 Dec. 1745. | 10 Dec. 1745. 21 May 1768.
- ⟨101⟩ [ed. 5] 4 Inst. 28. Hale of parl. 38. | 4 Inst. 28. Hale of parl. 38. [Resolutions upon the statute of [35] Eliz. c. 1 concerning sectaries (1623)] Hutt. 61.
- ⟨102⟩ [ed. 5] the restoration of Charles II, we find a proviso tacked to the first bill then enacted, that | the reign of Charles II, we find a proviso frequently tacked to a bill, that
- ⟨103⟩ [ed. 5] Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 1. | Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 1. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 1.

Chapter 3

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 8] Like them, the crown will | Like estates, the crown will
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 8] As in them, the preference | As in common descents, the preference

- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 8] Like them, on failure of the male line, it descends | Like lands or tenements, the crown, on failure of the male line, descends
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 7] all born of the same father | all children of the same father
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 5] may sometimes be broke through | may sometimes be broken through
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 4] but has always at last returned | but has generally at last returned
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 4] save only that king Edred | save only that the sons of king Ethelwolf succeeded to each other in the kingdom, without regard to the children of the elder branches, according to the rule of succession prescribed by their father, and confirmed by the wittena-gemote, in the heat of the Danish invasions; and also that king Edred
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 8] in the Saxon language the first of the blood royal | in the Saxon language illustrious, or of royal blood
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 3] who proceeded upon a notion, which prevailed for some time in the law of descents | who perhaps might proceed upon a notion, which prevailed for some time in the law of descents, (though never adopted as the rule of public successions [Footnote: See lord Lyttelton's life of Henry II. I. 467.])
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] of the blood royal. | of the blood royal, excepting his elder brother Theobald, who (as earl of Blois) was already provided for [ed. 3: Theobald, who was earl of Blois, and therefore seems to have waved, as he certainly never insisted on, so troublesome and precarious a claim].
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] a mere usurper; and the empress Maud did not fail to assert her right | a mere usurper; and therefore he rather chose to rely on a title by election [Footnote: "Ego Stephanus Dei gratia assensu cleri & populi in regem Anglorum electus, &c." [I, Stephen, elected King of England, by the grace of God, and the assent of the clergy and people, etc.] (Cart. A.D. 1136. Ric. de Hagustald. 314. Hearne ad Guil. Neubr. 711.)], while the empress Maud did not fail to assert her hereditary right
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 9] ended at last in a compromise, that | ended at last in the compromise made at Wallingford, that
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] was the undoubted heir of William the conqueror | was (next after his mother Matilda) the undoubted heir of William the conqueror
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] the right of the crown | the law of the crown
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 9] Ibid. | 4 Inst. 37.
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 5] Wales. iii. 705. | Wales. Hist. Eng. iii. 705.
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] upon an apprehension that | upon a conviction that
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] upon this apprehended vacancy | upon the supposition of this vacancy
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] no longer king. And | no longer king [Footnote: Law of forfeit. 118, 119.]. And
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 2] his only sister | his eldest sister
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 2] was absolutely preferred | was personally preferred

- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 5] the issue of king William, queen Mary, and queen Anne. | the issue of queen Mary, queen Anne, and king William.
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 2] being the daughter of Elizabeth queen of Bohemia, who was the youngest daughter | being the youngest daughter of Elizabeth queen of Bohemia, who was the daughter

Chapter 4

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 2] She may also sue and be sued alone | She may likewise sue and be sued alone
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 4] The revenue of our antient queens | The original revenue of our antient queens
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] his then chief justices and chief baron | the then chief justices and chief baron [ed. 4: the chief justices and chief baron]
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 4] that queen Anne | that his consort, queen Anne
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 8] judicious antiquarian | judicious antiquary
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 4] tried by the house of peers | tried by the peers of parliament
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] 2 Inst. 18. | 2 Inst. 18. See Riley's Plac. Parl. 672.
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] the queen of Navarre marrying with Edmond, brother to king Edward the first, maintained an action of dower | the queen dowager of Navarre marrying with Edmond [ed. 8: earl of Lancaster] brother to king Edward the first, maintained an action of dower [ed. 8: (after the death of her second husband)]
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 5] creation. | creation. The rest of the royal family may be considered in two different lights, according to the different senses in which the term, royal family, is used. The larger sense includes all those, who are by any possibility inheritable to the crown. Such, before the revolution, were all the descendants of William the conqueror; who had branched into an amazing extent, by intermarriages with the antient nobility. Since the revolution and act of settlement, it means the protestant issue of the princess Sophia; now comparatively few in number, but which in process of time may possibly be as largely diffused. The more confined sense includes only those, who are in a certain degree of propinquity to the reigning prince, and to whom therefore the law pays an extraordinary regard and respect: but, after that degree is past, they fall into the rank of ordinary subjects, and are seldom considered any farther, unless called to the succession upon failure of the nearer lines. For, though collateral consanguinity is regarded indefinitely, with respect to inheritance or succession, yet it is and can only be regarded within some certain limits in any other respect, by the natural constitution of things and the dictates of positive law [Footnote: See essay on collateral consanguinity, in Law-tracts, 4to. Oxon. 1771.]

- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 5] king, who are not in the immediate line of succession, are little farther regarded by the laws, than to give them precedence | king, and other branches of the royal family, who are not in the immediate line of succession, were therefore little farther regarded by the antient law, than to give them to a certain degree precedence
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] sister's son. | sister's son. But under the description of the king's children his grandsons are held to be included, without having recourse to sir Edward Coke's interpretation of nephew: and therefore when his late majesty created his grandson [ed. 5: Edward], the second son of Frederick prince of Wales deceased, duke of York, and referred it to the house of lords to settle his place and precedence, they certified [Footnote: Lord's Journ. 24 Apr. 1760.] that he ought to have place next to the duke of Cumberland, the king's youngest son [ed. 5: late duke of Cumberland the then king's youngest son]; and that he might have a seat on the left hand of the cloth of estate. But when, on the accession of his present majesty, those royal personages ceased to take place as the children, and ranked only as the brother and uncle, of the king, they also left their seats on the side of the cloth of estate: so that when the duke of Gloucester, his majesty's second brother, took his seat in the house of peers [Footnote: Ibid. 10 Jan. 1765.], he was placed on the upper end of the earls' bench (on which the dukes usually sit) next to his royal highness the duke of York.
- [ed. 9] | sister's son. Therefore, after these degrees are past, peers or others of the blood royal are intitled to no place or precedence except what belongs to them by their personal rank or dignity. Which made sir Edward Walker complain, [Footnote: Tracts, p. 301] that by the hasty creation of prince Rupert to be duke of Cumberland, and of the earl of Lenox to be duke of that name, previous to the creation of king Charles's second son, James, to be duke of York, it might happen that their grandsons would have precedence of the grandsons of the duke of York.
- Indeed under the description of the king's children, his grandsons are held to be included, without having recourse to sir Edward Coke's interpretation of nephew: and therefore when his late Majesty king George II created his grandson Edward, the second son of Frederick prince of Wales deceased, duke of York, and referred it to the house of lords to settle his place and precedence, they certified [Footnote: Lord's Journ. 24 Apr. 1760.] that he ought to have place next to the duke of Cumberland, the then king's youngest son; and that he might have a seat on the left hand of the cloth of estate. But when, on the accession of his present majesty, those royal personages ceased to take place as the children, and ranked only as the brother and uncle, of the king, they also left their seats on the side of the cloth of estate: so that when the duke of Gloucester, his majesty's second brother, took his seat in the house of peers [Footnote: Ibid. 10 Jan. 1765.], he was placed on the upper end of the earls' bench (on which the dukes usually sit) next to his royal highness the duke of York.
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 5] while minors, and the care and approbation of their marriages, when grown up, did belong | while minors, did belong

⟨13⟩ [ed. 4] during their father's life. | even during their father's life.

[ed. 5] But they all agreed, that the care and approbation of their marriages, when grown up, belonged to the king their grandfather. And the judges have more recently concurred in opinion [Footnote: Lords' journ. 28 Feb. 1772.], that this care and approbation extend also to the presumptive heir of the crown; though to what other branches of the royal family the same did extend they did not find precisely determined. The most frequent instances of the crown's interposition go no farther than nephews and nieces [Footnote: See (besides the instances cited in Fortescue Aland) for brothers and sisters; under king Edward III, 4 Rym. 392. 403. 411. 501. 508. 512. 549. 683:—under Henry V, 9 Rym. 710. 711. 741:—under Edward IV, 11 Rym. 564. 565. 590. 601:—under Henry VIII, 13 Rym. 249. 423:—under Edw. VI, 7 St. Tr. 3. 8. For nephews and nieces; under Henry III, 1 Rym. 852:—under Edward I, 2 Rym. 489:—under Edward III, 5 Rym. 561:—under Richard II, 7 Rym. 264:—under Richard III, 12 Rym. 232. 244:—under Henry VIII, 15 Rym. 26. 31.]; but examples are not wanting of its reaching to more distant collaterals. [Footnote: To great-nieces; under Edward II, 3 Rym. 575. 644. To first cousins; under Edward III, 5 Rym. 177. To second, and third, cousins; under Edward III, 5 Rym. 729:—under Richard II, 7 Rym. 225:—under Henry VI, 10 Rym. 322:—under Henry VII, 12 Rym. 529:—under Queen Elizabeth, Camd. Ann. A.D. 1562. To fourth cousins; under Henry VII, 12 Rym. 329. To the blood-royal in general; under Richard II, 7 Rym. 787. Ril. plac. parl. 672.] And the statute 6 Henry VI, before mentioned, which prohibits the marriage of a queen dowager without the consent of the king, assigns this reason for it: "because the disparagement of the queen shall give greater comfort and example to other ladies of estate, who are of the blood royal, more lightly to disparage themselves." Therefore by the statute 28 Hen. VIII. c. 18. (repealed, among other statutes of treasons, by 1 Edw. VI. c. 12.) it was made high treason for any man to contract marriage with the king's children or reputed children, his sisters or aunts ex parte paterna [on the father's side], or the children of his brethren or sisters; being exactly the same degrees, to which precedence is allowed by the statute 31 Hen. VIII. before mentioned. And now, by statute 12 Geo. III. c. 11. no descendant of the body of king George II, (other than the issue of princesses married into foreign families) is capable of contracting matrimony, without the previous consent of the king signified under the great seal; and any marriage contracted without such consent is void. Provided, that such of the said descendants, as are above the age of twenty five, may after a twelvemonth's notice given to the king's privy council, contract and solemnize marriage without the consent of the crown; unless both houses of parliament shall, before the expiration of the said year, expressly declare their disapprobation of such intended marriage. And all persons solemnizing, assisting, or being present at, any such prohibited marriage, shall incur the penalties of the statute of praemunire.

⟨14⟩ [ed. 4] taken by law | taken by the law

Chapter 5

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 9] for which reasons the law gives them | on which account the law gives them
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 9] because the law intends | because it intends
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] to commit the offenders into custody | to commit the offenders to safe custody
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] But their jurisdiction is only to enquire | But their jurisdiction herein is only to enquire
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 8] lunacy and ideocy | lunacy or ideocy
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] ideocy. | ideocy [Footnote: Sheldon v Aland ] 3 P. W<sup>ms</sup>. 108.].
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 7] being the court of appeal in such causes | being the court of appeal in such cases
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] the king's majesty himself, assisted by his privy council | the king's majesty himself in council
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] council. | council. Whenever also a question arises between two provinces in America or elsewhere, as concerning the extent of their charters and the like, the king in his council exercises original jurisdiction therein, upon the principles of feodal sovereignty. And so likewise when any person claims an island or a province, in the nature of a feodal principality, by grant from the king or his ancestors, the determination of that right belongs to his majesty in council: as was the case of the earl of Derby with regard to the isle of Man in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and of the earl of Cardigan and others, as representatives of the duke of Montague, with relation to the island of St Vincent in 1764. But from all the dominions of the crown, excepting Great Britain and Ireland, an appellate jurisdiction (in the last resort) is vested in the same tribunal; which usually exercises its judicial authority in a committee of the whole privy council, who hear the allegations and proofs, and make their report to his majesty in council, by whom the judgment is finally given.
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 9] The privileges of privy counsellors, as such, consist | The privileges of privy counsellors, as such, (abstracted from their honorary precedence) [Footnote: See page 405 [I. 261]] consist
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 9] And the reason of making this statute, sir Edward Coke tells us, was because such servants have greater and readier means, either by night or by day, to destroy such as be of great authority, and near about the king: and such a conspiracy was | The reason of making this statute, sir Edward Coke tells us, was because such a conspiracy was
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 5] that any persons that shall | that any person that shall
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 5] shall be felons, and suffer death as such. | shall be a felon without benefit of clergy.

Chapter 6

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 9] are by his majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons, and by authority of the same, ratified and confirmed accordingly | are ratified and confirmed accordingly
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 4] fol. m. ij | fol. m. ij. Prynne has also given us a copy of the coronation-oaths of Richard II, (Signal Loyalty. II. 246.) Edward VI, (ibid. 251.) James I, and Charles I. (ibid. 269.)
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] religion. | religion. And, with respect to the latter of these three branches, we may farther remark, that by the act of union, 5 Ann. c. 8. two preceding statutes are recited and confirmed; the one of the parliament of Scotland, the other of the parliament of England: which enact; the former, that every king at his accession shall take and subscribe an oath, to preserve the protestant religion and presbyterian church government in Scotland; the latter, that at his coronation he shall take and subscribe a similar oath, to preserve the settlement of the church of England within England, Ireland, Wales, and Berwick, and the territories thereunto belonging.

Chapter 7

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 5] arbitrary government | arbitrary governments
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 8] balanced and bridled | balanced and regulated
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 8] equable and regular | equable and certain
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12. | 24 Hen. VIII. c. 12 [Footnote: See also 24 Geo. II. c. 24. 5 Geo. III. c. 27].
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] the realm of England | the realm and crown of England
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] empire; | empire; [Footnote: Rex allegavit, quod ipse omnes libertates haberet in regno suo, quas imperator vendicabat in imperio. [The king alleged that he should possess the same privileges in his kingdom as an emperor claimed in his empire.] (M. Paris, A.D. 1095.)]
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 8] Finch. L. 255 | Finch. L. 255. See b. III. c. 17 [III. 169–78].
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] impracticable. | impracticable. See these points more fully discussed in the considerations on the law of forfeitures, 3d edit. pag. 109–126. wherein the very learned author [C. Yorke] has thrown many new and important lights on the texture of our happy constitution.
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] Germany than Great Britain | Germany than Great Britain, and that the king was a stranger to our language and constitution
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 9] is the standing maxim | has been the standing maxim
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] treason or felony | treason and felony [ed. 7. treason or felony]

- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 5] Co. Litt. 43. | Co. Litt. 43. 2 Inst. proëm. 3.
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 7] appoints the princess dowager | appointed the princess dowager
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 7] Orig. 1. § 105. | Orig. 1. §. 103.
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 9] short inquiry | short digression, by way of inquiry
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 2] of Europe seems now to have adopted the sentiments | of this country, as well as of the rest of Europe, seems now to pursue the sentiments.
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] And the truth is, we find no traces in our lawbooks of allowing any privilege to ambassadors or their domestics, even in civil suits, previous to the reign of queen Anne; | But the truth is, so few cases (if any) had arisen, wherein the privilege was either claimed or disputed, even with regard to civil suits, that our law-books are [ed. 9: are (in general) quite] silent upon it, previous to the reign of queen Anne;
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] London, in 1708, for debts which | London, [Footnote: 21 July 1708. Boyer's annals of queen Anne.] for a debt of fifty pounds, which
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] contracted. This the czar resented very highly, and demanded (we are told) that the officers who made the arrest should be punished with death. | contracted. Instead of applying to be discharged upon his privilege, he gave bail to the action, and the next day complained to the queen. The persons who were concerned in the arrest were examined before the privy council (of which the lord chief justice Holt was at the same time sworn a member [Footnote: 25 July 1708. Ibid.]) and seventeen were committed to prison [Footnote: 25, 29 Jul. 1708. Ibid.]; most of whom were prosecuted by information in the court of queen's bench, at the suit of the attorney general [Footnote: 23 Oct. 1708. Ibid.], and at their trial before the lord chief justice were convicted of the facts by the jury [Footnote: 14 Feb. 1708. Ibid.]; reserving the question of law, how far those facts were criminal, to be afterwards argued before the judges; which question was never determined. In the mean time the czar resented this affront very highly, and demanded that the sheriff of Middlesex and all others concerned in the arrest should be punished with instant death. [Footnote: 17 Sept. 1708. Ibid.]
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 2] directed her minister to inform him, "that the law of England had not yet protected ambassadors from the payment of their lawful debts; that therefore the arrest was no offence by the laws; and that she could inflict no punishment upon any, the meanest, of her subjects, unless warranted by the law of the land [Footnote: Mod. Un. Hist. xxxv. 454.]" | directed her secretary to inform him, "that she could inflict no punishment upon any, the meanest of her subjects unless warranted by the law of the land, and therefore was persuaded that he would not insist upon impossibilities." [Footnote: 11 Jan. 1708. Ibid. Mod. Un. Hist. xxxv. 454.]
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 2] Peter, a new statute was enacted by parliament, reciting the arrest which had been made, "in contempt of the protection granted by her majesty, contrary to the law of nations, and in prejudice of the rights and privileges, which ambassadors and other public ministers have at all times been thereby possessed of, and ought to be kept sacred and inviolable:" wherefore it enacts, that for the future all process whereby the person of any ambassador, or of his domestic or domestic servant, may be arrested, or his goods distreined or seised, shall be utterly null and void; and the persons prosecuting, soliciting, or executing such process shall be deemed violaters of the law of nations, and disturbers of the public repose; and shall suffer such penalties and corporal punishment as the lord chancellor and the two chief justices, or any two of them, shall think fit. | Peter [Footnote deleted], a bill was brought into parliament [Footnote: Com. Journ. 1708. [ed. 5: 23 Dec. 1708]], and afterwards passed into a law [Footnote: 21 Apr. 1709. Boyer, ibid.], to prevent and to punish such outrageous insolence for the future. And with a copy of this act, elegantly engrossed and illuminated, accompanied by a letter from the queen, an ambassador extraordinary [Footnote: Mr Whitworth] was commissioned to appear at Moscow [Footnote: 8 Jan. 1709. Boyer, ibid.], who declared "that though her majesty could not inflict such a punishment as was required, because of the defect in that particular of the former established constitutions of her kingdom, yet, with the unanimous consent of the parliament, she had caused a new act to be passed, to serve as a law for the future." This humiliating step was accepted as a full satisfaction by the czar; and the offenders, at his request, were discharged from all farther prosecution.

This statute [Footnote: 7 Ann. c. 12] recites the arrest which had been made, "in contempt of the protection granted by her majesty, contrary to the law of nations, and in prejudice of the rights and privileges, which ambassadors and other public ministers have at all times been thereby possessed of, and ought to be kept sacred and inviolable:" wherefore it enacts, that for the future all process whereby the person of any ambassador, or of his domestic or domestic servant, may be arrested, or his goods distreined or seised, shall be utterly null and void; and the persons prosecuting, soliciting, or executing such process shall be deemed violaters of the law of nations, and disturbers of the public repose; and shall suffer such penalties and corporal punishment as the lord chancellor and the two chief justices, or any two of them, shall think fit.

- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 2] thus enforcing the law of nations, these privileges are now usually allowed | thus declaring and enforcing the law of nations, these privileges are now held to be part of the law of the land, and are constantly allowed
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 2] such ministers as advise | such ministers as from criminal motives advise
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 5] our laws have in some respect armed | our laws have in some respects armed
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 8] (words in themselves synonymous and signifying a taking in return) | (words used as synonymous; and signifying, the latter a taking in return, the former the passing the frontiers in order to such taking) [Footnote: Dufresne. tit. Marca.]

- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 2] Indeed this custom of reprisals seems dictated by nature herself; and accordingly we find | And indeed this custom of reprisals seems dictated by nature herself; for which reason we find
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 2] And, in pursuance of this principle | In pursuance of which principle
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 2] arms. Indeed the law | arms. But passports under the king's sign-manual, or licences from his ambassadors abroad, are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity. Indeed the law
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 7] was severely felt | were severely felt
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 2] it. | it. It is partly upon the same, and partly upon a fiscal foundation, to secure his marine revenue, that the king has the prerogative of appointing ports and havens, or such places only, for persons and merchandize to pass into and out of the realm, as he in his wisdom sees proper. By the feodal law all navigable rivers and havens were computed among the regalia, [Footnote: 2 Feud. t. 56. Crag. I. 15. 15] and were subject to the sovereign of the state. And in England it hath always been held, that the king is lord of the whole shore [Footnote: F. N. B. 113.], and particularly is the guardian of the ports and havens, which are the inlets and gates of the realm [Footnote: [Case of the customs payable for merchandise] Dav. 9. [Case of the Royal Fishery of the Banne] Dav. 56.] and therefore, so early as the reign of king John, we find ships seised by the king's officers for putting in at a place that was not a legal port [Footnote: Madox. hist. exch. 530.] These legal ports were undoubtedly at first assigned by the crown; since to each of them a court of portmote is incident [4 Inst. 148.], the jurisdiction of which must flow from the royal authority: the great ports of the sea are also referred to, as well known and established, by statute 4 Hen. IV. c. 20. which prohibits the landing elsewhere under pain of confiscation: and the statute 1 Eliz. c. 11. recites that the franchise of lading and discharging had been frequently granted by the crown.

But though the king had a power of granting the franchise of havens and ports, yet he had not the power of resumption, or of narrowing and confining their limits when once established; but any person had a right to load or discharge his merchandize in any part of the haven: whereby the revenue of the customs was much impaired and diminished, by fraudulent landings in obscure and private corners. This occasioned the statutes of 1 Eliz. c. 11. and 14 Car. II. c. 11. §. 14. which enable the crown by commission to ascertain the limits of all ports, and to assign proper wharfs and quays in each port, for the exclusive landing and loading of merchandize.

The erection of beacons, light-houses, and sea-marks, is also a branch of the royal prerogative: whereof the first was antiently used in order to alarm the country, in case of the approach of an enemy; and all of them are signally useful in guiding and preserving vessels at sea by night as well as by day. For this purpose the king hath the exclusive power, by commission under his great seal [Footnote: 3 Inst. 204. 4 Inst. 148.], to cause them to be erected in fit and convenient places [Footnote: Rot. Claus. 1. Ric. II. m. 42. Pryn. on 4 Inst. 136.], as well upon the lands of the subject as upon the demesnes of the crown: which power is usually vested by letters patent in the office of lord high admiral [Footnote: [Crosse v Diggs] 1 Sid. 158. 4 Inst. 149.] And by statute 8 Eliz. c. 13. the corporation of the trinity-house are impowered to set up any beacons or sea-marks wherever they shall think them necessary; and if the owner of the land or any other person shall destroy them, or shall take down any steeple, tree, or other known sea-mark, he shall forfeit 100*l.* or, in case of inability to pay it, shall be ipso facto outlawed.

- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 8] grand depositary | grand depositaries
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 2] the mirrour. c. 1. §. 5. | the mirrour. c. 1. §. 5. And so also, when the chief justice Thorpe was condemned to be hanged for bribery, he was said sacramentum domini regis fregisse. [To have broken his oath to the lord king.] Rot. Parl. 25 Edw. III.
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 2] forgiving. And therefore, in parliamentary impeachments, the king has no prerogative of pardoning: because there the commons of Great Britain are in their own names the prosecutors, and not the crown; the offence being for the most part avowedly taken to be done against the public. Of prosecutions | forgiving. Of prosecutions
- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 8] for he always appears in contemplation of law in his own proper person | for in contemplation of law he is always present in court
- ⟨35⟩ [ed. 4] law. A proclamation | law. But a proclamation to lay an embargo in time of peace upon all vessels laden with wheat (though in the time of a public scarcity) being contrary to law, and particularly to statute 22 Car. II. c. 13. the advisers of such a proclamation and all persons acting under it, found it necessary to be indemnified by a special act of parliament, 7 Geo. III. c. 7. A proclamation
- ⟨36⟩ [ed. 2] And in particular the law of England does in many cases refer itself to it, and leaves the causes of merchants to be tried by their own peculiar customs; | And in particular it is held to be part of the law of England, which decides the causes of merchants by the general rules which obtain in all commercial countries;
- ⟨37⟩ [ed. 2] relating to inland trade | relating to domestic trade
- ⟨38⟩ [ed. 2] of bills of exchange | of inland bills of exchange
- ⟨39⟩ [ed. 4] there shall be only one weight | there should be only one weight
- ⟨40⟩ [ed. 4] measures shall be committed | measures should be committed
- ⟨41⟩ [ed. 2] multitude, when it hath gotten an head. Thirdly | multitude. Thirdly
- ⟨42⟩ [ed. 7] it. | it. And, as to the silver coin, it is enacted by statute 14 Geo. III. c. 42. that no tender of payment in silver money, exceeding twenty-five pounds at one time, shall be a sufficient tender in law, for more than its value by weight, at the rate of 5*s.* 2*d.* an ounce.

- ⟨43⟩ [ed. 7] standard, and called | standard [Footnote: This standard hath been frequently varied in former times; but hath for many years past been thus invariably settled. The pound troy of gold, consisting of twenty-two carats (or twenty-fourth parts) fine, and two of alloy, is divided into forty-four guineas and an half of the present value of 21s. each. And the pound troy of silver, consisting of eleven ounces and two pennyweights pure, and eighteen pennyweights alloy, is divided into sixty-two shillings. (See Folkes on English coins.)], and called
- ⟨44⟩ [ed. 9] Spelm. Gloss. 203. | Spelm. Gloss. 203. Dufresne. III. 165. The most plausible opinion seems to be that adopted by those two etymologists, that the name was derived from the Esterlingi, or Easterlings; as those Saxons were antiently called, who inhabited that district of Germany, now occupied by the Hanse-towns and their appendages; the earliest traders in modern Europe.
- ⟨45⟩ [ed. 9] Ibid. | 1 Hal. P. C. 197.
- ⟨46⟩ [ed. 2] law: that part | law [Footnote: [Case of Convocations] 12 Rep. 72.] that part
- ⟨47⟩ [ed. 5] the privilege of forming | the privileges of forming
- ⟨48⟩ [ed. 2] will better be considered | will more properly be considered

Chapter 8

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 9] absolute rights | absolute inherent rights
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 8] from the king; and then | from the king; and at the same time does homage to his sovereign: and then
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] an action for the same. | an action for the profits.
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 5] tenth part of their tithe | tenth part of their tithes
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 4] statutes, too numerous here to recite | statutes. [Footnote: 5 Ann. c. 24. 6 Ann. c. 27. 1 Geo. I. st. 2. c. 10. 3 Geo. I. c. 10.]
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 8] of benefit to posterity | of some benefit to posterity
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 9] referred to the second book | postponed to the second book
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] power, for the ease and convenience of his subjects: and the parliament | power: and the parliament
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] levying amercements | levying amercements [Footnote: Roger North, in his life of lord keeper North, (43, 44.) mentions an eyre, or iter, to have been held south of Trent soon after the restoration: but I have met with no report of its proceedings.]
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] other legal proceedings | other forensic proceedings
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 5] Fleta. l. 1. c. 45 & 46 | Fleta. l. 1. c. 45 & 46. Memorand. Scacch. H. 24 Edw. I. 37. prefixed to Maynard's year-book of Edw. II.

- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 5] And the law, so long after as the reign of Henry III, seems still to have been guided by the same equitable provisions. For then if a dog (for instance) escaped, by which the owner might be discovered, or if any certain mark | And the law, as laid down by Bracton in the reign of Henry III, seems still to have improved in its equity. For then if not only a dog (for instance) escaped, by which the owner might be discovered, but if any certain mark
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 5] But afterwards, in the statute of Westminster the first, the law is laid down more agreeable to the charter of king Henry the second: and upon that statute hath stood the legal doctrine of wrecks to the present time. It enacts, that if any live thing escape (a man, a cat, or a dog; which, as in Bracton, are only put for examples,) in this case, and, as it seems, in this case only, it is clearly not a legal wreck: but the sheriff of the county is bound to keep the goods a year and a day (as in France for one year, agreeably to the maritime laws of Oleron, and in Holland for a year and an half) | Afterwards, in the statute of Westminster the first, the time of limitation of claims, given by the charter of Henry II, is extended to a year and a day, according to the usage of Normandy: [Footnote: Gr. Coustum. c. 17.] and it enacts, that if a man, a dog, or a cat, escape alive, the vessel shall not be adjudged a wreck. These animals, as in Bracton, are only put for examples; for it is now held [Footnote: Hamilton v Davies. Trin. 11. Geo. III. B. R.], that not only if any live thing escape, but if proof can be made of the property of any of the goods or lading which come to shore, they shall not be forfeited as wreck. The statute further ordains, that the sheriff of the county shall be bound to keep the goods a year and a day (as in France for one year, agreeably to the maritime laws of Oleron, and in Holland for a year and a half)
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 5] 2 Inst. 167. | 2 Inst. 167. [Sir Henry Constable's case] 5 Rep. 107.
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 5] it rarely happening that every living creature on board perishes; and if any should survive, it is a very great chance, since the improvement of commerce, navigation, and correspondence, but the owner will be able to assert | for, if any goods come to land, it rarely happens, since the improvement of commerce, navigation, and correspondence, that the owner is not able to assert
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 5] (so as it be not legal wreck) they shall be presently delivered to the merchants, they paying | (which cannot, says the statute, be called wreck) they shall be presently delivered to the merchants, paying
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] a forfeiture of 200*l.* | a forfeiture of 100*l.* or outlawry.
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 5] Plowd. 366. | Plowd. 336
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 9] Any beast may be an estray, that is | Any beasts may be estrays, that are
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 9] Fleta defines it | Fleta defines them
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 9] keep it from damage | preserve it from damage
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 5] the years of discretion | the age of discretion
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 9] seems rather to be, that the child, by reason of its want of discretion, is presumed incapable of actual sin, and therefore needed no deodand to

- purchase propitiatory masses: but every adult, who dies in actual sin | seems rather to have been, that the child, by reason of its want of discretion, was presumed incapable of actual sin, and therefore needed no deodand to purchase propitiatory masses: but every adult, who died in actual sin
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 9] Aeschin. contra Ctesiph. | Aeschin. contra Ctesiph. Thus too, by our antient law, a well in which a person was drowned, was ordered to be filled up, under the inspection of the coroner. Flet. l. I. c. 25. §. 10. Fitzh. Abr. t. corone. 416.
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 4] climbing up a wheel | climbing up the wheel of a cart
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 5] given with a certain penknife | given by a certain penknife
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 2] drowned, the vessel and cargo are in strictness a deodand. | drowned, it hath been said that the vessel and cargo are in strictness of law a deodand. But juries have of late very frequently taken upon themselves to mitigate these forfeitures, by finding only some trifling thing, or part of an intire thing, to have been the occasion of the death. And in such cases, although the finding of the [ed. 8: by the] jury be hardly warrantable by law, the court of king's bench hath generally refused to interfere on behalf of the lord of the franchise, to assist so odious [ed. 9: so inequitable] a claim. [Footnote: Foster of homicide. 266.]
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 5] 4 Rep. 126. | 4 Rep. 126. Memorand. Scacc'. 20 Edw. I. (prefixed to Maynard's year-book of Edw. II.) fol. 20, 24.
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 2] incapable of understanding, as wanting those senses | incapable of any understanding, as wanting all those senses
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 5] reason. | reason [Footnote: Idiota a casu et infirmitate. [An idiot by accident and infirmity.] (Mem. Scacch. 20 Edw. I. in Maynard's year-book of Edw. II. 20.)]
- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 2] are by any means rendered incapable | are judged by the court of chancery incapable
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 7] administrators. | administrators. On the first attack of lunacy, or other occasional insanity, while there may be hopes of a speedy restitution of reason, it is usual to confine the unhappy objects in private custody under the direction of their nearest friends and relations: and the legislature, to prevent all abuses incident to such private custody, hath thought proper to interpose its authority, by 14 Geo. III. c. 49. [ed. 9: (continued by 19 Geo. III. c. 15.)] for regulating private mad-houses. But, when the disorder is grown permanent, and the circumstances of the party will bear such additional expence, it is proper to apply to the royal authority to warrant a lasting confinement.
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 2] never permitted | seldom permitted
- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 7] which will greatly assist us | which will however greatly assist us
- ⟨35⟩ [ed. 9] by levying scutages | in levying scutages
- ⟨36⟩ [ed. 9] 2s. 6d. for goods | 2s. 8d. for goods
- ⟨37⟩ [ed. 9] was broke through | was broken through

- ⟨38⟩ [ed. 9] though lord Clarendon tells us, | though lord Clarendon says,
- ⟨39⟩ [ed. 9] to pay for them | to pay for them himself
- ⟨40⟩ [ed. 4] who continued sitting | which continued sitting
- ⟨41⟩ [ed. 4] the elections of knights | the election of knights
- ⟨42⟩ [ed. 7] above seventy years | above fourscore years
- ⟨43⟩ [ed. 9] malt; and in 1763 a proportionable excise was laid upon cyder and perry | malt; to the produce of which a duty of 15 per cent, or nearly an additional halfpenny per bushel, was added in 1779: and that in 1763 a proportionable excise was laid upon cyder and perry, but so new-modelled in 1766, as scarce to be worth collecting.
- ⟨44⟩ [ed. 2] laid upon cyder and perry | laid upon cyder and perry, but new-modelled in 1766.
- ⟨45⟩ [ed. 7] customs on wools | customs on wool
- ⟨46⟩ [ed. 2] another antient hereditary duty belonging to the crown, called the prisage or butlerage of wines | another very antient hereditary duty belonging to the crown, called the prisage or butlerage of wines; which is considerably older than the customs, being taken notice of in the great roll of the exchequer, 8 Ric. I. still extant [Footnote: Madox. hist. exch. 526. 532.]
- ⟨47⟩ [ed. 9] every ship importing into England twenty tons or more; which by Edward I was exchanged | every ship (English or foreign) importing into England twenty tons or more; one before and one behind the mast: which by charter of Edward I was exchanged
- ⟨48⟩ [ed. 9] 2 Bulstr. 254 | 2 Bulstr. 254. Stat. Estr[eats]. 16 Edw. II. Com. journ. 27 Apr. 1689.
- ⟨49⟩ [ed. 2] imports are distinguished into subsidies, tonnage, poundage, and other imposts. Subsidies are | imports were distinguished into subsidies, tonnage, poundage, and other imposts. Subsidies were
- ⟨50⟩ [ed. 8] in Henry the fifth's time, they were granted him for life by a statute in the third year of his reign | in Henry the sixth's time, they were granted him for life by a statute in the thirty first year of his reign
- ⟨51⟩ [ed. 5] sometimes at their first | sometimes at the first
- ⟨52⟩ [ed. 2] as had before happened in the reign of Henry VIII and other princes, they were neglected to be asked | as the noble historian expresses it, his ministers were not sufficiently solicitous for a renewal of this legal grant
- ⟨53⟩ [ed. 2] Stat. 6 Hen. VIII. c. 14. | Hist. Rebell. b. 3.
- ⟨54⟩ [ed. 2] And yet they were | And yet these imposts were
- ⟨55⟩ [ed. 9] parliament, (though more than one had been assembled) for | parliament, for
- ⟨56⟩ [ed. 5] tax on the sale of slaves | tax of the sale of slaves

- <57> [ed. 2] in any other branch of the revenue | in other branches of the revenue
 <58> [ed. 9] Its original establishment | However, its original establishment
 <59> [ed. 4] (Lond. 1659.) | (Lond. 1659. fol.)
 <60> [ed. 2] the people had been accustomed | the nation had been accustomed
 <61> [ed. 8] all plate whatsoever, first in the hands of the vendor, who pays yearly for a licence to sell it, and afterwards in the hands of the occupier, who also pays an annual duty for having it in his custody; and coaches and other wheel carriages, for which the occupier is excised; though not with the same circumstances of arbitrary strictness with regard to plate and coaches, as in the other instances | plate in the hands of the vendor, who pays yearly for a licence to sell it; lands and goods sold by auction, for which a pound-rate is payable by the auctioneer, who also is charged with an annual duty for his licence; and coaches and other wheel carriages, for which the occupier is excised, though not with the same circumstances of arbitrary strictness, as in most of the other instances
 <62> [ed. 2] at the mill | at the vendor's
 <63> [ed. 9] perpetual. | perpetual. [Editorial intervention by Burn:
 Footnote: By statute 22 Geo. III. c. 39. A further duty is laid; particularly, on Glauber and Epsom salts, and mineral alkali or flux for glass, made of rock salt, brine, or sea water, and an annual duty of 5*l.* for a license is charged on the marker thereof.]
 <64> [ed. 5] owes its birth | owes its first legislative establishment
 <65> [ed. 5] special occasions. The outline | special occasions. King James I originally erected a post-office under the controll of one Matthew de Quester or de l'Equester for the conveyance of letters to and from foreign parts; which office was afterwards claimed by lord Stanhope [Footnote: [Lord Stanhope v Ecquester] Latch. Rep. 87.], but was confirmed and continued to William Frizell and Thomas Witherings by king Charles I, A.D. 1632, for the better accommodation of the English merchants [Footnote: 19 Rym. Fæd. 385.] In 1635, the same prince erected a letter-office for England and Scotland, under the direction of the same Thomas Witherings, and settled certain rates of postage [Footnote: Ibid. 650. 20 Rym. 192.]. But this extended only to a few of the principal roads, the times of carriage were uncertain, and the post-masters on each road were required to furnish him [ed. 8: to furnish the mail] with horses at the rate of 2½*d.* a mile. Witherings was superseded, for abuses in the execution of both his offices, in 1640; and they were sequestered into the hands of Philip Burlamachy, to be exercised under the care and oversight of the king's principal secretary of state [Footnote: 20 Rym. 429.] On the breaking out of the civil war, great confusions and interruptions were necessarily occasioned in the conduct of the letter-office. And, about that time, the outline
 <66> [ed. 5] probably considerable | probably very considerable

- <67> [ed. 8] a resolution of the commons | a resolution of the house of commons
 <68> [ed. 2] Ibid. | Com. Journ. 21 Mar. 1649.
 <69> [ed. 4] 5 Geo. III. c. 25. | 5 Geo. III. c. 25. & 7 Geo. III. c. 50.
 <70> [ed. 9] wines, of all denominations; upon all almanacks | wines, letting horses to hire, and for certain other purposes; and upon all almanacks
 <71> [ed. 5] contained: but this draws the subject | contained: as, with us too, (besides the stamps on the indentures) a tax is laid by statute 8 Ann. c. 5. on every apprentice-fee; of 6*d.* in the pound, if it be 50*l.* or under, and 1*s.* in the pound, if a greater sum: but this tends to draw the subject
 [ed. 9] contained (as, with us too, besides the stamps on the indentures, a tax is laid by statute 8 Ann. c. 5. of 6*d.* in the pound, upon every apprentice-fee, if it be 50*l.* or under; and 1*s.* in the pound, if it be a greater sum): but this tends to draw the subject
 <72> [ed. 5] advantage. | advantage. [Footnote: Sp. of L. b. xiii. c. 9.]
 <73> [ed. 5] Our method answers | Our general method answers
 <74> [ed. 8] encreased to five times | encreased to ten times
 <75> [ed. 2] appointed yearly, were, | appointed yearly, (or the surveyor, appointed by the crown, together with such constable or other public officer) were,
 <76> [ed. 9] 3*s.* per house | 3*s.* per annum
 <77> [ed. 2] exceed nine | exceeded nine
 <78> [ed. 2] time to time | time to time [Footnote: Stat. 20 Geo. II. c. 3. 31 Geo. II. c. 22. 2 Geo. III. c. 8. 6 Geo. III. c. 38.]
 <79> [ed. 2] (particularly by statutes 20 Geo. II. c. 3. and 31 Geo. II. c. 22.) | being now extended to all windows exceeding six;
 <80> [ed. 9] there. | there. A new duty from 6*d.* to 1*s.* in the pound, was also imposed by statutes 18 Geo. III. c. 26. and 19 Geo. III. c. 59. on every dwelling-house inhabited, together with the offices and gardens therewith occupied: which duty, as well as the former, is under the direction of the commissioners of the land tax.
 <81> [ed. 8] The seventh branch of the extraordinary perpetual revenue is the duty arising from licences to hackney coaches | The seventh branch of the extraordinary perpetual revenue is a duty of 2*l.s.* per annum for every male servant retained or employed in the several capacities specifically mentioned in the act of parliament, and which almost amount to an universality, except such as are employed in husbandry, trade, or manufactures. This was imposed by statute 17 Geo. III. c. 39. [ed. 9: amended by 19 Geo. III. c. 59.] and is under the management of the commissioners of the land and window tax. [ed. 9 (editorial intervention by Burn):

Footnote: By statutes 21 Geo. III. c. 31. the same is again much altered, and brought under the management of the commissioners of excise.]

- VIII. An eighth branch is the duty arising from licences to hackney coaches
- ⟨82⟩ [ed. 5] subsequent statutes, there are now eight hundred licensed coaches | subsequent statutes for their government, there are now a thousand licensed coaches
- ⟨83⟩ [ed. 4] 10 Ann. c. 19. §.158. 12 Geo. I. c. 15. 33 Geo. II. c. 25. | 10 Ann. c. 19. §.158. 12 Geo. I. c. 15. 7 Geo. III. c. 44. [ed. 5: 11 Geo. III. c. 24. 28. 12 Geo. III. c. 49.]
- ⟨84⟩ [ed. 8] VIII. The eighth and last branch | IX. The ninth and last branch
- ⟨85⟩ [ed. 9] consisting in a payment | consisting in an annual payment
- ⟨86⟩ [ed. 8] duties) out | duties [Footnote: Previous to this, a deduction of 6d. in the pound was charged on all pensions and annuities, and all salaries, fees, and wages of all offices of profit granted by or derived from the crown; in order to pay the interest at the rate of three per cent. on one million, which was raised for discharging the debts on the civil list, by statutes 7 Geo. I. st. I. c. 27. 11 Geo. I. c. 17. and 12 Geo. I. c. 2. This million, being charged on this particular fund, is not considered as any part of the national debt.)] out
- ⟨87⟩ [ed. 9] crown. | crown exceeding the value of 100*l. per annum*
- ⟨88⟩ [ed. 4] amounts annually to about seven millions and three quarters sterling | amounts at present annually to about seven millions and a quarter sterling [ed. 8: seven millions and three quarters sterling]
- ⟨89⟩ [ed. 4] besides two millions and a quarter raised annually, at an average, | besides more than two millions and a quarter raised
- ⟨90⟩ [ed. 9] This laid the foundation | This policy of the English parliament laid the foundation
- ⟨91⟩ [ed. 4] amounted in January 1765 to upwards of 145,000,000*l.* to pay the interest of which, and the charges for management, amounting annually to about four millions and three quarters | amounted in January 1769 to near 142,000,000*l.* [ed. 5: amounted in January 1771 to above 140,000,000*l.*] to pay the interest of which, and the charges for management, amounting annually to upwards of four millions and an half
- [ed. 8] amounted at the close of the session in June 1777, to about an hundred and thirty-six millions: to pay the interest of which, together with certain annuities for lives and years, and the charges of management, amounting annually to upwards of four millions and three quarters
- ⟨92⟩ [ed. 2] the revenues just enumerated | the extraordinary revenues just now enumerated (excepting only the land-tax and annual malt-tax)
- ⟨93⟩ [ed. 5] creating a new species of money, always ready to be employed in any beneficial undertaking, by means of its transferrable quality | creating a new species of currency, assignable at any time and in any quantity; always therefore ready to be employed in any beneficial undertaking, by means of this its transferrable quality
- ⟨94⟩ [ed. 4] productive of some profit | producing some profit

- ⟨95⟩ [ed. 5] itself. | itself. Nay, the very increase of paper-circulation itself, when extended beyond what is requisite for commerce or foreign exchange, has a natural tendency to increase the price of provisions as well as of all other merchandize. For, as its effect is to multiply the cash of the kingdom, and this to such an extent that much must remain unemployed, that cash (which is the universal measure of the respective values of all other commodities) must necessarily sink in its own value [Footnote: See pag. 276 [I. 178].], and every thing grow comparatively dearer.
- ⟨96⟩ [ed. 4] The produce of the several taxes | The respective produces of the several taxes
- ⟨97⟩ [ed. 9] but they have always been considerably more | but though some of them have proved unproductive, and others deficient, the sum total hath always been considerably more
- ⟨98⟩ [ed. 4] amount annually to a very considerable sum; particularly in the year ending at Christmas 1764, to about two millions and a quarter. | particularly in the year ending at Christmas 1768, to almost two millions of money.
[ed. 7] amount annually to a very considerable sum.
- ⟨99⟩ [ed. 9] must needs be extremely | came at length to be extremely
- ⟨100⟩ [ed. 2] on which alone depend | its only domestic resource, on which must chiefly depend
- ⟨101⟩ [ed. 7] the prudent application | the prudent and steady application
- ⟨102⟩ [ed. 2] which has thereby been enabled, in this present year 1765 | which was thereby enabled, in the year 1765
- ⟨103⟩ [ed. 4] public debt. | public debt; and about three millions in the three succeeding years.
[ed. 7] public debt; and several additional millions in several succeeding years.
- ⟨104⟩ [ed. 2] were generally computed to raise almost | were computed to have sometimes raised almost
- ⟨105⟩ [ed. 8] civil list (and that also charged with three life annuities, to the princess of Wales, the duke of Cumberland, and the princess Amalie to the amount of 77000*l.*) the said hereditary and other revenues are now carried into and made a part of the aggregate fund, and the aggregate fund is charged with the payment of the whole annuity to the crown of 800000*l. per annum.* | civil list; the said hereditary and other revenues were carried into and made a part of the aggregate fund, and the aggregate fund was charged with the payment of the whole annuity to the crown of 800,000*l.* which, being found insufficient, was increased in 1777 to 900,000*l. per annum.*
- ⟨106⟩ [ed. 4] will produce more and be better collected than heretofore | produce more and are better collected than heretofore
- ⟨107⟩ [ed. 8] the public is a gainer of upwards of 100,000*l. per annum* by this disinterested bounty of his majesty | the public is still a gainer of near 100,000*l. per annum* by this disinterested conduct of his majesty

- <108> [ed. 4] four millions and three quarters, interest of the national debt, and the two millions and a quarter produced from the sinking fund, make up the seven millions and three quarters per annum | four millions and an half, interest of the national debt, and the two millions produced from the sinking fund, make up the seven millions and a quarter per annum
 [ed. 8] four millions and three quarters, interest of the national debt, and more than two millions produced from the sinking fund, make up the seven millions and three quarters per annum
- <109> [ed. 2] country, and returned into the king's exchequer, amount | country, amount
- <110> [ed. 4] upwards of ten millions | near ten millions
 [ed. 8] about ten millions
- <111> [ed. 9] the expenses of the houshold; all salaries to officers of state, to the judges, and every of the king's servants | the expenses of the royal houshold; the revenues allotted to the judges, previous to the year 1758; all salaries to officers of state, and every of the king's servants
- <112> [ed. 2] maintenance of the royal family | maintenance of the queen and royal family
- <113> [ed. 9] million | million [Footnote: See page 328 [I. 358 <86>]]
- <114> [ed. 4] 11 Geo. I. c. 17. | 11 Geo. I. c. 17. and in 1769, when half a million was appropriated to the like uses, by the statute 9 Geo. III. c. 34.
 [ed. 8] in 1769 and 1777, when half a million and 600,000*l.* were appropriated to the like uses, by the statutes 9 Geo. III. c. 34. and 17 Geo. III. c. 47.
- <115> [ed. 2] though it never in fact amounted to quite so much | though complaints were made (in the first years at least) that it did not amount to so much
- <116> [ed. 8] was considerably more. But that of his present majesty is expressly limited to that sum | was considerably more: and that of his present majesty is avowedly increased to the limited sum of 900,000*l.*
- <117> [ed. 5] sum; and, by reason of the charges upon it, amounts at present to little more than 700,000*l.* And | sum. And
- <118> [ed. 5] the crown, and | the crown, the numerous branches of the present royal family, and
- <119> [ed. 9] salaries independent | salaries liberal and independent
- <120> [ed. 2] from operating on parliamentary impeachments | from being pleaded to [ed. 4: from obstructing] parliamentary impeachments.
- <121> [ed. 9] so that it greatly depends on the liberality of parliament | so that it must greatly rely on the liberality of parliament
- <122> [ed. 5] gives the executive power | give the executive power
- <123> [ed. 4] seven millions | almost seven millions

Chapter 9

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 5] Salk. 347. | Salk. 347. [Yaxley's Case] Carth. 291.
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 2] two Saxon words, shire reeve, the bailiff | two Saxon words, scir [ed. 4: scire] gerefa, the reeve, bailiff,
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] For antiently in some counties, particularly on the borders, the sheriffs were hereditary; as I apprehend they are in Scotland, and in the county of Westmorland, to this day: and the city of London has also the inheritance | For antiently in some counties the sheriffs were hereditary; as I apprehend they were in Scotland till the statute 20 Geo. II. c. 43; and still continue in the county of Westmorland to this day: the city of London having also the inheritance
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 9] the judges of their county courts | the judges of the county courts
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] the lord chancellor | the chancellor
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] 23 Hen. VI. c. 8 | 23 Hen. VI. c. 8 and 21 Hen. VIII. c. 20.
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] exchequer. | exchequer. And the king's letters patent, appointing the new sheriffs, used commonly to bear date the sixth day of November [Footnote: Stat. 12 Edw. IV. c. 1.] The statute of Cambridge, 12 Ric. II. c. 2. ordains, that the chancellor, treasurer, keeper of the privy seal, steward of the king's house, the king's chamberlain, clerk of the rolls, the justices of the one bench and the other, barons of the exchequer, and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make justices of the peace, sheriffs, and other officers of the king, shall be sworn to act indifferently, and to name no man that sueth [ed. 9: appoint no man that sueth either privily or openly] to be put in office, but such only as they shall judge to be the best and most sufficient.
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] judges, and certain other great officers, meet in the exchequer chamber on the morrow | judges, together with the other great officers, meet in the exchequer chamber on the morrow
[ed. 9] judges, together with the other great officers and privy counsellors, meet in the exchequer on the morrow
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] by the act for abbreviating | by the last act for abbreviating
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] and then and there nominate three persons | and then and there propose three persons
[ed. 9] and then and there the judges propose three persons, to be reported (if approved of) to the king, who afterwards appoints one of them to be sheriff
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] judges nominating | judges proposing
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 5] directions of all the statutes | direction of all the statutes
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] council book | council book, and the statute 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 26. §. 61. which expressly recognizes this to be the law of the land
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] the only precedent | the only authority

- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] kingdom. So that sheriffs cannot now be legally appointed, otherwise than according to the known and established law. | kingdom. However, it must be acknowledged, that the practice of occasionally naming what are called pocket-sheriffs, by the sole authority of the crown, hath been uniformly continued to this day. [ed. 4: hath uniformly continued to the reign of his present majesty; in which, I believe, few (if any) instances [ed. 9: compulsory instances] have occurred.]
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 4] bound in a bond for the due execution | bound in an obligation [ed. 9: with sureties] for the due execution
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] Stat. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 21. | Stat. 9 Edw. II. st. 2. 2 Edw. III. c. 4. 4 Edw. III. c. 9. 5 Edw. III. c. 4. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 21. §. 7.
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 7] statute 32 Geo. II. c. 28. | statute 32 Geo. II. c. 28. and by statute 14 Geo. III. c. 59. provisions are made for better preserving the health of prisoners and preventing the gaol distemper.
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 7] no sheriff should keep | no sheriff (except of London, Westmorland, and towns which are counties of themselves) should keep
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 5] verderors of the forests | verderors of the forest
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 2] should be chosen. But it seems it is now sufficient if a man have lands enough to be made a knight, whether he be really knighted or not: and there was an instance in the 5 Edw. III. of a man being removed from this office, because he was only a merchant. The coroner ought also to have estate sufficient | should be chosen: and there was an instance in the 5 Edw. III of a man being removed from this office, because he was only a merchant. But it seems it is now sufficient if a man hath lands enough to be made a knight, whether he be really knighted or not: for the coroner ought to have estate sufficient
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 2] no coroner would condescend to be paid for serving his country | no coroners would condescend to be paid for serving their country
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 2] though they have since his time been much enlarged | though since his time those fees have been much enlarged
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 2] in enquiring (when any person is slain or dies suddenly) concerning | in enquiring, when any person is slain, or dies suddenly, or in prison, concerning
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 9] inquest of murder, he is to commit to prison | inquest of murder or other homicide, he is to commit them to prison
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 9] whether it be murder or not, | whether it be homicide or not,
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 9] inquisition to the court of king's bench, or the next assises. | inquisition (under his own seal and the seals of the jurors [Footnote: Stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. 2 West. Symbol. §. 310. Crompt. 264. Tremain. P. C. 621.]) together with the evidence thereon, to the court of king's bench, or the next assises.
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 2] conservators of the peace, were chosen | conservators of the peace, either claimed that power by prescription [Footnote: Ibid. 15.] or were bound to exercise it by the tenure of their lands [Footnote: Ibid. 17.]; or, lastly, were chosen

- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 4] quorum. | quorum. When any justice intends to act under this commission, he sues out a writ of dedimus potestatem, from the clerk of the crown in chancery, empowering certain persons therein named, to administer the usual oaths to him; which done, he is at liberty to act.
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 4] Stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 27. | Stat. 26 Geo. II. c. 27. See also stat. 7 Geo. III. c. 21.
- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 2] 100*l.* which is almost an equivalent to the 20*l.* per annum required in Henry the sixth's time: and of this qualification the justice must now make oath. | 100*l.* This qualification is almost an equivalent to the 20*l.* per annum required in Henry the sixth's time: and of this the justice must now make oath.
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 4] after. | after. But if the same justice is put in commission by the successor, he shall not be obliged to sue out a new dedimus, or to swear to his qualification afresh [Footnote: Stat. 1 Geo. III. c. 13.]; nor, by reason of any new commission, to take the oaths more than once in the same reign [Footnote: Stat. 7 Geo. III. c. 9.]
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 2] great lenity and indulgence is shewn to him | great lenity and indulgence are shewn to him
- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 8] is sure to be severely punished | is usually severely punished
- ⟨35⟩ [ed. 5] subsequent parts of these commentaries | subsequent part of these commentaries
- ⟨36⟩ [ed. 8] put upon these offices | put into these offices
- ⟨37⟩ [ed. 8] chiefly intended of the day time | chiefly applied to the day time
- ⟨38⟩ [ed. 2] what duties belong | what powers and duties belong
- ⟨39⟩ [ed. 4] for the tithing-man has not an equal power | the tithing-man not having an equal power
- ⟨40⟩ [ed. 4] Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12. | Stat. 7 Geo. III. c. 42.
[ed. 7] Stat. 13 Geo. III. c. 78.
[ed. 9: text deleted]
- ⟨41⟩ [ed. 7] out of such substantial inhabitants as have either 10*l.* per annum of their own, or rent 30*l.* a year, or are worth in personal estate 100*l.* | out of such substantial inhabitants or others, as are specially described in a subsequent statute; and may have salaries allotted them for their trouble.
[ed. 9] out of such inhabitants or others, as are described in statute 13 Geo. III. c. 78.
- ⟨42⟩ [ed. 4] a variety of statutes for the repairs of the highways; that is, of ways leading from one town to another: by which it is enacted | a variety of antient statutes for the repairs of the public highways; that is, of ways leading from one town to another: all which are now reduced into one act by statute 7 Geo.

III. c. 42. explained by 8 Geo. III. c. 5. [ed. 7: by statute 13 Geo. III. c. 78. amended by 14 Geo. III. c. 14.] By these it is enacted

[ed. 9] a variety of laws for the repairs of the public highways; that is, of ways leading from one town to another: all which are now reduced into one act by statute 13 Geo. III. c. 78. which enacts

- ⟨43⟩ [ed. 4] inhabitants of the parish, six days in every year, to labour in repairing the highways; all persons keeping draughts, or occupying lands, being obliged to send a team for every draught, and for every 50*l.* a year, which they keep or occupy; and all other persons to work or find a labourer. | inhabitants and occupiers of lands, tenements, and hereditaments within the parish, six days in every year, to labour in fetching materials or repairing the highways: all persons keeping draughts [ed. 7: (of three horses, etc.)], or occupying lands, being obliged to send a team for every draught, and for every 50*l.* a year, which they keep or occupy; and a labourer for every 10*l.* and all other men, between the ages of eighteen and sixty five, to work or find a labourer. [ed. 7: or occupy; persons keeping less than a draught, or occupying less than 50*l.* a year, to contribute in a less proportion; and all other persons chargeable, between the ages of eighteen and sixty-five, to work or find a labourer.]
- ⟨44⟩ [ed. 4] labourer. The work must be completed before harvest; as well for providing a good road for carrying in the corn, as also because all hands are then supposed to be employed in harvest work. And | labourer. But they may compound with the surveyors, at certain easy rates established by the act. And
- ⟨45⟩ [ed. 4] cartway must be made eight feet wide at the least; and may be increased by the quarter sessions to the breadth of four and twenty feet. 3. | cartway leading to any market-town must be made twenty feet wide at the least, if the fences will permit; and may be increased by two justices, at the expense of the parish, to the breadth of thirty feet. 3.
- ⟨46⟩ [ed. 4] This, by the laws of the twelve tables at Rome, was the standard for roads that were straight; but in winding ways, the breadth was directed to be sixteen feet. Ff. 8. 3. 8. | [footnote deleted]
- ⟨47⟩ [ed. 4] repairs, where there is not sufficient within the parish, and shall be reimbursed | repairs, in erecting guide posts, and making drains, and shall be reimbursed
- ⟨48⟩ [ed. 7] levy a rate (not exceeding 6*d.* in the pound) on the parish, in aid of the personal duty | levy a rate on the parish, in aid of the personal duty, not exceeding, in any one year, together with the other highway rates, the sum of 9*d.* in the pound
- ⟨49⟩ [ed. 9] now universally introduced | now pretty generally introduced
- ⟨50⟩ [ed. 4] these depend entirely on the particular powers granted in the several road acts, and therefore have nothing to do with this compendium of general law. | these depend principally on the particular powers granted in the several road acts, and upon some general provisions which are extended to all turnpike roads in the kingdom, by statute 7 Geo. III. c. 40. [ed. 7: by statute 13 Geo. III. c. 84. amended by 14 Geo. III. c. 57. & 82. [ed. 9: amended by many subsequent acts [Footnote: Stat. 14 Geo. III. c. 14. 36. 57. 82. 16 Geo. III. c. 39. 18 Geo. III. c. 28.] ]]

- ⟨51⟩ [ed. 2] the poor are directed to be sustained in the cities | the poor are directed to abide in the cities
- ⟨52⟩ [ed. 8] king Henry the eighth | king Henry the eighth and his children
- ⟨53⟩ [ed. 8] had of late years strangely increased | had of late years greatly increased
- ⟨54⟩ [ed. 8] his son Edward the sixth founded | Edward the sixth founded
- ⟨55⟩ [ed. 2] one month after, by two justices | one month after, (though a subsequent nomination will be valid) [Footnote: [R. v Sparrow] Stra. 1123.] by two justices
- ⟨56⟩ [ed. 8] stocks to be worked up at home | stocks of raw materials to be worked up at home, which perhaps might be more beneficial than accumulating [ed. 9: at their separate homes, instead of accumulating]
- ⟨57⟩ [ed. 9] a practice which tends to destroy all domestic connexions (the only felicity of the honest and industrious labourer) and to put the sober and diligent upon a level, in point of their earnings, with those who are dissolute and idle. | a practice which puts the sober and diligent upon a level (in point of their earnings) with those who are dissolute and idle, depresses the laudable emulation of domestic industry and neatness, and destroys all endearing family connexions, the only felicity of the indigent.
- ⟨58⟩ [ed. 9] if none were to be relieved | if none were relieved
- ⟨59⟩ [ed. 9] if no children were to be removed | if no children were removed
- ⟨60⟩ [ed. 9] were employed whenever they requested it, and were allowed | were regularly furnished with employment, and allowed
- ⟨61⟩ [ed. 9] a spirit of chearful industry would soon | a spirit of busy cheerfulness would soon
- ⟨62⟩ [ed. 9] necessary to their daily subsistence; and the most indigent peasant | necessary for daily subsistence; and the peasant
- ⟨63⟩ [ed. 2] by birth, inhabitancy | by birth, or by inhabitancy
- ⟨64⟩ [ed. 2] By birth; which is always | By birth; for, wherever a child is first known to be, that is always
- ⟨65⟩ [ed. 2] 1 Lord Raym. 567. | [Whitechapel Parish v Stepney Parish] Carth. 433. [Banbury Parish v Broughton Parish] Comb. 364. [St. Nicholas, Guil[d]ford (Inhabitants) v Killington (Inhabitants)] [2] Salk. 485. 1 Lord Raym. 567.
- ⟨66⟩ [ed. 7] This is also always the place | This is also generally the place
- ⟨67⟩ [ed. 7] child; | child [Footnote: See p. 459 [I. 296]];
- ⟨68⟩ [ed. 5] all children being really settled | all legitimate children being really settled

- ⟨69⟩ [ed. 5] changes her own | changes her own settlement
- ⟨70⟩ [ed. 2] But if the man be a foreigner, and has no settlement, her's is suspended during his life, if he be able to maintain her; but after his death she may return again to her old settlement. | But if the man has no settlement, her's is suspended during his life, if he remains in England and is able to maintain her; but in his absence, or after his death, or during (perhaps) his inability, she may return [ed. 4: she may be removed] to her old settlement.
- ⟨71⟩ [ed. 2] Foley. 249. | Foley. 249, 251, 252.
[ed. 4] Foley. 249, 251, 252. Burr. Sett. C. 370.
- ⟨72⟩ [ed. 9] but accompanied with one or other | but made notorious, by one or other
- ⟨73⟩ [ed. 2] levies of the parish; and, | levies of the parish (excepting those for scavengers, highways [Footnote: Stat. 9 Geo. I. c. 7. §. 6], and windows [Footnote: Stat. 21 Geo. II. c. 10. §. 13.]) and,
[ed. 9] levies of the parish; excepting those for scavengers, highways [Footnote: 9 Geo. I. c. 7. §. 6] and the duties on houses and windows [Footnote: Stat. 21 Geo. II. c. 10. 18 Geo. III. c. 26.]) and,
- ⟨74⟩ [ed. 2] Executing any public parochial office for a whole year in the parish, as church-warden, &c; are both of them equivalent to notice, and gain a settlement, when coupled | Executing, when legally appointed, any public parochial office for a whole year in the parish, as church-warden, &c; are both of them equivalent to notice, and gain a settlement, if coupled
- ⟨75⟩ [ed. 2] unmarried, and serving a year | unmarried and childless, and serving a year
- ⟨76⟩ [ed. 7] an apprentice for seven years; give the servant | an apprentice, give the servant
- ⟨77⟩ [ed. 2] pains that has been taken | pains that have been taken
- ⟨78⟩ [ed. 4] and then form visionary schemes, and at length | and at length

Chapter 10

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 2] when Edward III | when our Edward III
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 2] With us in England | But with us in England
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] claim of the pretender, by name, in | claim of the descendants of the late pretender, in
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] Stat. 1 Geo. I c. 13 | Stat. 1 Geo. I c. 13. 6 Geo. III. c. 53.
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] But the oath of allegiance | And the oath of allegiance
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] advantage of escheat thereby | advantage of forfeiture thereby

- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 7] 7 Ann. c. 5. and 4 Geo. II. c. 21. | 7 Ann. c. 5. 4 Geo. II. c. 21. and 13 Geo. III. c. 21.
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 7] whose fathers were natural-born subjects, are now natural-born subjects themselves, to all intents and purposes, without any exception; unless their said fathers were attainted, | whose fathers (or grandfathers by the father's side) were natural-born subjects, are now deemed to be natural-born subjects themselves, to all intents and purposes; unless their said ancestors were attainted,
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 7] or were then in the service of a prince at enmity with Great Britain.
 THE children | or were at the birth of such children in the service of a prince at enmity with Great Britain. Yet so as that the [ed. 9: Yet the] grandchildren of such ancestors shall not be privileged in respect of the alien's duty, except they be protestants, and actually reside within the realm; nor shall be enabled to claim any estate or interest, unless the claim be made within five years after the same shall accrue.
 THE children
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 7] any grant from the crown. | any grant of lands, etc. from the crown.
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 7] the privy council, or parliament, &c. | the privy council, or parliament, holding offices, grants, &c.
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 7] without such disabling clause in it. | without such disabling clause in it: nor without a clause disabling the person from obtaining any immunity in trade thereby, in any foreign country; unless he shall have resided in Britain for seven years next after the commencement of the session in which he is naturalized [Footnote: Stat. 14 Geo. III. c. 84.].
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 8] parliament. | parliament. But these provisions have been usually dispensed with by special acts of parliament, previous to bills of naturalization of any foreign princes or princesses [Footnote: Stat. 4 Ann. c. 1. 7 Geo. II. c. 3. 9 Geo. II. c. 24. 4 Geo. III. c. 4.].
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 9] which endeavors have been frequently used since the commencement | which it hath been frequently endeavoured since the commencement
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 7] an English ship is ipso facto naturalized; and all foreign protestants, | an English ship by virtue of the king's proclamation, is ipso facto naturalized under the like restrictions as in statute 12 & 13 W. III. c. 2.; and all foreign protestants,
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 4] time, are upon taking the oaths | time, or serving two years in a military capacity there, are (upon taking the oaths)
 [ed. 7] time, and all foreign protestants serving two years in a military capacity there, or being three years employed in the whale fishery, without afterward absenting themselves from the king's dominions for more than one year, and none of them falling within the incapacities declared by statute 4 Geo. II. c. 21. Shall be (upon taking the oaths of allegiance and abjuration, or in some cases, an affirmation to the same effect)

- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 7] born in this kingdom; and therefore are admissible to all such privileges, and no other, as protestants or Jews | born in this kingdom; except as to sitting in parliament or in the privy council, and holding offices or grants of lands, &c. from the crown within the kingdoms of Great Britain or Ireland. They therefore are admissible to all other privileges, which protestants or Jews
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 7] 13 Geo. II. c. 7. 20 Geo. II. c. 24. 2 Geo. III. c. 25. | 13. Geo. II. c. 7. 20 Geo. II. c. 44. 22 Geo. II. c. 45. 2 Geo. III. c. 25. 13 Geo. III. c. 25.
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 4] What those privileges are, was the subject | What those privileges are, with respect to Jews in particular, was the subject
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 9] found in Molloy de jure maritimo. b. 3. c. 6. | found in Prynne's demurrer, and in Molloy de jure maritimo. b. 3. c. 6.

Chapter 11

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 2] are not allowed to take any lands | are not (in general) allowed to take any lands
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 7] avoidance of the lease; nor shall engage in any manner of trade | avoidance of the lease; nor upon like pain to keep any tanhouse or brewhouse; nor shall engage in any manner of trade
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] by which they have bound themselves | by which the clergy have bound themselves
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] took the election in some degree | took the appointment in some degree
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 4] by this dispute | by this papal claim
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 4] was prevailed upon | was also prevailed upon
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 5] 2 Roll. Abr. 223. | 2 Roll. Abr. 229.
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 8] and not his successors | and not on his successors
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 4] It is also the privilege | It is likewise the privilege
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] consists principally in inspecting | consist principally in inspecting
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 8] 2 Roll. Abr. 352. Salk. 137. | Bro. Abr. t. presentation. 3. 61. [Armiger v Holland] [Sir Robert Basset v Gee] Cro. Eliz. 542. 790. 2 Roll. Abr. 352. [Attorney-General v Bishop of London] 4 Mod. 200. [Bishop of St. David's v Lucy] [1] Salk. 137.
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 8] clergy, and therefore armed with an inferior degree | clergy, to inquire into and report dilapidations, and to examine the candidates for confirmation; and armed, in minuter matters, with an inferior degree
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 8] Gibs. cod. 972. | Gibs. cod. 972, 1550.
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] vicars of parishes | vicars of churches

- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 9] whom the law esteems | which the law esteems
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 5] called privy, small, or vicarial, tithes | called privy or small tithes
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 7] hence many things, as wood in particular, is in some countries a rectorial, and in some a vicarial tithe. | hence the tithes of many things, as wood in particular, are in some parishes rectorial, and in some vicarial tithes.
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] or bring any action for them | or bring an action for them
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 5] but there are only two, which can be relied on with any degree of certainty; bishop Gibson's codex, and Dr Burn's ecclesiastical law. | but there are few which can be relied on with certainty. Among these are bishop Gibson's codex, Dr Burn's ecclesiastical law, and the earlier editions of the clergyman's law, published under the name of Dr Watson, but compiled by Mr Place a barrister.
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 8] parsonage house: for it hath been resolved, | parsonage house, if there be one: for it hath been resolved,
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 8] but also for maintaining the house, that the successor also may keep hospitality there. | but likewise for maintaining the house, that the successor also may keep hospitality there: and, if there be no parsonage house, it hath been holden that the incumbent is bound to hire one, in the same or some neighbouring parish, to answer the purposes of residence. For the more effectual promotion of which important duty among the parochial clergy, a provision is made by the statute 17 Geo. III. c. 53 for raising money upon ecclesiastical benefices, to be paid off by annually decreasing installments, and to be expended in rebuilding or repairing the houses belonging to such benefices.
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 8] or upwards, in the king's books, (according to the present valuation), | or upwards (according to the present valuation in the kings books,)
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 8] mentioned before, | mentioned before [Footnote: page 383 [I. 246]],
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 8] By deprivation, either by canonical censures, of which I am not to speak; or in pursuance of divers penal statutes | By deprivation; either, first, by sentence declaratory in the ecclesiastical courts, for fit and sufficient causes allowed by the common law; such as attainder of treason or felony [Footnote: [Bishop of Chichester v Webb ] Dyer. 108. [Century 5, case xlv] Jenk. 210.], or conviction of other infamous crime in the king's courts; of heresy, infidelity [Footnote: Fitzh. Abr. t. Trial. 54.], gross immorality, and the like: or, secondly, in pursuance of divers penal statutes
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 5] to read the articles | to read the liturgy and articles
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 2] instead of the real incumbent | instead of the proper incumbent
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 7] to be licenced, the ordinary shall settle | to be licenced to serve the cure in his absence, the ordinary shall settle
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 2] formerly always in holy orders | formerly very frequently in holy orders

Chapter 12

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 7] all degrees of honour are not | all degrees of nobility are not
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 7] A duke, though it be with us, as a mere title of nobility, | A duke, though he be with us, in respect of his title of nobility,
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 7] being the first title of dignity | his being the first title of dignity
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 8] as the German hertzogen | as the German hertzog
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 8] any subjects with that title | any subjects with the title of duke
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 8] raised to the same honour | raised to the like honour
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 8] a limit: as, in particular, were the marches of Wales and Scotland, while they continued to be enemies countries | a limit: as [ed. 9: such as], in particular, were the marches of Wales and Scotland, while each continued to be an enemy's country
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 4] Ibid. | [Camden] Britan. t. ordines.
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 9] It is now become a mere title | The name of earls or comites is now become a mere title
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] In all writs, and commissions, [...] always stiles him | In writs, and commissions, [...] frequently [ed. 4: usually] stiles him
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] the rule does not hold universally | the rule doth not hold universally
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 8] has occasioned great enquiries among our English antiquarians | has [ed. 9: have] occasioned great inquiries among our English antiquaries
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] the writ of summons to them or their ancestors | the writ of summons to him or his ancestors
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 7] unless he actually takes his seat | unless he actually take his seat
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] lords: and therefore the most usual, | lords: and some are of opinion that there must be at least two writs of summons, and a sitting in two distinct parliaments, to evidence an hereditary barony [Footnote: Whitelocke of parl. ch. 114.]: and therefore the most usual,
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 8] As to peeresses, no provision was made for their trial when accused of treason or felony, till after Eleanor dutchess [ed. 5: duchess] | As to peeresses, there was no precedent for their trial when accused of treason or felony, till after Eleanor duchess
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 8] which enacts that peeresses, [...] judicature as peers | which declares [Footnote: [Countess of Rutland's Case] Moor. 769. 2 Inst. 50. [Countess of Rutland's case] 6 Rep. 52. Staundf. P. C. 152.] the law to be, that peeresses, [...] judicature as other peers
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 8] lost. | lost. [Footnote: [Haward v Duke of Suffolk] Dyer. 79. Co. Litt. 16.]
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 8] subjected to peculiar punishment | subjected to peculiar punishments

- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 2] By lord chancellor Ellesmere. Moor. 678. | Moor. 678.
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 2] our legal antiquarians are not so much as agreed upon their original | our legal antiquarians [ed. 8: antiquaries] are not agreed upon even their original
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 5] Now therefore the first dignity| Now therefore the first personal dignity
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 5] Next follows a knight banneret; | Next (but not till after certain official dignities, as privy counsellors, the chancellors of the exchequer and duchy of Lancaster, the chief justice of the king's bench, the master of the rolls, and the other English judges) follows a knight banneret;
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 5] and that precedence was confirmed | and his precedence before the younger sons of viscounts was confirmed
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 8] as part of the public | as part of the community
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 9] because they formed a part, or indeed the whole of the royal army, | because they formed a part of the royal army,
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 9] a knights fee (which in Henry the second's time | a knight's fee immediately under the crown (which in Edward the second's time
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 9] Glanvil. l. 9. c. 4. | Stat. de milit. 1 Edw. II.
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 9] but it was, at the restoration, together with all other military branches of the feudal law, abolished; | but it was by the statute 16 Car. I. c. 16 abolished;
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 5] learned professions. | learned professions. [Footnote: The rules of precedence in England may be reduced to the following table: in which, those marked * are intitled to the rank here allotted them, by statute 31 Hen. VIII. c. 10. ——— marked †, by statute 1 W. & M. c. 21. ——— marked ||, by letters patent 9, 10, and 14 Jac. I. which see in Seld. tit. of hon. II. 5. 46. and II. 11. 3. ——— marked ‡, by antient usage and established custom; for which see (among others) Camden's Britannia. tit. ordines. Milles's catalogue of honour, edit. 1610. and Chamberlayne's present state of England. b. 3. ch. 3.

TABLE OF PRECEDENCE.

* The king's children and grandchildren.	* Lord privy seal,	} above all peers of their own degree.
* — — — brethren.	* Lord great chamberlain.
* — — — uncles.	But see private stat. 1 Geo.
* — — — nephews.	I. c. 3.
* Archbishop of Canterbury.	* Lord high constable.
* Lord chancellor or keeper, if a baron.	* Lord marshall.
* Archbishop of York.	* Lord admiral.
* Lord treasurer,	* Lord steward of the household.
* Lord president of the council, } if barons	* Lord chamberlain of the household.

* Dukes.	Chief justice of the king's bench.
* Marquesses.	Master of the rolls.
‡ Dukes' eldest sons.	Chief justice of the common pleas.
* Earls.	Chief baron of the exchequer.
‡ Marquesses' eldest sons.	Judges, and barons of the coif.
‡ Dukes' younger sons.	Knights bannerets, royal.
* Viscounts.	Viscounts' younger sons.
‡ Earls' eldest sons.	Barons' younger sons.
‡ Marquesses' younger sons.	Baronets.
* Secretary of state, if a bishop.	Knights bannerets.
* Bishop of London.	‡ Knights of the bath.
* — — — Durham.	‡ Knights bachelors.
* — — — Winchester.	Baronets' eldest sons.
* Bishops.	Knights' eldest sons.
* Secretary of state, if a baron.	Baronets' younger sons.
* Barons.	Knights' younger sons.
† Speaker of the house of commons.	‡ Colonels.
† Lords commissioners of the great seal.	‡ Serjeants-at-law.
‡ Viscounts' eldest sons.	‡ Doctors.
‡ Earls' younger sons.	‡ Esquires.
‡ Barons' eldest sons.	‡ Gentlemen.
Knights of the Garter.	‡ Yeomen.
Privy counsellors.	‡ Tradesmen.
Chancellor of the exchequer.	‡ Artificers.
Chancellor of the duchy.	‡ Labourers.

N. B. Married women and widows are entitled to the same rank among each other, as their husbands would respectively have born between themselves, except such rank is merely professional or official;—and unmarried women to the same rank as their eldest brothers would bear among men, during the lives of their fathers.

- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 5] The younger sons of peers, | The eldest sons of younger sons of peers,
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 2] and the eldest sons of peers of Great Britain, who, though generally titular lords | for not only these, but the eldest sons of peers of Great Britain, though frequently titular lords
- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 9] who is thereby qualified | who was antiently thereby qualified

- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 8] or mystery, in all actions and other legal proceedings | or mystery, and the place to which they belong, or where they have been conversant, in all original writs of actions personal, appeals, and indictments, upon which process of outlawry may be awarded; in order, as it should seem, to prevent any clandestine or mistaken outlawry, by reducing to a specific certainty the person who is the object of its process

Chapter 13

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 5] forty days service in the field, the statute of Winchester obliged every man, | forty days service in the field, first the assise of arms, enacted 27 Hen. II [Footnote: Hoved. A.D. 1181.] and afterwards the statute of Winchester, under Edward I, obliged every man,
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 5] in all hundreds to see that | in all hundreds by the latter statute, to see that
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 8] in the 5 Hen. IV. | in the 5 Hen. IV, so as to prevent the insertion therein of any new penal clauses.
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 8] Rushworth. part 3. pag. 667. | Rushworth. part 3. pag. 662. 667 [ed 9: Rushworth. part 3. pag. 662. 667. See 8 Rym. 374, etc.]
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 8] king Henry the eighth, and his children, lord lieutenants | king Henry the eighth, or his children, lieutenants
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 8] introduced, | introduced [Footnote: 15 Rym. 75.],
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 8] danger. | danger. But the introduction of these commissions of lieutenancy, which contained in substance the same powers as the old commissions of array, caused the latter to fall into disuse.
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 7] which right perhaps | which claim perhaps [ed. 9] which perhaps
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 8] or actual rebellion, nor | or actual rebellion within the realm, (or any of its dominions or territories) [Footnote: Stat. 16 Geo. III. c. 3.] nor
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 8] or domestic violence; and which the statutes declare is essentially necessary to the safety and prosperity of the kingdom. | or domestic violence.
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 4] 30 Geo. II. c. 25., &c. | 2 Geo. III. c. 20, &c. 9 Geo. III. c. 42.
[ed. 8] 2 Geo. III. c. 20. 9 Geo. III. c. 42. 16 Geo. III. c. 3.
[ed. 9] 2 Geo. III. c. 20. 9 Geo. III. c. 42. 16 Geo. III. c. 3. 18 Geo. III. c. 14. & 59. 19 Geo. III. c. 72.
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 2] When the nation is engaged in a foreign war, more veteran troops and more regular discipline may perhaps be necessary, than can be expected from a mere militia. And therefore at such times particular provisions have been usually made for | When the nation was engaged in war, more veteran troops and more regular discipline were esteemed to be necessary, than could be expected from a mere militia. And therefore at such times more rigorous methods were put in use for

- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] Wherefore Edmond earl of Kent being taken at Pontefract, 15 Edw. II. and condemned by martial law | Wherefore Thomas earl of Lancaster being condemned at Pontefract, 15 Edw. II. by martial law
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 2] peace. | peace [Footnote: 2 Brad. Append. 59.]
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 9] And the petition of right enacts | The petition of right moreover enacts
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 4] standing armies has universally prevailed over all Europe of late years | standing armies (which was first introduced by Charles VII in France, A.D. 1445 [Footnote: Robertson. Cha. V. i. 94.]) has of late years universally prevailed over Europe
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 4] parliament. | parliament. And it was enacted by stat. 10 W. III. c. 1. that not more than twelve thousand regular forces should be kept on foot in Ireland, though paid at the charge of that kingdom: which permission is extended by statute 8 Geo. III. c. 13. to 16235 men, in time of peace.
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 9] Like ours therefore, it | Like ours, it
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 4] officer and soldier | officer or soldier
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 8] before the judges of the common law | before justices at the common law
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 2] the faults therein mentioned | the faults above-mentioned
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 9] power. | power. A like power over the marines is given to the lords of the admiralty, by another annual act “for the regulation of his majesty’s marine forces while on shore.”
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 9] inflict such penalties as the articles direct | inflict penalties by sentence or judgment of the same
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 5] of introducing slavery | in introducing slavery
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 2] where there no real liberty exists | where no real liberty exists
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 2] may make their wills | may make nuncupative wills
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 5] to mortify the sugar islands | to mortify our own sugar islands
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 5] impressing men | impressing sea-faring men
- ⟨29⟩ [ed. 8] See also Comb. 245. | See also Comb. 245. Barr. 334.
- ⟨30⟩ [ed. 9] Stat. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 21. 2 Ann. c. 6. 4 & 5. Ann. c. 19. 13. Geo. II. c. 17 &c. | See Stat. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 21. 2 Ann. c. 6. 4 & 5. Ann. c. 19. 13. Geo. II. c. 17. 2 Geo. III. c. 15. 11 Geo. III. c. 38. 19 Geo. III. c. 75. &c.
- ⟨31⟩ [ed. 4] impressed. | impressed. And ferrymen are also said to be privileged from being impressed [Footnote: [Case of Ferry and Ferryman] Sav. 14.], at common law.
- ⟨32⟩ [ed. 7] Stat. 1 Geo. II. st. 2. c. 14. | Stat. 31 Geo. II. c. 20.

- ⟨33⟩ [ed. 8] being judged to be rather a badge of slavery, was abolished | being judged to be ineffectual as well as oppressive, was abolished
- ⟨34⟩ [ed. 9] Stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 23. | Stat. 22 Geo. II. c. 33. amended by 19 Geo. III. c. 17.
- ⟨35⟩ [ed. 7] or wounded, or superannuate | or wounded, or superannuated
- ⟨36⟩ [ed. 2] making informal testaments | making nuncupative testaments
- ⟨37⟩ [ed. 7] Stat. 1 Geo. II. st. 2. c. 14. | Stat. 31 Geo. II. c. 10.

Chapter 14

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 7] snatched away by death or otherwise, before | snatched away by death before
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 5] foundations. | foundations [Footnote: Montesq. Sp. L. xv. 2.]
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] much less can it reduce | much less can they reduce
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] the enjoyment of his person, his liberty, and his property | the enjoyment of his person, and his property
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] may have acquired, by contract or the like, to the perpetual service | may have acquired [ed. 5: may have lawfully acquired] to the perpetual service
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] a civil contract, either express or implied, between master and servant, | a civil obligation between master and servant,
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] either of the contracting parties: | either of the parties:
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] the same liberty in England | the same protection in England
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] owed to his English master, the same is he bound | owed to his American master, the same is he bound [ed. 5] owed of right to his American master, by general not by local law, the same (whatever it be) is he bound
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] when a christian. | when brought to England and made a christian.
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] service, for the promotion | service in husbandry or certain specific trades, for the promotion
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 2] leave his master, | leave his master, after being so retained,
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 2] and be maintained and instructed by them: for which purpose our statute law has made minors capable of binding themselves | and be maintained and instructed by them.
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 9] 17 Geo. II. c. 5. | 17 Geo. II. c. 5. 18 Geo. III. c. 47.
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 9] till twenty four years of age | till twenty-one years of age
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 2] to such compulsion. | to such compulsion: for which purposes our statutes have made the indentures obligatory, even though such parish-

- apprentice be a minor [Footnote: Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. 43 Eliz. c. 2. [Gylbert v Fletcher] Cro. Car. 179.].
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] given with the apprentice. And parish apprentices may be discharged in the same manner, by two justices. | given with the apprentice: and parish apprentices may be discharged in the same manner, by two justices. But if an apprentice, with whom less than ten pounds hath been given, runs away from his master, he is compellable to serve out his time of absence, or make satisfaction for the same, at any time within seven years after the expiration of his original contract [Footnote: Stat. 6 Geo. III. c. 25.].
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 2] the statute so often cited has made | the statutes before cited have made
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 2] Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. | Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. 6 Geo. III. c. 25.
- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 7] serving as apprentices | serving seven years as apprentices
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 7] Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. | Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. §. 31.
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 9] seven years is sufficient without any binding; for the statute only says, the person must serve as an apprentice, and does not require an actual apprenticeship to have existed | seven years without any effectual prosecution (either as a master or a servant) is sufficient without an actual apprenticeship
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 9] Lord. Raym. 1179 | Lord. Raym. 1179. Wallen qui tam v Holton. Tr[inity] 33 Geo. II. (by all the judges)
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 5] correct his apprentice or servant for negligence | correct his apprentice for negligence
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 5] Lamb. Eiren. 127. | Lamb. Eiren. 127. [Gylbert v Fletcher] Cro. Car. 179. [R. v Keller and R. v Duhammel]. 2 Show. 289.
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 5] if the master's wife beats him, it is good cause | if the master or master's wife beats any other servant of full age, it is good cause
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 5] F. N. B. 168. | F. N. B. 168. Bro. Abr. t. Laborers 51. Trespass 349.
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 9] guilty of it: not that the servant is excused | guilty of it: though the servant is not thereby excused

Chapter 15

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 2] the reciprocal duties | the reciprocal rights and duties
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 2] unlawful marriages | unlawful marriage
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] restraints upon marriage | restraints upon marriages
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 2] valid. Idiots and lunatics, by the old common law, might have married; wherein it was manifestly defective. The civil law judged | valid. It was formerly adjudged, that the issue of an idiot was legitimate, and consequently that his marriage was valid. A strange determination! since consent is absolutely requisite to matrimony, and neither idiots nor lunatics are capable of consenting to any thing. And therefore the civil law judged

- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] This defect in our laws is however remedied with regard to lunatics, and persons under frenzies, by the express words of the statute 15 Geo. II. c. 30. and idiots, if not within the letter of the statute, are at least within the reason of it. | And modern resolutions have adhered to the reason of the civil law, by determining [Footnote: Morrison's case. [i.e. Morison v Stewart; cf. 1 Hag. Con. 417] coram Delegat] that the marriage of a lunatic, not being in a lucid interval, was absolutely void. But as it might be difficult to prove the exact state of the party's mind at the actual celebration of the nuptials, upon this account (concurring with some private family [Footnote: See private acts 23 Geo. II. c. 6.] reasons) the statute 15 Geo. II. c. 30. has provided, that the marriage of lunatics and persons under phrenzies (if found lunatics under a commission, or committed to the care of trustees by any act of parliament) before they are declared of sound mind by the lord chancellor or the majority of such trustees, shall be totally void.
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] a feme-covert; is said | a feme-covert, foemina viro co-operta [a woman covered by a man]; is said
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 8] [Marsh's case] 1 Leon. 312. | Bro. Error. 173. [Marsh's case] 1 Leon. 312. [Manby v Scott] 1 Sid. 120.
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] are void, or at least voidable; | are void;
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 5] to correct his servants or children | to correct his apprentices or children
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] prohibited to use any violence | prohibited from using any violence

Chapter 16

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 5] gave the children life | gave their children life
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 7] subsistence. By the custom of London indeed, (which was formerly universal throughout the kingdom) the children of freemen are entitled to one third of their father's effects, to be equally divided among them; of which he cannot deprive them. And, among persons | subsistence. Indeed, among persons
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] afterwards died | afterwards unfortunately died
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 9] indispensable condition that | indispensable condition, to make it legitimate, that
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] or not; which | or not; and, if she be, to keep her under proper restraint, till delivered; which
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 2] Co. Litt. 8. | Co. Litt. 8. Bract. l. 2. c. 32.
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] and, if the widow be upon due examination found not pregnant, any issue she may afterwards produce, though within nine months, will be bastard.

- | but, if the widow be upon due examination found not pregnant, the presumptive heir shall be admitted to the inheritance, though liable to lose it again, on the birth of a child within forty weeks from the death of the husband [Footnote: Britton. c. 66. pag. 166.]. [ed. 9: a husband.]
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 9] charge any person having got her with child | charge any person as having got her with child
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 4] by suffering the parents to escape | by giving the parents opportunity to escape
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] children have a settlement | children have their primary settlement
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 7] vagrancy. | vagrancy. Bastards also, born in any licenced hospital for pregnant women, are settled in the parishes to which the mothers belong [Footnote: Stat. 13 Geo. III. c. 82.].

Chapter 17

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 2] they forget | they seem to have forgotten
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 8] This policy | See Stat. Hibern. 14 Hen. III. This policy
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 2] appointed by father | appointed by the father
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 8] 625. | 625. [Anon. (1699)] [1] Lord Raym. 480. [Fitzhugh v Dennington] [2 Lord Raym.] 1096. Toder v Sansam. Dom[us] Proc[erum], i.e. House of Lords] 27 Febr. 1775.
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 2] malitia supplet aetatem. | malitia supplet aetatem. So also, in much more modern times, a boy of ten years old, who was guilty of a heinous murder, was held a proper subject for capital punishment, by the opinion of all the judges. [Footnote: [Case of William York] Foster. 72.]
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 4] Stat. 7 Ann. c. 19. | Stat. 7 Ann. c. 19. 4 Geo. III. c. 16.
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 4] exchequer, the estates | exchequer, or other courts of equity, the estates
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] no deed that is of any force or effect: yet he may | no deed but what is afterwards voidable: yet in some cases he may
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. | Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. 43 Eliz. c. 2. [Gylbert v Fletcher] Cro. Car. 179.

Chapter 18

- ⟨1⟩ [ed. 8] society of antiquarians, for promoting | society of antiquaries for promoting
- ⟨2⟩ [ed. 4] given, | given [Footnote: Cities and towns were first erected into corporate communities on the continent, and endowed with many valuable privileges, about the eleventh century: (Roberts. Cha. V. i. 30.) to which the

- consent of the feudal sovereign was absolutely necessary, as many of his prerogatives and revenues were thereby considerably diminished.],
- ⟨3⟩ [ed. 9] that most of those statutes, | that (till of late years) most of those statutes,
- ⟨4⟩ [ed. 9] creative act is usually | creative act was usually
- ⟨5⟩ [ed. 9] called the Gild-hall | called the Gild or Guild hall
- ⟨6⟩ [ed. 4] it is not usual | it has not formerly been usual
- ⟨7⟩ [ed. 2] that it discouraged many men to undertake these | that they discouraged many men from undertaking these
- ⟨8⟩ [ed. 2] The king may grant | The king (it is said) may grant
- ⟨9⟩ [ed. 2] people, unless they be approved by the chancellor, treasurer, and chief justices, or the judges of assise in their circuits. | people, under penalty of 40*l.* unless they be approved by the chancellor, treasurer, and chief justices, or the judges of assise in their circuits: and, even though they be so approved, still if contrary to law they are void.
- ⟨10⟩ [ed. 2] Stat. 19 Hen. VII c. 7. | Stat. 19 Hen. VII. c. 7. [Ipswich Tailors' case] 11 Rep. 54.
- ⟨11⟩ [ed. 2] that, in any misbehaviour of a body corporate, the directors only shall be answerable in their personal capacity, and not the corporation. | that, for the misbehaviour of a body corporate, the directors only shall be answerable in their personal capacities.
- ⟨12⟩ [ed. 2] It cannot be a trustee; for such kind of confidence is foreign to the ends of its institution: neither can it be compelled to perform such trust, because it cannot be committed | It cannot be seised of lands to the use of another [Footnote: Bro. Abr. tit. Feoffm. al uses. 40. Bacon of uses. 347.]; for such kind of confidence is foreign to the end of its institution. Neither can it be committed
- ⟨13⟩ [ed. 4] by statute 43 Eliz. c. 4. | by statute 43 Eliz. c. 4.: which exception is again greatly narrowed by the statute 9 Geo. II. c. 36.
- ⟨14⟩ [ed. 4] is greatly abridged | is much abridged
- ⟨15⟩ [ed. 2] are present | are at present
- ⟨16⟩ [ed. 2] dioceses are the visitors | dioceses are in ecclesiastical matters the visitors
- ⟨17⟩ [ed. 2] authority. | authority [Footnote: This notion is perhaps too refined. The court of king's bench, [ed. 9: (it may be said)] from its general superintendent authority where other jurisdictions are deficient, has power to regulate all corporations where no special visitor is appointed. But, [ed. 9: not in the light of visitor: for,] as its judgments are liable to be reversed by writs of error, it wants [ed. 7: may be thought to want] one of the essential marks of visitatorial power.].
- ⟨18⟩ [ed. 8] to see that that property | to see that such property
- ⟨19⟩ [ed. 4] which would otherwise | which might otherwise
[ed. 8] as might otherwise

- ⟨20⟩ [ed. 4] And I have reason to believe, that in one of our colleges, (wherein the bishop of that diocese, in which Oxford was formerly comprized, has immemorially exercised visitatorial authority) there is no special visitor appointed by the college statutes: so that the bishop's interposition can be ascribed | And in some of our colleges, where no special visitor is appointed, the bishop of that diocese, in which Oxford was formerly comprized, has immemorially exercised visitatorial authority; which can be ascribed
- ⟨21⟩ [ed. 4] till king William's time; in the sixth year of whose reign, the famous case of Philips and Bury happened. | till the famous case of Philips and Bury.
- ⟨22⟩ [ed. 8] brought in the house of lords | brought into the house of lords
- ⟨23⟩ [ed. 4] they reversed the judgment of the court of king's bench, and concurred in sir John Holt's opinion. And to this leading | they concurred in sir John Holt's opinion, and reversed the judgment of the court of king's bench. To which leading
- ⟨24⟩ [ed. 2] justice. Thus the bishop of Chester is visitor of Manchester college: but, happening also to be warden, the court held that his power was suspended during the union of those offices; and therefore issued a peremptory mandamus to him, as warden, to admit a person intitled to a chaplainship. Also | justice. Also
- ⟨25⟩ [ed. 4] life. And hence it appears how injurious, as well to private as public rights, those statutes were, which vested in king Henry VIII, instead of the heirs of the founder, the lands of the dissolved monasteries. The debts | life. The debts
- ⟨26⟩ [ed. 2] to bring a writ of quo warranto, | to bring an information in nature of a writ of quo warranto,
- ⟨27⟩ [ed. 2] the proceedings were sufficiently regular: | the proceedings in most of them were sufficiently regular:
- ⟨28⟩ [ed. 2] but now it is enacted, that the charter of the city | but the judgment against that of London was reversed by act of parliament [Footnote: Stat. 11 Geo. I. c. 4.] after the revolution; and by the same statute it is enacted, that the franchises of the city

Table of Cases

a. Yearbook Cases

(Seipp numbers from www.bu.edu/law/seipp)

Case name	Page
Mich. 8 Edw. III. f. 69, pl. 37; Seipp 1334.169	312
Mich. 21 Edw. III, f. 60, pl. 47; Seipp 1347.207	100
Mich. 22 Edw. III, f. 14, pl. 37; Seipp 1348.147	21
Mich. 9 Hen. VI, f. 53, pl. 37; Seipp 1430.083	277
Hil. 9 Hen. VI, f. 64, pl. 17; Seipp 1431.017	276
Hil. 11 Hen. VI, f. 16, pl. 8; Seipp 1433.008	276
14 Hen. VI, f. 24, pl. 72; Seipp 1436.072	276
Mich. 19 Hen. VI, f. 31, pl. 60; Seipp 1440.078	276
Mich. 20 Hen. VI, f. 8, pl. 17; Seipp 1441.072	324
Mich. 33 Hen. VI, f. 17, pl. 8; Seipp 1455.035	112
36 Hen. VI, f. 23, pl. 5; Cent. 2.73 [145 ER 63–4]; Seipp 1458.015	65
Mich. 49 Hen. VI, f. 1–2, pl. 1–8; Seipp.1470.059ss–1470.067ss	162
Mich. 19 Edw. IV, f. 3, f. 9; Seipp 1479.038	276
Mich. 2 Ric III, f. 12, pl. 26; Seipp 1484.026	72
Mich. 1 Hen. VII, f. 3, pl. 2; Seipp 1485.002	324
Mich. 1 Hen. VII, f. 4, pl. 5; Seipp 1485.005	160
Pas. 15 Hen. VII, f. 7, pl. 2; Seipp 1500.008	250

b. Other Cases

Case name	Source reference	Page
Aldred's (William) Case (1610)	77 ER 817	58
Alsop v Bowtrell (1619)	79 ER 464	294
Alton Woods, Case of (1600)	76 ER 107	65
Anon. (1538)	73 ER 95	202
Anon. (1669)	86 ER 36	275
Anon. (1676)	86 ER 192	259
Anon. (1682)	86 ER 1095	284
Anon. (1699)	91 ER 1220	378
Anon. (1704)	91 ER 44	300
Anon. (1722)	24 ER 646	75
Appleton v Stoughton (1635)	79 ER 1046	57
Armiger v Holland (1597)	78 ER 789	386
Athol (Earl) v Earl of Derby (1672)	83 ER 455	110
Attorney-General v Bishop of London (1693)	87 ER 347	368
Audley (Lord) Case of (1631)	St. Tr. i. 409–16	286
Bacon v Bacon (1640–41)	79 ER 1117, 82 ER 425	240
Bagg's (James) Case (1615)	77 ER 1278	314
Bagshaw v Gawin (1605)	74 ER 1084	192
Bagshawe v Goward (1606)	79 ER 129–30	192
Banbury Parish v Broughton Parish (1696)	90 ER 530	385
Banne, Royal Fishery of, Case of the (1610)	80 ER 542	404
Basset (Sir Robert) v Gee (1600–1)	78 ER 1019	368
Bath, St Michael Parish v Nunny Parish (1723)	93 ER 689	283

Case name	Source reference	Page
Beaufort (Duke) v Bertv (1721)	24 ER 579	300
Beecher's Case (1577)	74 ER 813	242
Berwick (Mayor), Case of (1684)	89 ER 988	324
Beverley's Case (1603)	76 ER 1124	195
Blankard v Galdy (1693)	91 ER 566	75
Bonham's (Dr) Case (1610)	77 ER 647	307
Bourn's (Richard) Case (1619)	79 ER 465	324
Bowman v Milbanke (1664)	83 ER 333	290
Brownlow v Lambert (1599)	78 ER 950	191
Bullock v Dibley (1593)	76 ER 921	142
Bunting's Case (1581)	72 ER 510	283
Bury's Case (1598)	77 ER 208	295
Butler and Goodale's Case (1598)	77 ER 286	252
Butler v Gastrill (1721)	25 ER 111	280
Calvin's Case (1608–9)	77 ER 384	240
Canterbury (Archbishop), Case of (1596)	76 ER 521	64, 90
Carlisle (Bishop) v Wells (1675)	83 ER 499, 84 ER 1161	298
Carter v Crawley (1681)	83 ER 261	289
Caudrey's Case (1591)	77 ER 10	16
Chichester (Bishop) v Webb (1554)	73 ER 238, 145 E	369
Child v Hardyman (1731)	93 ER 910	287
Christian v Corren (1716)	24 ER 411–12	74
Chune v Pyot (1615)	81 ER 458	220
Collison's Case (1617)	80 ER 286	310
Commendam, Case or Colt & Glover v Bishop of Coventry & Lichfield (1612)	80 ER 294	253
Constable's (Sir Henry) Case (1601)	77 ER 220	191
Convocations, Case of (1610)	77 ER 1350	352
Cox v Dawson (1616)	74 ER 998	195
Craw v Ramsey (1670)	124 ER 1077	72
Crispe and Jackson v Mayor of Berwick (1670)	82 ER 1218	324, 71
Croft v Howel (1578)	75 ER 794	309
Crosse v Diggs (1663)	82 ER 1030	351
Cumnor Parish v Milton Parish (1703)	91 ER 450	233
Custodes v Jinkes (1651)	82 ER 713	289
Customs, Case of (1607)	80 ER 498	203
Day v Savadge (1614)	80 ER 235	57
De Vall's Case (1676)	84 ER 1140	276
Dennis v Payn (1639)	79 ER 1074	285
Dillan's Case (1698)	91 ER 62	274
Drury v Fitch (1618)	123 ER 1068	195
Dutton v Howell (1693)	1 ER 21	75
Edmunds v Brown and Tillard (1668)	83 ER 385	314
Egerton's Case (1586)	72 ER 752	111
Ereskine v Murray (1728)	92 ER 500	176
Etherington v Parrot (1703)	91 ER 110	285
Evans v Higgs (1728)	93 ER 854	166
Eyre v Countess of Shaftsbury (1722)	24 ER 666	237
Eyston v Studd (1574)	75 ER 257	188
Fane's Case (1607)	79 ER 172	253
Fernes (Dean and Chapter) Case of (1607)	80 ER 531	308
Ferry & Ferryman's Case (1581)	123 ER 986	374
Fisher v Batten (1671)	86 ER 106	329
Fitzhugh v Dennington (1704)	92 ER 226	378
Foster's (Dr) Case (1614)	77 ER 1232	66
Foxley v Annesley (1599)	78 ER 929	191
Foxley's Case (1601)	77 ER 225	191
Gorge's Case (1599)	72 ER 873	298

Case name	Source reference	Page
Green v Balser, or Archbishop of Canterbury's Case (1596)	76 ER 525	64, 90
Green's Case (1602)	77 ER 295	253
Grendon v Bishop of Lincoln (1575)	75 ER 737	246, 248
Guildford, St Nicholas (Inhabitants) v Killington (Inhabitants) (1699)	91 ER 417	365
Gwinne v Poole (1692)	125 ER 861	314
Gylbert v Fletcher (1628)	79 ER 757	376
Hains v Jefcot (or Jeffell) (1696)	90 ER 525, 91 ER 942	295
Hall v Planner (1666)	83 ER 366	254
Hamilton v Davis (1771)	98 ER 433	353
Hard's Case (1696)	91 ER 371	296
Harris v Hicks (1692)	91 ER 463	280
Haward v Duke of Suffolk (1553)	73 ER 170	370
Haydon v Gould (1710)	91 ER 113	283
Hele v Bishop of Exeter and Hayman (1691)	83 ER 706	251
Hellyard's Case (1587)	74 ER 455	217
Heydon's Case (1584)	76 ER 638	64
Hill v Grange (1555)	75 ER 273	161
Hodges v Moor (1625)	74 ER 1050, 82 ER 268	336
Holiday v Pitt (1734)	93 ER 987	336
Howard's Case (1699)	91 ER 528	300
Humphrys v Knight (1631)	79 ER 995	252
Ipswich Tailors' Case (1614)	77 ER 1220	379
Isle of Man Case (1599)	123 ER 575	74
Jackson and Crispe v Mayor, &c. of Berwick (1668)	82 ER 1170	324, 71
Kendal and Others, Case of (1695)	87 ER 534	217
Kennycott v Bogen (1613)	80 ER 1102	203
Lancaster (Duchy), Case of the (1562)	75 ER 329	82
Leigh's (Lord) Case (1675)	84 ER 807	287
Lincoln (Earl), Case of (1627)	79 ER 659	259
Lincoln College Case (1594)	76 ER 767	64
London (City), Case of (1610)	77 ER 664	56
Ludlow, ex parte (1731)	24 ER 894	196
Lynne Regis or King's Lynn (Corporation) Case (1612)	77 ER 1111	308
Magdalen College Case (1615)	77 ER 1236	240
Manby v Scott (1663)	82 ER 1003	377, 287, 285
Manby and Richards v Scott (1660)	83 ER 269	284, 285
Marche's Case (1615)	81 ER 411	164
Marsh's Case (1590)	74 ER 284	377
Mary's (Robert) Case (1612)	77 ER 898	276
Meers v Lord Stourton (1711)	24 ER 332, 91 ER 437	259
Middleton and wife v Croft (1736)	93 ER 1030	61
Minchcamp's Case (1701)	91 ER 422	274
Mines, Case of (1567)	75 ER 477	186, 189
Mitton's Case (1584)	76 ER 965	219
Morison v Stewart (1745)	1 Hag. Con. 417 <sup>a</sup>	377
Morris v Martin (1726)	93 ER 757	285
Nevil's Case (1605)	77 ER 463	147
Nichols v Nichols (1576)	75 ER 726	159
Nicholson v Sedgwick (1697)	91 ER 1016	176
Norris v Staps (1616)	80 ER 358	308
Norwich (Dean and Chapter), Case of (1598)	76 ER 798	246
Obrian v Ram (1605)	87 ER 119	285
Orme v Pemberton (1640)	79 ER 1106	254
Ossory (Bishop), Case of (1619)	81 ER 962	243
Pendrell v Pendrell (1732)	93 ER 945	295
Philips v Bury (1690)	90 ER 709	313
Philips v Bury (1692)	87 ER 289	313
Philips v Bury (1694)	1 ER 24, 90 ER 198, 91 ER 900	306, 310, 313

Case name	Source reference	Page
Phillips v Berry (1707)	91 ER 349	313
Pride v Earls of Bath and Montague (1694)	91 ER 114	279
Prince's Case, the (1606)	77 ER 481	146
Process into Wales (1668–74)	124 ER 1130	68
R. v Azire (1725)	93 ER 746	286
R. v Bagshaw (1634)	79 ER 904	56
R. v Bishop of Chester (1728)	93 ER 855	314
R. v Broadfoot (1743)	168 ER 76	269
R. v Cowle (1759)	97 ER 587	324
R. v Duhammel (1663)	89 ER 946	376
R. v Franklyn (1705)	92 ER 279	275
R. v French (1669)	84 ER 367	275
R. v Keller (1663)	89 ER 945	376
R. v Kendal & Rowe or Roe (1695)	90 ER 517, 91 ER 304	217, 269
R. v King (1694)	90 ER 456	269
R. v Knowles (1694)	88 ER 1162	259
R. v Lee (Lord) (1675)	83 ER 482	287
R. v Lister (1721)	93 ER 646	287
R. v Marsh (1615)	81 ER 23	164
R. v Owen (1616)	81 ER 419	164
R. v Paris Slaughter (1699)	91 ER 1243	275
R. v Portington (Lady) (1692)	91 ER 151	332
R. v Sheringbrook (1725)	92 ER 407	231
R. v Sparrow (1740)	93 ER 1073	365
R. v White (1705)	91 ER 139	228
R. and Waller v Hanger (1614)	81 ER 17	191
Ratcliff's Case (1592)	76 ER 721	298
Roger's (John) Case (1571)	73 ER 680	195
Royley's (John) Case (1612)	79 ER 254	290
Russel v Corne (1704)	91 ER 112	285
Rutland (Countess), Case of (1605)	72 ER 894, 77 ER 333	370
Rye v Fuliambe (1602)	72 ER 838	284
Ryslip Parish v Harrow Parish (1696)	91 ER 446	234
Saddlers' (Warden and Commonalty of) Case (1588)	76 ER 1017	222
St Andrew Undershaft Parish v Mendez de Breta (1701)	91 ER 1366	290
St David's (Bishop) v Lucy (1699)	91 ER 128, 1261	368
St George's Parish v St Margaret Westminster Parish (1706)	91 ER 116	295
St Nicholas Parish v St Helen Parish (1696)	91 ER 407	234
Salisbury (Bishop), Case of (1613)	77 ER 1013	321
Sands v Child (1693)	87 ER 333, 334	174
Search's Case (1588)	74 ER 65	217
Seymor's Case (1615)	72 ER 966	286
Sheldon v Aland (1731)	24 ER 988	196
Shrewsbury (Countess), Case of (1612)	77 ER 1371	147
Shrewsbury (Earl), Case of (1609)	77 ER 803	147
Shrewsbury (Earl), Case of (1612)	77 ER 1384	259
Sidney v Sidney (1734)	24 ER 1063	295
Sims's Case (1744)	93 ER 1131	287
Skewys v Chamond (1545)	73 ER 131	334
Slade v Drake (1617)	80 ER 440	77
Smith v Brown and Cooper (1701)	91 ER 566	75
Sobrean and Teige v Kevan (1619)	81 ER 687	243
Specot's Case (1590)	77 ER 143	251
Spitalfields Hamlet v St Andrew Parish (1700)	91 ER 1279	233
Stanhope (Lord) v Ecquester (1625)	82 ER 288	356
Stile v West (1605)	1 Roll. Abr. 357 (A) 7	282
Sutton's Hospital Case (1612)	77 ER 937, 960	306
Swans, Case of the (1592)	77 ER 437	192

Case name	Source reference	Page
Tanistry, Case of (1608)	80 ER 516	58
Tarrant's Case (1597)	72 ER 703	259
Toder v Sansam (1775)	1 ER 695	378
Twyne's Case (1601)	76 ER 816	65
Vanheath v Turner (1621)	124 ER 21	321
Wallen, qui tam v Holton (1760)	96 ER 129	376
Weaver v Felton (1625)	74 ER 1050	340
Wells v Williams (1697)	125 ER 18	239
Westby's Case (1597)	76 ER 792	218
Westminster (City) v Gerrard (1631)	80 ER 1174	289
Whitechapel Parish v Stepney Parish (1689)	90 ER 851	365
Wigmore v Alvarez (1731)	94 ER 719	166
Willion v Berkley (1559)	75 ER 356	161
Wimbish v Tailbois (1550)	75 ER 89	87
Winchester (Bishop), Case of (1596)	76 ER 511	79
Wood's Case (1698)	91 ER 114	296
Woodend (Inhabitants) v Inhabitants of Paulspury (1727)	92 ER 458	233
Wright v Gerrard and Hildersham (1618)	80 ER 451	248
Wright v Wright (1596)	78 ER 761	79
Yaxley's Case (1693)	90 ER 772	361
York (William), Case of (1748)	168 ER 36	378

<sup>a</sup> Hag. Con. = J. Haggard, Reports of Cases. ... in the Consistory Court of London, 2 vols (1822).

Table of Statutes

While the 1225 confirmation of Magna Carta traditionally ranks as the first statute, this Table includes some earlier enactments, notably King John's 'Great Charter' of 1215. Blackstone's citations of statutes by regnal year and chapter number are not invariably accurate or consistent, but broadly follow The Statutes at Large, ed. O. Ruffhead, 8 vols (1763). Where they differ from Statutes of the Realm, 9 vols (1810–28) [henceforth SR] or the Chronological Table and Index of the Statutes, Part I (1988) [CT], the modern citation is supplied in parentheses; dates generally follow CT from 1235 onwards.

Statute	Page
Magna Carta, 17 John (1215)	86–7
cl. 1	244
cl. 11	22
cl. 14	199, 257
cl. 25	177–8
cl. 42	171
Charter of the Forest, 2 Hen. III (1217) cl. 11	111
Charter of the Forest, 9 Hen. III (1225) [SR: 25 Edw. I]	111
Magna Carta, 9 Hen. III (1225) [SR: 25 Edw. I]	22
c. 5 [SR: c. 4]	182
c. 9	56
c. 11	22
c. 17	220
c. 25	177–8
c. 29	90–1, 93–4, 95, 96, 258, 265
c. 30	168
c. 36	310
c. 37	199
Statuta Hiberniae 14 Hen. III [SR: Statute of Ireland concerning Coparceners, 20 Hen. III, 1235]	63, 71, 378 (2)
Statute [SR: Provisions] of Merton, 20 Hen. III (1236) c. 9	19, 63, 294
Statute of Marlbridge [SR: Marlborough], 52 Hen. III (1267) c. 5	63
Statute of Westminster I, 3 Edw. I (1275)	333 (2)
c. 4	187
c. 10	222–3
c. 21	182
c. 29	22
c. 34	259
De officio coronatoris [SR: The Office of the Coroner], 4 Edw. I (1276)	223
Statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I (1278)	63
Statute of Rutland, 10 Edw. I (1282)	68
Statute of Wales (Rhuddlan) 12 Edw. I (1284)	63, 68
Statute of Winchester, 13 Edw. I c. 6 (1285)	63, 228, 264
Statute of Westminster II, 13 Edw. I c. 32 (1285)	63
Circumspecte agatis , 13 Edw. I (1285)	63
Statute of Exeter, 14 Edw. I (1286) [SR: uncertain date]	79
Quia emptores terrarum , 18 Edw. I (1290)	63
Magna Carta, 25 Edw. I (1297) [SR: Confirmation of Liberties]	87
cc. 5–6	94, 199–200
c. 7	202
Confirmatio cartarum , 25 Edw. I (1297)	87, 95
Articuli super cartas , 28 Edw. I (1300)
c. 8	218
c. 13	218

Statute	Page
Assize of weights and measures, 31 Edw. I [SR: uncertain date]	177
34 Edw. I st. 4. c. 1 [SR: 25 Edw. I, 1297]	94–5, 199
De militibus , 1 Edw. II [SR: Statute for respiting of knighthood, uncertain date]	371 <28>
Articuli cleri , 9 Edw. II st. 1. c. 13 (1315)	119, 251
Statute of Lincoln, 9 Edw. II st. 2 (1315)	218, 362 <17>
Statute of Estreates, 16 Edw. II (1323)	355 <48>
Praerogativa regis , 17 Edw. II st. 1 [SR: uncertain date and status]	63
c. 9 [SR: c. 11]	195
c. 10 [SR: c. 12]	196
c. 11 [SR: c. 13]	186
c. 14 [SR: c. 10]	181–2
1 Edw. III [SR: st. 2] c. 16 (1327)	225
1 Edw. III st. 2 (1327)
c. 2	182, 264
c. 5	264
c. 7	264
c. 9	56
2 Edw. III (1328)
c. 4	362 <17>
c. 8	96
c. 13 [SR: 27 Edw. III st. 2. c. 13 (1353)]	189
4 Edw. III (1330)
c. 2	225
c. 9	362 <17>
c. 14	102
5 Edw. III (1331)
c. 4	362 <17>
c. 9	91, 94
11 Edw. III c. 1 (1337)	202
14 Edw. III st. 1 (1340)
c. 1	56
c. 12	178
14 Ed. III [SR: st. 1] (1340)
c. 5	148
c. 7	218
14 Edw. III st. 2. c. 1 (1340)	95, 199
14 Edw. III st. 4 (1340)
c. 4	182
c. 5	182
18 Edw. III st. 2. c. 2 (1344)	225–6
Oath of the Justices, 20 Edw. III (1346)	332 <30>
25 Edw. III st. 2 [SR: st. 1] (1350)	131, 239
25 Edw. III cap. 2 [SR: st. 5. c. 2] (1351)	63, 145, 146
25 Edw. III st. 5 (1351)
c. 4	91, 94
c. 8	264
c. 10	178
c. 13	179
c. 22	46
25 Edw. III st. 6. §. 3 (1351)	244
27 Edw. III st. 2. c. 13 (1353), see 2 Edw. III c. 13
28 Edw. III c. 3 (1354)	91, 94
Statute of Ireland 31 Edw. III st. 4 (1357)	63
34 Edw. III c. 1 (1361)	225
36 Edw. III [SR: st. 1] c. 10 (1362)	102
42 Edw. III c. 9 (1368)	221

Statute	Page
50 Edw. III c. 5 (1376)	242
1 Ric. II
c. 11 (1377)	220
c. 16 [SR: c. 15] (1377)	242
2 Ric. II [SR: st. 1] c. 4 (1378)	269
2 Ric. II st. 1. c. 5 (1378)	259
3 Ric. II c. 3 (1379)	250
5 Ric. II [SR: st. 1] c. 2 (1381)	171
5 Ric. II st. 1. c. 3 (1381)	268–9
5 Ric. II st. 2. c. 4 (1382)	260
6 Ric. II [SR: st. 1] c. 8 (1382)	269
7 Ric. II c. 12 (1383)	250
11 Ric. II c. 10 (1387)	96
12 Ric. II (1388)
c. 2	361 (7)
c. 7	230–1
c. 10	226
c. 11	259
13 Ric. II c. 10 [SR: st. 1. c. 7] (1389)	226
14 Ric. II c. 11 (1390)	226, 260
15 Ric. II c. 6 (1391)	249
16 Ric. II (1392)
c. 3	178
c. 5	148
20 Ric. II c. 28 (1396)	297
2 Hen. IV c. 1 (1400)	56
4 Hen. IV (1402)
c. 12	249
c. 20	350 (30)
5 Hen. IV c. 6 (1403)	110
6 Hen. IV c. 1 (1404)	183
7 Hen. IV (1405)
c. 2	132
c. 15	116
1 Hen. V (1413)
c. 1	115, 339 (68)
c. 4	221
c. 5	261
2 Hen. V [SR: st. 1] (1414)
c. 1	312
c. 4	226
c. 6	164
c. 8	220
2 Hen. V st. 2. c. 1 (1414)	226
4 Hen. V st. 2. c. 7 (1416)	167
8 Hen. VI (1429)
c. 1	180
c. 5	178
c. 7	113, 116
10 Hen. VI c. 2 (1432)	113
11 Hen. VI (1433)
c. 8	178
c. 11	110
15 Hen. VI c. 3 (1436)	168
18 Hen. VI (1439)
c. 8	168
c. 11	226
c. 19	266

Statute	Page
20 Hen. VI (1442)
c. 1	168
c. 9	258
c. 11	164
23 Hen. VI (1444)
c. 8 [SR c. 7]	218, 221, 361 <6>
c. 14	339 <80>
c. 15 [SR: c. 14]	115, 116, 339 <68>, <75>, <80>
1 Edw. IV c. 1 (1461)	133
3 Edw. IV c. 5 (1463)	85–6
12 Edw. IV c. 1 (1472)	361 <7>
1 Hen. VII c. 1 (1485)	82
3 Hen. VII (1487)
c. 1	223
c. 2	286
c. 14	150
4 Hen. VII c. 13 (1488)	242
11 Hen. VII (1495)
c. 1	66
c. 4	178
19 Hen. VII (1503)
c. 7	308
c. 12	230–1, 232
6 Hen. VIII c. 14 (1514)	203
14 & 15 Hen. VIII c. 5 (1523)	307
21 Hen. VIII (1529)
c. 13	242, 252
c. 16	239
c. 20	361 <6>
22 Hen. VIII (1530)
c. 5	229
c. 8	240
24 Hen. VIII c. 12 (1532)	157
25 Hen. VIII (1533)
c. 12 [ recte c. 22]	134, 161
c. 16	252
c. 19	61, 180
c. 20	180, 244
c. 21	59, 369
c. 28 [SR: c. 21]	157
26 Hen. VIII (1534)
c. 1	66, 179
c. 3	183
27 Hen. VIII (1535)
c. 8	183
c. 24	81
c. 26 [SR: c. 25]	69, 81, 231
c. 27 [ recte c. 26]	256
c. 28	248
28 Hen. VIII (1536)
c. 7	134, 161
c. 11	253
c. 13	252
c. 17	161
c. 18	345 <13>
31 Hen. VIII (1539)
c. 8	174
c. 10	111, 146, 149, 371 <30>
c. 13	248

Statute	Page
32 Hen. VIII (1540)
c. 16	239
c. 28	246
c. 38	280
33 Hen. VIII (1541)
c. 12	362 (27)
c. 21	121, 145
c. 27	310
c. 28	252
c. 31	75
34 [SR: 34 & 35] Hen. VIII (1542)
c. 5	310
34 & 35 Hen. VIII c. 26 (1542)	69, 361 (13)
35 Hen. VIII (1543)
c. 1	134
c. 3	66, 71
37 Hen. VIII c. 17 (1545)	246
1 Edw. VI (1547)
c. 3	232, 273
c. 7	227
c. 11	161
c. 12	64, 174, 242, 345 (13)
2 & 3 Edw. VI (1548)
c. 2	266
c. 23	280
c. 33	64
3 & 4 Edw. VI c. 16 (1549)	232, 273
1 Mar. st. 1. c. 8 (1553)	226
1 Mar. p. 2 [SR: st. 3] (1554)
c. 1	134
c. 2	134
st. 2. c. 8	220
1 Mar. st. 3 (1554)
c. 1	124, 142
1 & 2 Ph. and M. (1554)
c. 8	66
c. 13	362 (27)
2 & 3 Ph. & M. (1555)
c. 8	230
c. 16	269
3 & 4 Ph. & M. (1556)	324–5 (21)
4 & 5 Ph. & M (1557)
c. 2	264
c. 3	264
c. 8	281, 298
1 Eliz. I (1558)
c. 1	61, 66, 179, 381
c. 2	253, 254, 334 (19)
c. 3	135, 333 (10)
c. 4	183
c. 11	350 (30)
c. 19 [ recte c. 20]	203
5 Eliz. I (1562)
c. 4	274, 275, 301, 376 (16), (21)
c. 5	269
c. 7	239
c. 11	64
8 Eliz. I c. 13 (1566)	189, 351 (30)

Statute	Page
13 Eliz. I (1571)
c. 1	135
c. 5	65
c. 10	63, 64
c. 12	70, 250, 253
14 Eliz. I (1572)
c. 5	232, 312
c. 13	81
18 Eliz. I (1576)
31 Eliz. I c. 6 (1588)	250, 253
39 Eliz. I (1597)
c. 4	232
c. 5	307, 311, 312–13
43 Eliz. I (1601)
c. 2	231, 234, 274, 289, 293, 376 (16), 378 (9)
c. 3	268
c. 4	310, 311
1 Jac. I (1603)
c. 1	69, 136
c. 4	291
c. 13	336 (45)
c. 25	264, 274
3 Jac. I c. 5 (1605)	291
4 Jac. I c. 1 (1606)	171
7 Jac. I (1609)
c. 2	240, 241
c. 3	274
c. 4	296
c. 5	227
c. 6	334 (30)
c. 29	74
21 Jac. I (1623)
c. 12	227
c. 28	264, 332 (19)
1 Car. I c. 7 (1625)	122
3 Car. I (1627)
c. 1	87, 91, 95, 265
c. 2 [SR: c. 3]	291
c. 4 [SR: c. 5]	296
16 Car. I (1640)
c. 1	101
c. 8	203
c. 10	91, 96, 149, 173
c. 16 [SR: c. 20]	371 (29)
c. 27	334 (20)
12 Car. II (1660)
c. 1	101, 122
c. 4	170–1, 203–4, 206
c. 18	269
c. 24	88, 184, 263, 299, 301
c. 25	185
c. 30	333 (12)
c. 33	283
c. 35	207

Statute	Page
13 Car. II [SR: st.] c. 1 (1661)	107
13 Car. II st. 1 (1661)
c. 2	334 (20)
c. 5	96–7
c. 6	170, 399
c. 7	101, 333 (8)
c. 9	270
[SR: st. 1] c. 14	333 (8)
13 & 14 [SR: 14] Car. II c. 2 (1662)	209
13 & 14 [SR: 14] Car. II c. 4 (1662) [see also 14 Car. II c. 4]	250
13 & 14 [SR: 14] Car. II c. 10 (1662)	208
13 & 14 [SR: 14] Car. II c. 12 (1662)	232, 233, 446
13 & 14 [SR: 14] Car. II c. 21 (1662)	222, 222
13 [SR: 14] Car. II c. 4 (1662)	70
14 Car. II (1662)
c. 3	264
c. 4	253
c. 11	350 (30)
c. 21	222
14 & 15 [SR: 14] Car. II c. 12 (1662)	228
15 Car. II (1663)
c. 4	264–5
c. 10	200
16 Car. II c. 1 (1664)	101
22 Car. II (1670)
c. 8	178
c. 13	351 (35)
22 & 23 Car. II c. 1 (1670)	341 (103)
29 Car. II (1677)
c. 3	268
c. 6	239
c. 8	250
30 Car. II st. 1. c. 3 (1678)	86
30 Car. II st. 2 [SR: c. 1] (1678)	108
31 Car. II (1679)
c. 1	265
c. 2	87, 92, 93
1 Jac. II (1685)
c. 1	213
c. 3 & c. 4	213
c. 17	232, 233
1 W. & M. st. 1 (1688)
c. 1	102
c. 2	116
c. 6	152
c. 7	116
c. 10	209
c. 21	371 (30)
c. 26	253
c. 30	189–90
1 W. & M. st. [SR: sess.] 2. c. 2 (1688)	63, 87, 92, 95, 96, 97, 102, 109, 115, 121, 140, 265–6
2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 7 (1689)	116
2 W. & M. c. 8 (1689)	315
3 W. & M. c. 11 (1691)	233
3 & 4 [SR: 3] W. & M. c. 12 (1691)	230

Statute	Page
5 W. & M. (1693)
c. 6	189–90
c. 7	339 <69>
c. 21 §. 6	268
c. 22	209
5 & 6 W. & M. (1694)
c. 7	115
c. 20	116, 307
c. 21	208
6 W. [SR: 6 & 7 W. & M.] c. 2 (1694)	102, 123
6 & 7 W. & M. c. 6 (1694)	281
7 [SR: 7 & 8] W. III c. 4 (1695)	116
7 & 8 W. III (1695)
c. 7	116
c. 15	123
c. 18	209
c. 21	270
c. 22	394
c. 25	108, 114, 116
c. 30	206
c. 35	281
8 & 9 W. III c. 10 & c. 30 [SR: c. 30] (1696)	234, 274
10 W. III c. 1 (1698)	374 <17>
10 & 11 [SR: 10] W. III c. 7 (1698)	116
10 & 11 [SR: 10] W. III c. 16 [SR: c. 22] (1698)	88
11 & 12 [SR: 11] W. III c. 2 (1698)	115, 339 <70>
11 & 12 [SR: 11] W. III c. 4 (1698)	290, 291
11 & 12 W. III c. 20 (1698)	177
12 W. III c. 2 and 13 W. III c. 2 see 12 & 13 W. III c. 2
12 [SR: 12 & 13] W. III c. 3 (1700, 1701)	76–7, 110, 336 <45>
12 & 13 W. III c. 2 (1700, 1701)	87, 108, 140, 149–50, 151–2, 172, 240, 367 <15>
12 & 13 W. III c. 10 (1700, 1701)	115, 116, 339 <70>
13 W. III c. 2 see 12 & 13 W. III c. 2
13 [SR: 13 & 14] W. III c. 3 (1701)	82
13 [SR: 13 & 14] W. III c. 6 (1701)	236
1 Ann. st. 1. (1702)
c. 7 [SR: c. 1]	184, 186
c. 8 [SR: c. 2]	219–20, 226
c. 21	206–7
c. 30 [SR: c. 24]	290
1 Ann. st. 2. c. 7 see 1 Ann. st. 1 c. 7
2 [SR: 2 & 3] Ann. (1703)
c. 6	270
c. 11	184
2 & 3 Ann. (1703)
c. 6	274
c. 18 [SR: c. 12] (1703)	110
4 [SR: 4 & 5] Ann. (1705)
c. 1 [SR: c. 14]	421 <13>
c. 19 [SR: c. 6]	270, 274
5 Ann. (1706)
c. 6 [SR: 6 Ann. c. 8]	70
c. 8 [SR: 6 Ann. c. 11]	70, 347 <3>
c. 24 [SR: 6 Ann. c. 24]	352 <5>

Statute	Page
6 Ann. (1706, 1707)
c. 3 [ recte 31; SR c. 58]	277–8
c. 7 [SR: c. 41]	115, 123, 141, 225, 339 ⟨70⟩, ⟨71⟩, ⟨73⟩, ⟨74⟩
c. 23 [SR c. 78]	111, 116
c. 24	183
c. 27 [SR: c. 54]	352 ⟨5⟩
c. 54	183
7 Ann. (1708)
c. 5	240, 241
c. 12	165
c. 19	301
8 Ann. c. 5 [SR: c. 13] (1709)	357 ⟨71⟩
9 Ann. (1710)
c. 5	115, 116, 339 ⟨76⟩
c. 6	203
c. 10 [SR: c. 11]	207
c. 16 [SR: c. 21]	150
c. 21 [SR: c. 15]	270
c. 23 [SR: c. 16]	209
10 Ann. (1711)
c. 5 [SR: c. 9]	241
c. 19 [SR: c. 18]	116, 209, 281
c. 23 [SR: c. 31]	114, 116
12 Ann. c. 18 (1712)	234
12 Ann. st. 2. (1713)
c. 12 [SR: 13 Ann. c. 11]	253
c. 18 [SR: 13 Ann. c. 21]	189
1 Geo. I [CT st. 2] (1714)
c. 4	240
c. 6	253
c. 12	203
c. 13	108, 236
1 Geo. I st. 2. c. 10 (1714)	352 ⟨5⟩
1 Geo. I st. 2. c. 38 (1715)	123
1 Geo. I [CT: st. 2] c. 56 (1715)	115, 339 ⟨73⟩
3 Geo. I (1716)
c. 7	203, 212
c. 10	352 ⟨5⟩
c. 15	221
4 Geo. I c. 12 (1717)	189
5 Geo. I c. 8 (1718)	289
6 Geo. I (1719)
c. 5	73
c. 21	207
7 Geo. I st. I. (1720)
c. 27	358 ⟨86⟩
c. 28	339 ⟨78⟩
9 Geo. I c. 7 (1722)	234, 366 ⟨73⟩
11 Geo. I (1724)
c. 4	315, 380 ⟨28⟩
c. 7	204
c. 17	213, 358 ⟨86⟩, 360 ⟨114⟩
12 Geo. I (1725)
c. 2	358 ⟨86⟩
c. 15 [ recte c. 12]	209
c. 28	74

Statute	Page
1 Geo. II [CT: st. 1] c. 1 (1727)	214
1 Geo. II st. 2. c. 14 (1727)	270, 271
2 Geo. II (1728)
c. 21 [CT: c. 24]	114
c. 24 (1729)	114, 116
4 Geo. II c. 21 (1730)	240, 367 <16>
5 Geo. II c. 11 [CT: c. 18] (1731)	226
6 Geo. II c. 31 (1732)	296
7 Geo. II c. 3 (1733)	367 <13>
9 Geo. II (1735)
c. 24	367 <13>
c. 36	310, 379 <13>
11 Geo. II c. 24 (1737)	110
13 Geo. II (1739)
c. 3	241, 270
c. 7	241, 368 <18>
c. 17	270
14 Geo. II c. 6 (1740)	65
15 Geo. II (1741)
c. 22	115, 339 <70>
c. 30	282, 377 <5>
c. 34	65
17 Geo. II (1743)
c. 5	274, 296
c. 6	337 <45>
c. 37	328 <39>
18 Geo. II (1744)
c. 18	114
c. 20	226
19 Geo. II c. 28 (1745)	116
20 Geo. II (1746)
c. 3	209, 357 <78>, <79>
c. 19	274
c. 24 [CT: c. 44]	241, 368 <18>
c. 42	71
c. 43	361 <3>
c. 44	368 <18>
21 Geo. II c. 10 (1747)	366 <73>
22 Geo. II (1748)
c. 23 [CT: c. 33]	270
c. 45	368 <18>
23 Geo. II (1749)
c. 4 [CT: 22 Geo. II c. 24]	307
c. 6 [private act]	377 <5>
24 Geo. II (1751)
c. 24	161, 347 <4>
c. 44	227
c. 48	218
25 Geo. II c. 29 (1751)	223
26 Geo. II (1753)
c. 3	207
c. 12 [CT: c. 13]	207
c. 19	189
c. 26	241
c. 27	226
c. 33	280, 282, 283, 292
27 Geo. II c. 1 (1754)	241

Statute	Page
29 Geo. II c. 16 (1756)	170–1
30 Geo. II (1757)
c. 19	185
c. 25	122, 265
31 Geo. II (1757)
c. 10	375 <37>
c. 11	233
c. 14	114
c. 20	374 <32>
c. 22	209, 357 <78>, <79>
32 Geo. II c. 28 (1758)	222, 362 <18>
33 Geo. II (1759)
c. 20	115, 339 <77>
c. 25	209
1 Geo. III (1760)
c. 1	212
c. 13	363 <32>
c. 23	172
2 Geo. III (1761)
c. 8	357 <78>
c. 15	374 <30>
c. 20	373 <11>
c. 25	241, 368 <18>
3 Geo. III (1762)
c. 15	115
c. 24	114
4 Geo. III (1763)
c. 4	367 <13>
c. 16	378 <6>
c. 24	208
c. 33	110
5 Geo. III (1765)
c. 25	207
c. 26	75
c. 27	161, 347 <4>
c. 39	75
6 Geo. III (1766)
c. 12	327 <33>
c. 25 [CT: 26]	376 <17>, <19>
c. 38	357 <78>
c. 53	366 <4>
7 Geo. III (1766)
c. 7	351 <35>
c. 9	363 <32>
c. 21	363 <30>
c. 40	35–6 <50>
c. 42	363 <40>, 363–4 <42>
c. 44	358 <83>
c. 50	357 <69>
c. 59	328 <33>
8 Geo. III (1768)
c. 5	364 <42>
c. 13	374 <17>
9 Geo. III (1769)
c. 34	360 <114>
c. 42	373 <11>
10 Geo. III (1770)

Statute	Page
c. 16	340 ⟨81⟩, ⟨86⟩
c. 50	336 ⟨44⟩
11 Geo. III (1771)
c. 24	358 ⟨83⟩
c. 28	358 ⟨83⟩
c. 38	374 ⟨30⟩
c. 42	340 ⟨81⟩, ⟨86⟩
c. 55	340 ⟨84⟩
12 Geo. III (1772)
c. 11	345 ⟨13⟩
c. 49	358 ⟨83⟩
13 Geo. III (1772)
c. 21	367 ⟨7⟩
c. 25	368 ⟨18⟩
c. 78	363–4 ⟨40–2⟩
c. 82	378 ⟨11⟩
c. 84	365 ⟨50⟩
14 Geo. III (1774)
c. 14	364 ⟨42⟩, ⟨50⟩
c. 15	340 ⟨81⟩, ⟨86⟩
c. 19	328 ⟨33⟩
c. 36	365 ⟨50⟩
c. 39	328 ⟨33⟩
c. 42	351 ⟨42⟩
c. 45	328 ⟨33⟩
c. 49	354 ⟨32⟩
c. 54	328 ⟨33⟩
c. 57	365 ⟨50⟩
c. 58	338 ⟨57⟩, 339 ⟨68⟩
c. 59	362 ⟨18⟩
c. 82	365 ⟨50⟩
c. 83	328 ⟨33⟩
c. 84	367 ⟨12⟩
c. 88	328 ⟨33⟩
15 Geo. III c. 36 (1775)	340 ⟨81⟩
16 Geo. III (1776)
c. 3	373 ⟨9⟩, ⟨11⟩
c. 39	365 ⟨50⟩
17 Geo. III (1776)
c. 39	357 ⟨81⟩
c. 47	360 ⟨114⟩
c. 53	369 ⟨21⟩
18 Geo. III (1778)
c. 14	373 ⟨11⟩
c. 26	357 ⟨80⟩, 366 ⟨73⟩
c. 28	365 ⟨50⟩
c. 47	375 ⟨14⟩
c. 59	373 ⟨11⟩
19 Geo. III (1779)
c. 15	354 ⟨32⟩
c. 17	375 ⟨34⟩
c. 59	357 ⟨80⟩, ⟨81⟩
c. 72	373 ⟨11⟩
c. 75	374 ⟨30⟩
21 Geo. III c. 31 (1780)	357 ⟨81⟩ <sup>a</sup>
22 Geo. III (1782)

<sup>a</sup> The final six statutes, dating from after Blackstone's death, were added by the editor of the posthumous 1783 edition.

Statute	Page
c. 39	356 (63)
c. 41	338 (58)
c. 45	339 (77)
c. 53	326 (28)

Index of Persons and Places

[Blackstone's original index appears at the end of Book IV]

- Aaron, brother of Moses (OT) 183
- Adelicia (Adela) (c. 1067–1137) countess of Blois 130
- Adrian IV (1100–59), pope 61
- Adrian V (d. 1276), cardinal legate and pope 61
- Ahab (fl. 9th cent. BC), king of Israel 125
- Albertus Magnus (c. 1200–80), philosopher and theologian 20
- Alexander III (d. 1181), pope 61
- Alfred the Great (849–99), king of Wessex and common law 55
dome-book 49 founder of English law 50 and great councils 99 and knights bachelors 260 and masters and servants 276
and militia 263
and shires, hundreds, tithings 79, 80, 228, 234
- Alfonso (Alonzo) X (1221–84), king of León and Castile 66
- Amelia (Amalie) (1711–86), princess 320
- America 75, 178
Boston, Massachusetts 328 (33)
New York 327–8 (33)
- Anne of Denmark (1574–1619), queen 144
- Anne (1665–1714), queen of England and civil list 214 and national debt 210
and peerage creations 104–5 and Peter the Great 165–6 Queen Anne's Bounty 183–4 and succession to crown 139–41
- Anselm (1033–1109), archbishop of Canterbury 244
- Aristotle (384–322 BC), philosopher 25
- Arthur (1187–c. 1203), nephew of King John 131
- Ashley-Cooper, Anthony, earl of Shaftesbury (1621–83) 149
- Athelstan (c. 893–939), king of England 260
- Atholl, see Murray, James
- Atticus, Titus Pomponius (110–32 BC), Roman man of letters 66
- Augusta of Saxe-Gotha (1719–72), dowager princess 161, 212
- Augustus (63 BC–14 AD), Roman emperor 295
- Austria 210
- Bacon, Sir Francis (1561–1626), philosopher and jurist 27, 49, 54, 133, 160–1
- Balliol, Edward (c. 1283–1364), Scottish prince 323 (9)
- Baltic Sea 189
- Barbary (Africa) 273
- Beaufort, Henry (c. 1375–1447), cardinal and chancellor 258
- Beaufort, John, marquess of Dorset and Somerset (c. 1371–1410) 133
- Beaumont, John, viscount (c. 1409–60) 256
- Bedford, see John of Lancaster; Neville; Russell
- Black Prince, see Edward
- Blanche of Artois (1248–1302) 145
- Blanche, duchess of Lancaster (1346–68) 81, 132
- Boleyn, Anne (c. 1500–36), queen of England 134, 145
- Boniface VIII (1235–1303), pope 61
- Bosworth Field 133, 160
- Bracton (Bratton), Henry de (d. 1268), treatise attributed to and civil law 21 and coronation oath 152 and counties palatine 81 and duress 89
and municipal law 83
on nobility 147
respect for 54
and rule of law 226, 155 and sovereignty 157, 192–3
and treasure trove 190
and wrecks 187
- Brittany, see Arthur; Eleanor
- Britton (Breton), John le (d. 1275), justice and bishop 54, 171, 186
- Bro(o)ke, Sir Robert (d. 1558), chief justice 321 (11)
- Brunswick-Lüneburg 76
- Buckingham, see Stafford
- Buckler, Benjamin (1716–80), antiquary 25
- Burlamachi, Philip (d. 1644), postmaster 356 (65)
- Burleigh, see Cecil
- Burn, Rev. Richard (1709–85), jurist 227, 229, 252, 317 (2), 326 (28), 338 (58), 339 (77), 356 (63), 357 (81)
- Buss(a)y, William de (fl. c. 1259) 22
- Busti, Bernardinus de (c. 1450–c. 1513), preacher 20–1
- Byzantium 10, 53
- Caesar, Julius (100–44 BC), Roman general and dictator 30, 68, 106, 230, 263
- Caligula (12–41 AD), Roman emperor 38
- Cambridge, university of and common law 17, 22
lay corporation 305
MPs for 115
Trinity College 28
visitorial authority in 313

- Camden, William (1551–1623), antiquary 77, 82, 256, 261, 264
- Canterbury
archbishopric of 19, 245
province of 61, 75, 77
- Canute (c. 994–1035), king of
England 78, 129, 130,
177, 263, 295
- Capitolinus, Julius, Roman
historian 45
- Caracalla (188–217), Roman emperor 45
- Cardigan, see Montagu
- Catherine of Aragon
(1485–1536), queen of England 134
- Catherine of Braganza
(1638–1705), queen of England 144
- Cecil, William, Baron
Burghley (1520–98), lord
treasurer 107
- Channel Islands
Alderney 75
Guernsey 75, 93
Jersey 75, 93
Sark 75
- Charlemagne (742–814),
Holy Roman Emperor 243
- Charles I (1600–49) king of England
and great council of peers 147–8 and the Long Parliament 122–3, 205
and militia 170, 264
and petition of right 87
posterity of 139
revenue of 213
and subsidies 200–1
trial of 124, 136
- Charles II (1630–85) king of England
coinage of 178–9
and military tenures 184, 264 and purveyance 185
Privy Council of 149
and quo warranto 314–15
Restoration of 101, 122, 136
revenue of 213
and sugar islands 269 and tonnage and poundage 203
- Charles VII (1403–61), king of France 374 (16)
- Charlotte of Mecklenburg-Strelitz
(1744–1818), queen of
England 142
- Charondas (fl. late 6th cent.
BC), Greek legislator 299
- Chester, bishop of 314
- Chichele, Henry (c. 1362–1443), archbishop of Canterbury 61
- Childebert I (496–558), king of the Franks 80
- China 237
- Cicero (106–43 BC), Roman author
on executive power 103
and knowledge of law 10, 13, 15
and laws ex post facto 38 and mixed government 40
and municipal law 83
against restraining clauses 66
and reason of law 47
- Clarence, see Lionel of Antwerp; Thomas of Lancaster
- Clarendon, see Hyde
- Clarke, Sir Thomas (1703–64),
judge 28
- Clement V (1264–1314),
pope 61, 183
- Clotharius (c. 497–561), king of the Franks 80
- Cobham, Eleanor, duchess of Gloucester (c. 1400–52) 258
- Coke, Sir Edward (1552–1634),
chief justice
on allegiance to the crown 237
on ambassadors' privileges 165
on appointment of sheriffs 218–19
on 'artificial' reason 57–8 on castles 170
on the clergy 242, 247
on coinage 178
on commonality 259–60, 261 on coroners 223
on customs and duties 202
'defective in method' 54–5 on duchy of Lancaster 82
on guardians 299
on ill-judged legislation 13–14, 116
on imprisonment process 93
on incorporation 307, 308, 309, 310–11
on Irish law 72
on the king's children 146 on the king's councils 147, 148 on the king's government of the church 180
on the law of parliament 108–9
on legal education 23
on lords in parliament 104 on lunatics 196
on Magna Carta 87, 90–1
on mortmain 310–11
on the navy 268
on the power of parliament 107
on proclamations 174
on prohibitions against travelling 171
on privy counsellors'
privileges 150
on regencies 161
respect for 54
on the right to justice 95–6 on the queen of England 142–3, 145
on Scottish law 69–70
on servitude 267
on subsidies 200
on succession to the throne 132, 133–4
on tithings and towns 79 on weights and measures 178
- Commodus, Lucius Aurelius
(161–92 AD), Roman
emperor 45
- Compton, Spenser, earl of Wilmington (c. 1674–1743)
204
- Constantine I (c. 272–337),
Roman emperor
89, 187
- Cowell, John (1554–1611), civil lawyer 228
- Croke, Sir George
(c. 1560–1642),
judge 54

- Cromwell, Oliver (1599–1658), lord protector 207
- Cumberland, see William Augustus
- David (fl. 10th cent. BC), king of Israel 125
- Denmark 80, 186, 190
- Derby, see Stanley
- Despenser (Spencer), Hugh, earl of Winchester (1262–1326) 148
- Despenser (Spencer), Hugh, Lord Despenser (d. 1326) 222
- Dio, Cassius (c. 164 AD–after 229), historian 38
- Dorset, see Beaufort
- Edgar, ‘the Atheling’ (c. 1052–c. 1125), king-elect of England 129–30, 135, 263
- Edgar, ‘the Peaceable’ (c. 943–75), king of the English 50, 55, 78, 99, 177
- Edmond of Woodstock, earl of Kent (1301–30) 145, 265
- Edmund Plantagenet, earl of Lancaster and Leicester (1245–96) 132
- Edmund II (c. 993–1016), king of England 129, 130, 135, 263
- E(a)dred (d. 955), king of England 129
- E(a)dric ‘Streona’, duke of Mercia (d. 1017) 263
- Edward (1391–1438), king of Portugal 50
- Edward I (1239–1307), king of England and butlerage of wines 202–3 ‘conqueror of Wales’ 68 and convocation 180
and Irish law 72
‘our English Justinian’ 22
- Edward II (1284–1327), king of England 53, 63
- Edward III (1312–77), king of England and conservators of the peace 225 and constables 228
and creation of dukes 255
and duchy of Lancaster 81
homage to king of France 235–6 and order of the garter 260 regency council 161
and succession to the throne 131–2
- Edward IV (1442–83), king of England children of 133
deposition of 162
and tonnage and poundage 203
and treason 238
- Edward V (1470–c. 1483), king of England 126, 133, 161
- Edward VI (1537–53), king of England 126–7, 161, 231
- Edward the Confessor (c. 1003–66), king of England and customary law 55–6 and parliamentary privilege 109 ‘the restorer’ 50 and Saxon militia 262–3 succession to the crown 129
and tithings 79
- Edward, the Black Prince (1330–76) 126, 131, 208, 255
- Edward the ‘Outlaw’ (d. 1057) 129, 130, 135
- Edward (d. 924), king of Wessex 49, 51
- Edwy (Eadwig) (d. 959), king of England 129
- Egbert (d. 839), king of Wessex 128–9, 135, 137, 141
- Egerton, Thomas, Baron Ellesmere (1540–1617), lord chancellor 259
- Eleanor of Brittany (c. 1184–1241) 131
- Elizabeth I (1533–1603), queen of England and corporations 311
and dukes 255–6
and freedom of speech 154 and naming of sheriffs 290
navy of 268
poor law of 232
and royal prerogative 154, 260 queen regnant 142
revenue of 213
and subsidies 200
succession to the crown 126–7, 134–5
- Elizabeth of the Palatine (1618–80) 140
- Elizabeth of York (1466–1503) 133–4, 135, 136
- Elizabeth, queen of Bohemia (1596–1662) 140
- Ellesmere, see Egerton, Thomas
- England
Arundel 257
Bedfordshire 143
Berkshire 49
Berwick 70, 71, 93
Bristol 82
Bury St Edmunds 100
Chelsea 268
Chester, county palatine 81–2
Cornwall 190, 255
Coventry 82, 116
Devonshire 49, 190
Durham, county palatine 81–2
Ely, Isle of 82
Greenwich 271
Hastings 130
Herefordshire 143
Hexhamshire 81
Kent 49, 56, 80
Lancaster, duchy of 82
Leighton Buzzard 143
Lene, Beds. 143
Lincolnshire 219
Middlesex 166, 218
New Shoreham, Sussex 340 (85)
Northumberland 81, 324 (11); see also Percy Norwich 82, 183, 246; see also Suffield [Calthorpe], Walter of Nottinghamshire 310
Oxford, city of 205
Pontefract 265
River Thames 269, 304
Portland 74
Runnymede 62
Southwark 231
Southwell 310

- England (cont.)
 Sussex 80
 Thanet 74
 Westbury 118
 Westmorland 218
 Wight, Isle of 74
 Winchester 177
 York, city of 82, 147–8
see also London;
 Westminster
 Ethelbert [Aethelbert]
 (d. 616?), king of Kent 99
 Eton College 305 Europe
 ambassadors in 164–5
 bullion imported into 178
 despotic governments in 86 elections of bishops in 243 gothic systems of government in 154–5 knowledge of law in 9
 law of wrecks in 188–9 maritime laws in 268 origins of parliaments
 in 98–9
 purveyance in 185
 reception of civil law
 in 18–19, 59–60
 standing armies in 266 territories attached to the crown of England 76–7 titles of honour in 255
 unclaimed property in 192–3
see also individual countries
 Exeter, bishop of, see Trelawny,
 Sir Jonathan
 Ferdinand III (1199–1252), king of Castile 50
 Festus, Porcius (fl. c. 60–2 AD), procurator of Judaea 93
 Finch, Sir Henry (1558–1625), jurist 155, 157
 Fitzherbert, Sir Anthony
 (c. 1470–1538), judge 54
 Fleetwood, William (1656–1723), bishop 114, 226
Fleta 21, 54, 99, 192
 Fortescue, Sir John (c. 1397–1479), chief justice
 on appointment of sheriffs 218–19
 on customary origins of English laws 48
 on guardians 299
 on inns of court and chancery 23, 30
 on judges 52
 on parliament men 115
 on parliamentary privilege 109
 on the rule of law 151
 on study of English law 16, 31
 Foster, Sir Michael (1689–1763), judge 269
 France
 Aix la Chapelle 270 aliens in 239, 240
 Anjou 76
 arbitrary imprisonment
 in 92
 Avignon 21
 Calais 72
 election of bishops in 244
 Franks 80
 Gascony 72, 187
 Guienne 72, 76
 hearth tax in 208
 and hundreds 80
 law of marriage in 282, 300
 lord high constable in 228
 Normandy, duchy of 18, 75, 76, 129–30, 177, 186, 255
 Oléron 187–8, 268
 and parliaments 98
 Poi(c)itou 187
 stamp duty in 208
 Toulouse 199
 and treasure trove 190
 Frederick Lewis, prince of Wales (1707–51) 161
 Frizell, William (fl. 1632–62), postmaster 356 <65>
 Gaul, see France
 Gellius, Aulus (fl. 2nd cent. AD),
 Roman author 48
 Geoffrey, duke of Brittany
 (1158–86) 131
 George I (1660–1727), king of England 105, 141, 146,
 214, 260
 George II (1683–1760), king of
 England 141, 161, 214
 George III (1738–1820), king of
 England 141, 216
 George, prince of Denmark
 (1653–1708) 145
 Germany
 Bohemia 140
 Bremen 76
 elective kingdoms in 126 emperor of 157
 favour towards 160
 Hanover 76, 87, 140
 Herford Abbey
 (Saxony) 140
 Land Hadeln 76
 origins of parliaments
 in 98–9
 and treasure trove 190
 universities in 10
 Saxe-Lauenburg 76
 Saxony 140
 Verden 76
 Gervase of Tilbury (d. c. 1220), canonist 144
 Gibraltar 116
 Gladys (d. 1251), sister of Llywelyn the Great 136
 Glanvill(e), Ranulf de (c. 1120–c.
 1190), justiciar, treatise attributed to 54, 69, 99
 Glanville, Sir John (1586–1661), serjeant at law 200
 Glo(u)cester, see Cobham;
 Humphry; William;
 William Henry
 Gormanstown, see Preston Gratian (d. c. 1159), monk and legal author 61
 Gravina, Gian Vincenzo
 (1664–1718), jurist 162
 Great Britain
 British druids 18, 48, 49
 Britons 48, 68
 dignity of king 214
 free constitution of 10, 216
 and Ireland 73
 parliament of 108, 111, 173, 198
 peerage of 111, 255, 261 standing army in 266, 271 subject territories of 74–6
 United Kingdom of 70

- Greece
 Athens 285, 293
 Carthage 107
 free republics of 106
 Gregorius (fl. late 3rd cent.–early 4th cent. AD), Roman jurist 60
 Gregory IX (1170–1241), pope 16, 59, 61
 Gregory VII (c. 1025–85), pope 243
 Grimston, Sir Harbottle (1603–85), master of the rolls 204
 Grotius, Hugo (1583–1645), Dutch jurist 47, 165, 167, 190, 289
 Guiscard, Antoine de (1658–1711), failed assassin 150
 Gustavus II Adolphus (1594–1632), king of Sweden 185
 Gyllenborg, Karl (1679–1746), ambassador 164
 Hadrian (76–138), Roman emperor 292
 Hadrian I (d. 795), pope 243
 Hale, Sir Matthew (1609–76), chief justice model English lawyer 29 on civil and canon laws 59
 on coinage 179
 on corodies 182
 on deodands 193
 on execution of infants 301 on martial law 265
 on oath of allegiance 236, 238 on parliament 107, 112
 on succession of the crown 128, 132
 Hardiknute, Harthacnut (c. 1019–42), king of England 129
 Harley, Robert, earl of Oxford (1661–1724), politician 150
 Harold II (c. 1020–66), king of England 129, 263
 Hengham, Ralph de (c. 1235–1311), jurist 321 (11)
 Henley, Sir Robert (c. 1708–72), judge and chancellor 28
 Henrietta Maria (1609–69), queen of England 144
 Henry (Plantagenet), duke of Lancaster (c. 1310–61) 81
 Henry I (1068–1135), king of England and appointment of bishops 244
 and dukes 255
 and Isle of Ely 82
 and church land 182
 and measure of length 177
 succession of 127, 130–1
 and wrecks 187
 Henry II (1133–89), king of England
 and castles 170
 and Ireland 71–2
 and knight's fee 290
 and queen-gold 144
 succession of 130–1, 135
 and taxes 198–9
 and wrecks 187
 Henry III (1207–72), king of England and benefit of clergy 20
 and castles 170
 and earldom of Chester 82
 ecclesiastical laws 61
 and first-fruits and tenths 183
 'great charter of liberties' 22, 86–7, 171, 199 and inns of court and chancery 23
 and isle of Man 74
 regency of 161
 succession of 131
 and wrecks 187
 Henry IV (1367–1413), king of England and earls 256
 and isle of Man 74
 and knights of the bath 260
 and Magna Carta 87
 and subsidies 200
 succession of 82, 132, 133, 140–1
 Henry V (1086–1125), Holy Roman emperor 244
 Henry V (1387–1422), king of England 132, 145, 161, 203
 Henry VI (1421–71), king of England and appointment of sheriffs 218
 and duchy of Lancaster 82
 ecclesiastical laws 61
 and inns of court and chancery 23
 loss of French territories 76 and parliamentary bills 119 and parliament men 115, 118 and qualification of JPs 226
 regency of 161
 treasons against 238
 and viscounts 256
 Henry VII (1457–1509), king of England attainder of 160–1
 and duchy of Lancaster 82
 and the military 262
 and privileges of privy counsellors 150
 and succession to the crown 126, 133–4, 135
 Henry VIII (1491–1547), king of England and aliens 239
 annexation of bishopric of Man 77 dissolution of monasteries 104, 314 king of Ireland 71
 and lord high constable 228 and legislation revoking acts of parliament 161
 and militia 264
 and poor laws 230–1
 and proclamations 174
 and queen-gold 144
 and queens 145
 and the Reformation 61, 107, 179, 183, 246, 310
 and succession to the crown 107, 126–7, 134, 135
 Hermogenes (fl. late 3rd cent. AD), Roman jurist 60
 Herod Agrippa II (27–93 AD), king of Judea 93

- Hertford, John of (d. 1264), abbot 22
- Higden, Ranulf (c. 1280–1364) chronicler 50
- Hobart, Sir Henry (c. 1554–1625), chief justice 77
- Hobbes, Thomas (1558–1679) 38
- Holt, Sir John (1642–1710), chief justice 313, 348 (19)
- Honorius (d. 653), archbishop of Canterbury 77
- Honorius III (d. 1227), pope 161
- Hotham, Sir John (1589–1645), MP 206
- Hoveden (Howden), Roger of (fl. 1174–1201), chronicler 50
- Humphry, duke of Gloucester (1390–1447) 132, 258
- Hungary 129
- Hyde, Edward, earl of Clarendon (1609–74) 24, 29, 148, 200, 205, 213
- Ina [Ine] (d. after 726), king of Wessex 99
- Innocent III (1161–1216), pope 283
- Innocent IV (d. 1254), pope 20, 183
- Ireland
Brehon law in 71–2
and church of England 70 dependence on Great Britain 73
English law in 68, 71–2, 73–4, Kilkenny 72
king of 71
lordship of 71
parliament of 72–3
Poynings's law 72–3
statute of 63
Ulster 260
- Isabella (1295–1358), queen of England 225
- Israel (OT) 124–5
- Italy
Amalfi 18, 60, 61
Bologna 18
civil law imported from 19
- Florence 210
- Melfi 169
- Naples 300
- rabble of 266
- reduction of 69
- social war 106
- Venice 101, 119
see also Rome
- James I (1566–1625), king of England and baronets 260
and canons 61
and divine right kingship 154 enfranchisement of Oxford and Cambridge 115
and freedom of speech 154
and isle of Man 74
and law reporters 54
and militia 264
and queen-gold 144
and succession to English crown 69, 127, 135, 140, 141
and Ulster 260
- James II (1633–1701), king of England attempted exclusion of 137 consultation with peers 148
and original contract 137, 151, 159 presumed abdication of 101, 137–8, 159, 219
and quo warranto 315
revenue of 213
standing army of 265
and succession to the crown 139–40
- James IV, king of Scotland (1473–1513) 135
- Jane Seymour (c. 1509–37), queen of England 134
- Jehu (fl. 9th cent. BC), king of Israel 125
- John (1166–1216), king of England
and appointment of bishops 244
and castles 170
and first-fruits and tenths 183
and Ireland 71–2
and isle of Man 74
- and Magna Carta 22, 86, 100, 171, 177–8, 199, 244, 257
and succession to the crown 126, 131
- John of Ga(u)nt (1340–99)
and duchy of Lancaster 81
illegitimate children of 297
and succession to the crown 131–2, 133
unofficial regent 161
- John of Lancaster, duke of Bedford (1389–1435) 132
- John XXII (1249–1334), pope 61
- Judaea 93
- Julianus, Salvius (before 90–c. 169 AD), Roman jurist 55
- Justinian I (483–565), Byzantine emperor on the Emperor's consort 142
Institutes 9 laws of 16, 21, 45, 59–61, 89
on legal education 30
on municipal law 36
pandects 14, 18
on polygamy 280–1
precepts of 34
on slavery 272–3
- Katherine of Valois (1401–37), queen of England 145
- Lambard(e), William (1536–1601), antiquary 82, 226, 227, 228, 229, 255
- Lancaster, see Blanche; Edmund Plantagenet; Henry of Grosmont; John of Ga(u)nt; Swinford, Catherine; Thomas of Lancaster
- Langton, Stephen (c. 1150–1228), archbishop of Canterbury 61
- Lateran councils 77, 243, 283
- Leeuwen, Simon van (1626–82), jurist 16
- Leicester, see Edmund Plantagenet; Thomas of Lancaster
- Lenox, see Stewart, James
- Lewellin ap Jorweth (c. 1172–1240), prince of Gwynedd 136

- Lincoln, see Thomas of Lancaster
 Lionel of Antwerp (1338–68)
     72, 82, 131–2
 Littleton, Sir Thomas (d. 1481),
     judge 54
 Livy (59 BC–17 AD), Roman
     historian 60
 Locke, John (1632–1704), philosopher
     on royal prerogative 163 on free elections 117 on gentry education 11
     on law and liberty 86
     on original contract 38, 41, 138
     on popular sovereignty 108 on sovereign immunity 158
 London aldermen 97, 209
     Charterhouse 310
     City of 22–3, 144, 218, 306, 315
     common council 97, 207
     county corporate 82
     customs of 56, 57, 290, 299 hackney coaches and chairs
     in 209
     hospitals 231
     inns of court and chancery 22–4
     Lord Mayor 23, 97
     MPs for 106
     and petitioning 97
     Russian ambassador in 165
     sheriffs in 23, 166
     trading companies 305
     Westminster 22, 209
 Long(e), Thomas (1539–93),
     MP 118
 Louis VII (c. 1120–80), king of France 98
 Louis XIII (1601–43), king of France 228
 Louise Hollandine of the Palatine (1622–1709) 140
 Macrinus, see Opellius Macrinus Magnus IV (1316–74), king of Norway and Sweden 50
 Malcolm III (c. 1031–93), king of Scotland 130–1, 135
 Malmesbury, William of (c. 1090–c. 1143),
     historian 18
 Man, Isle of 74–5, 103, 77, 346 (9)
 Manchester College 305, 314
 Manley, John (c. 1622–99),
     postmaster 207
 Mansfield, see Murray, William Margaret Tudor (1489–1541), queen of Scots 126, 135, 136
 Margaret, Saint (c. 1046–93),
     queen of Scots 130–1
 Marius, Gaius (c. 157–86 BC)
     Roman general 106, 266
 Marshal, William, earl of Pembroke (c. 1146–1219)
     161
 Mary Stuart (1631–1660), princess royal 139
 Mary I (1516–58) queen of
     England 126, 127, 134,
     134–5, 136, 142
 Mary II (1662–94), queen of
     England 87, 139–40, 142
 Mason, Sir John (c. 1503–66), ambassador 20
 Matilda (or Maud), Empress
     (1102–67) 130, 131, 135
 Minorca 116
 Montagu, George Brudenell, duke of Montagu
     (1712–90) 346 (9)
 Montagu, John, duke of Montagu
     (1690–1749) 346 (9)
 Montesquieu, Charles-Louis
     de Sécondat (1689–1755), French philosopher
     on duties of children 293 on English liberty 97, 107
     on foreign merchants 168
     on marriage 288
     on militia 266
     on slavery 267
 Mortimer, Edmond, earl of March (1352–81) 32
 Moscow (Muscovy) 165
 Murray, James, duke of Atholl (1690–1764) 74–5
 Murray, William, earl of Mansfield (1705–93), chief justice 28
 Nero (37–68 AD), Roman
     emperor 204
 Neville, George, duke of Bedford (1461–83) 259
 Newbury, Newburgh, William of (c. 1136–c. 1198),
     historian 170
 Nicholas III (c. 1225–80), pope 183
 Norway 74
 North Britain, see Scotland
 Numa Pompilius (753–673 BC), king of Rome 304
 Offa (d. 796), king of Mercia 99
 Oléron, island of 187, 188, 268
 Opellius Macrinus, Marcus
     (d. 218), Roman emperor 45
 Otho of Monferrat (d. c. 1251), cardinal and legate 61
 Othobon, see Adrian V
 Oxford, see Harley; Vere Oxford, University of
     All Souls College 28
     Betts, Joseph, University College (c. 1718–66) 25
     Bury, Arthur (1624–1713)
     Exeter College 313
     chancellor of 20, 307
     Christ Church College 28 and civil law 19
     and common law 17, 22
     Exeter College 313
     Good, Dr Richard (d. 1763),
     Magdalen College 25
     lay corporation 305, 313
     MPs for 115
     and popish clergy 20 and Vinerian chair 25–6
     visitorial authority
     in 313
     West, Dr Thomas (d. 1781),
     Magdalen College 25
     Whalley, Dr Robert (d. 1769),
     Oriol College 25
 Palestine 124, 199
 Pandulph (Masca) (d. 1226), papal legate 183
 Papinian (c. 146–212 AD),
     Roman jurist 30
 Papirius Justus (fl. late 2nd cent.
     AD), Roman jurist 60
 Paris, Matthew (c. 1200–59), chronicler 22, 129, 170, 199

- Paulus, Julius (fl. c. 200 AD), Roman jurist 155
- Pembroke, see Marshal
- Percy, Henry, earl of Northumberland (1341–1408) 74, 147
- Persia 144
- Persius Flaccus, Aulus (34–62 AD), Roman satirist 229
- Peter the Great (1672–1725) 96, 165
- Philip II (1527–98) 134
- Philip VI (1293–1350), king of France 235–6
- Philippa of Clarence, countess of Ulster (1355–c. 1378) 132
- Plowden, Edmund (c. 1518–85), law reporter 82, 162
- Plutarch (46–119 AD), biographer 304
- Poland 99, 126, 265
- Pompey (106–48 BC), Roman general 106
- Portugal 50, 179
- Poynings, Sir Edward (1459–1521), lord deputy of Ireland 72, 73
- Preston, Robert, viscount Gormansto(w)n (1435–1503), lord deputy 325 <21>
- Prideaux, Sir Edmond (1601–59), attorney-general and postmaster 207
- Prynne, William (1600–69), antiquary and lawyer 144, 205
- Puf(f)endorf, Samuel von (1632–94), German jurist on foreigners 168
on interpretation of law 46, 47 on parents and children 288, 289, 291
on sovereign immunity 158
- Pym, John (1584–1643), parliamentarian 206
- Quester (l'Equester), Matthew de (c. 1559–after 1633), postmaster 356 <65>
- Ragnald (1187–1229), king of the isles 74
- Richard I (1157–99), king of England 127, 131, 177, 187, 268
- Richard II (1367–1400), king of England and barons 257
deposition of 82, 131–2
and marquesses 256 minority of 161
and subsidies 200
succession to crown 126, 131–2
- Richard III (1452–85), king of England 133, 160, 161
- Richard of Shrewsbury, duke of York (1473–c. 1483) 126
- Robert [Curthose], duke of Normandy (d. 1134) 130
- Rome
and appointment of bishops 243–5
'despotic monarchy' 10
dictators in 92
elective monarchy in 126 and first-fruits 183
'imperial tyranny' in 55
knowledge of law in 10
Lateran council in 77
laws of 16, 29, 230, 278, 308
legions of 266 liberty lost 106, 107 provisions at 46
privileges in 69
rescripts of 46
prohibitions against 140, 148, 171 slavery in 273
tribunes in 103
- Rupert, prince of the Rhine (1619–82) 344 <11>
- Russell, Francis, earl of Bedford (1593–1641) 205
- Russia 96
- Rutland (i.e. Rhuddlan, North Wales) 68, 322 <2>
- Saladin(e) (1137–93), sultan of Egypt and Syria 199
- Sarpi, Fra Paolo (1552–1623), Venetian counsellor 97
- Scaevola, Quintus Mucius (d. 88 BC), Roman lawyer and consul 14–15
- Schard(e)low(e), Sir John (d. 1344), judge 21
- Scotland
age of majority 300
borders 81, 256
and isle of Man 74
MPs from 106
representative peers of 70, 104, 111
sheriffs in 218
union with England 69–71
- Selden, John (1584–1654), jurist and historian 18, 21, 23, 48–9, 78, 104
- Servius Tullius, king of Rome (fl. 578–535 BC), 113
- Seymour, Edward, duke of Somerset (1500–52), lord protector 161
- Shaftesbury, see Cooper
- Skipwith, Sir William (c. 1320–c. 1398), judge 21
- Smith, Sir Thomas (1513–77), scholar and diplomat 261
- Sodor 75
- Solomon (fl. 10th cent. BC), king of Israel and Judah 125
- Solon (c. 630–c. 560 BC), Athenian lawmaker 197, 299
- Somerset, see Beaufort
- Sophia (1630–1714), electress of Hanover 46, 140, 141, 343 <9>
- Spain 50, 190
- Sparta 107
- Spelman, Sir Henry (1564–1641), antiquary 22, 27, 30, 79, 228, 249, 261
- St Edmund's-bury, see Bury St Edmonds
- St Vincent, isle of 346 <9>

- Stafford, Edward, duke of Buckingham (1478–1521)
228
- Stanhope, Charles, baron
Stanhope (1595–1675),
postmaster 356 (65)
- Stanley, Ferdinando, earl of Derby (c. 1559–94) 74, 346 (9)
- Stanley, James, earl of Derby
(1664–1736) 74
- Stanley, Sir John de (c. 1350– 1414), lord of Man 74
- Stanley, William, earl of Derby (1561–1642) 74
- Statham (Stathum), Nicholas
(d. 1472), legal writer
321 (11)
- Sta(u)n(d)ford(e), Sir William (1509–58), judge 321 (11)
- Stephen of Blois (c. 1092–1154), king of England 19, 130, 131, 170
- Stewart, James, duke of Len(n)
ox and Richmond
(1612–55) 344 (11)
- Stiernhöök, Johan (1596–1675),
Swedish jurist 168
- Stuart, James Francis Edward (1688–1766), the Old
Pretender 236
- Suffield (Calthorpe), Walter of (d. 1257), bishop 183
- Sulla, Cornelius (138–78 BC),
Roman dictator 103, 106
- Sulpicius, Servius (106–43 BC),
Roman lawyer 14–15
- Sweden
age of majority in 300
churchwardens in 254 common law in 50 diet of 99, 102, 106, 180
purveyance in 185
Stockholm 106
- Swinford, Catherine, duchess of Lancaster
(c. 1350–1403) 133
- Switzerland 10
- Syria 144
- Tacitus (c. 56–c. 120), Roman historian
on Britain 68
- on customs of Britons and Germans 30, 126
on dukes 262–3
on hundreds 80
on mixed government 40
on slavery 204
- Talbot, Charles, Baron (1685–1737), lord
chancellor 29
- Theobald of Bec (c. 1090–1161), archbishop of Canterbury 19
- Theobald (1090–1152), count of Blois and Chartres 342 (10)
- Theodosius II (401–50),
Byzantine emperor 10,
60, 89
- Thermus, Minucius, Roman
praetor (fl. 65 BC) 230
- Thomas of Lancaster, duke of Clarence (1387–1421) 132
- Thomas, earl of Lancaster
(c. 1278–1322) 374 (13)
- Thorpe, Sir William de (d.
1361), chief justice 351
(32)
- Trelawny, Sir Jonathan
(1650–1721), bishop 313
- Tribonius (c. 470–541),
Byzantine jurist 60
- Tudor, Owen (c. 1400–61), courtier 145
- Turkey 174, 281
- Ulpian (d. c. 228), Roman
jurist 55
- Ulster 260; see also Philippa of Clarence
- United Provinces 106, 270
Holland 10, 16, 188, 282, 300
- Urban II (c. 1042–99),
pope 169
- Vacarius (c. 1120–c. 1200), civil lawyer 19, 30
- Vere, Robert de, earl of Oxford (1362–92) 256
- Villiers, George, duke of Buckingham (1592–1628),
royal favourite 256
- Viner, Charles (1678–1756), legal author and benefactor 9, 25–6, 31
- Wales
annexation of 68–9, 71, 77
borders of 81, 256
sheriffs in 222
statute of 22, 63, 68
- Walker, Sir Edward (1612–77), herald 344 (11)
- Walter, see Suffield
- Warburton, William (1698–1779),
bishop 323 (7)
- Watson, Dr William (fl. 1725), clergyman and author 369 (19)
- Westminster
bishopric dissolved at 79 common pleas in 22
courts at 14, 16, 62, 74, 75, 219
hackney coaches and chairs
in 209
statutes of 63, 182, 187
Westminster hall 69,
71, 219
- Whitworth, Charles, baron
Whitworth (1675–1725)
349 (21)
- Willes, Sir John (1685–1761),
chief justice 28
- William Augustus, duke of Cumberland
(1721–65) 212
- William I, the Conqueror
(c. 1028–87), king of
England 76, 104,
129–30, 263
- William II (c. 1060–1100), king
of England 127, 130, 131, 182
- William III (1650–1702), king
of England
and bill of rights 87 and convention parliament 101
consultation with peers 148 and excise 206
and foreigners in privy council 149
'greatly impoverished the crown' 184
and land tax 201

- |                                |                                 |                                  |
|--------------------------------|---------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| William III ( cont. )   | William, duke of Gloucester     | Witherings, Thomas               |
| and succession to the          | (1689–1700) 140                 | ( d. 1651), postmaster    |
| crown 139–40                   | William Henry, duke of          | 356 <65>                         |
| William of Hatfield (16 Feb.–8 | Gloucester                      |                                  |
| July 1337), prince 131         | (1743–1805) 344 <11>            | York, duke of, see Edward |
| William of Newbury             | Winchester College 305          | Augustus, duke of York           |
| (Newburgh), chronicler         | Winchester, earl of, see | and Albany; James II;            |
| (1136–98) 170                  | Despenser, Hugh, the elder      | Richard of Shrewsbury            |